Thomas Merton says, "Recollection is a change of spiritual focus and an attuning of our whole soul to what is beyond and above ourselves." It is a time of calling our desperate parts together in the presence of God, which allows us to experience a simplification of our state of mind and our human activity. The result of recollection is peace, inner silence and tranquility of heart.

The process of recollection is a choice to make time in our lives where we can sink down beneath the identities related to the various parts of ourselves and into our deeper and more central identity. We should do this as a child of God that is the identity that brings wholeness to all the various dimensions of our lives.

Recollection is almost the same thing as interior solitude. It is in recollection that we discover the finite solitude of our own heart and the infinite solitude of God dwelling in us. Unless these vast horizons have opened out in the center of our lives, we can hardly see things in perspective. It is action that is ungrounded that leaves our perspective feeling scattered.

To cultivate a deep silence that allows us to sink into the very heart of ourselves where God most surely dwells is, in that very action, to seek the will of God which, in turn, brings all our scattered selves into focus and allows appropriate priorities to emerge.

To be recollected is not to deny all the aspects of life in which we are involved. Rather, it is to gain clarity and focus and a sense of what is appropriate and fitting about each task that comes in the moments and hours and days that lie before us. If life sometimes feels like a puzzle that we have dropped and the pieces are scattered everywhere, recollection is the process that allows us to put together the whole puzzle and understand where the different parts fit.

So many of us are so very busy. Effectiveness in our business is rooted in the recollected heart. May you seek peace, know God within and live out of that place in fulfillment.

Dave Barry Don't Talk Any Junk About America!

When I hear some loudmouth saying that the United States is no longer a world technology leader, I look him in the eye and say: "Hey! There's a worm pooping on your shirt!" Then, when he looks down, I spit on the top of his head and sprint away. I'm not about to stand still while somebody knocks my country, not when we're still capable of achievements such as the World's Fastest Lawn Mower.

That's right: The World's Fastest Lawn Mower is produced right here in the U.S.A. by Americans! Just like yourself except that you are probably normal, whereas they put a jet-powered helicopter engine on a riding lawn mower. I know this is true because — call me a courageous journalism pioneer if you must — I drove it on my own personal lawn.

This event was arranged by Ken Thompson, a Miami-based sales representative for the Dixie Chopper brand of lawn mower. He wrote me a letter saying that the Dixie Chopper people had a special customized jet-powered model touring around the country making personal appearances, and it would be in my area, and he thought it would be a good idea if they brought it to my house in a sincere humanitarian effort to get free publicity. As a professional journalist trained to be constantly on the alert for stories that I can cover without leaving home, I said sure.

I've had an interest in lawn mowers since I was 10 years old, and I used to earn money by attempting to mow neighbors' lawns with our lawn mower, which was powered by the first gasoline engine ever built. I believe this was actually a stone engine. The only person who could start it consistently was my father, and he could do this only by wrapping the rope around the starter thing and yanking it for the better part of the weekend, a process that required more time and energy than he would have expended if he'd cut the entire lawn with his teeth.

By about the 1,000th yank, he'd be dripping with sweat, ready to quit, and the lawn mower, sensing this, would go, and I quote: "Putt." Just once. But that was enough to goad my father into a furious yanking frenzy, transforming himself, wolf-man-like, from a mild-mannered, gentle Presbyterian minister into a violent red-faced lunatic, yanking away at this malevolent stone, which continued to go "Putt" at exactly the right tactical moment, until finally it got what it wanted, which was for my father to emit a burst of extremely mild profanity. Then the lawn mower, knowing that it now had a funny story to tell down at the Lawn Mower Bar, would start.

Sometimes, in an effort to earn money, I'd push the stone lawn mower next door and ask Mrs. Reed if she wanted me to mow her lawn. She'd say yes, and I'd yank on the starter thing for a while, then sit down, exhausted and discouraged, and Mrs. Reed, who had been watching from her kitchen, would come out and give me a quarter. It was a living.

Lawn mower technology has come a long way since then, as I discovered when the Dixie Chopper trailer pulled up at my house and the crew wheeled out the World's Fastest Lawn Mower. It's a normal-looking commercial riding lawn mower except that it has what looks like a large industrial coffee-maker mounted horizontally on the back. This is a 150-horsepower turbine engine from a U.S. military Chinook helicopter. According to the crew, Warren Evans and Mark Meagher, it can easily make the lawn mower go more than 60 miles per hour. God alone knows what it could do in a Cuisinart.

After briefing me on the controls, the crew started the engine, which sounded like a giant vacuum cleaner, getting louder and louder. . . . Like this: whoooooommmmm until it was shrieking and shooting flames out the back. Then I put on some ear protectors, climbed into the driver's seat, pushed the controls forward and WHOOOAAAAA . . .

Let me say, in all journalistic objectivity, that I have never before experienced that level of acceleration in a lawn mower, or for that matter a commercial aircraft. Rocketing around my yard, watching concerned Dixie Chopper people leap out of the way, I was thinking: "This is GREAT! I want to take this baby out on the INTERSTATE! I want to (WHUMP!)"

OK, so I hit a tree. But the mower was undamaged, and so was I and the tree is expected to recover. The bottom line is, if you're interested in extremely high-speed lawn care, this is the lawn mower for you. The Dixie Chopper people said they'll make one for you just like it for only $29,000 each, according to my calculations, you could easily earn by simply not mowing Mrs. Reed's lawn 116,000 times.

David Morris House Bank Problem Isn't A Scandal

The House banking brouhaha is a good example of how misinformation can transform a trivial issue into a political earthquake.

To explain the situation, virtually every reporter in both the print and broadcast media interviewed a local bank officer to find out how much his or her institution charged for a bounced check. Multiply that fee times the number of rubber checks written by the local representative and you arrive at the sum by which taxpayers were fleeced.

Private citizens would express their outrage. "Who do they think they are?" was the refrain. Finally, a political analyst would explain how this was the biggest scandal since Watergate and how public outrage could well sweep incumbents from office.

It all made for a simple, easy-to-tell, easy-to-understand and wonderfully juicy story. There was only one problem. The story was false. No checks ever bounced. No public money was involved. There were no taxpayer subsidies. No laws were broken. No unethical conduct has yet been revealed.

The House bank is a 150-year-old co-operative. As a co-op, it exists for the mutual aid of its members. The co-op was not insured and used no federal funds to cover its expenses. Congressional paychecks were automatically deposited in members' accounts. Deposits earned no interest. The income the bank earned from investing its members' deposits covered all co-op expenses.

As for bounced checks, every commercial bank offers accounts with a credit line for qualified customers. These customers never bounce a check, even if they write a check for more than they have in their accounts. The bank covers the difference, converts it into a personal loan and charges about 14 percent annual interest on that loan.

The House bank didn't charge interest. On the other hand, its depositors received no interest on their own accounts. Did members of Congress gain or lose from this arrangement? We don't yet have enough information to know the answer.

To understand why, let's examine one prominent case, that of Rep. Vin Weber, R-Minn. Weber had $47,000 in overdrawn checks over a 39-month period. This apparently is the full amount of the checks he wrote. The overdrawn amount might be considerably less. For example, a check for $1,000 written on an account with $800 in it would be overdrawn $200, not $1,000. A commercial bank would charge interest only on the amount exceeding what a customer had in his or her account, not for the full amount of the check.

Virtually all members of Congress balanced their overdrawn accounts within a matter of days. Let's take an extreme case and assume that the full $47,000 was the amount Weber was overdrawn and that he was overdrawn, on average, for two weeks. At a 14 percent annual interest rate, a commercial bank would have charged him about $250 in interest for the 14 days he made use of the bank's money.

However, a commercial bank would also have paid him interest on his deposits. Assume that he maintained an average balance of $5,000 in his account over a year. At 6 percent interest, he would have earned $300 per year, about $1,000 over the period in question.

So it may well turn out that most members of Congress actually lost money by keeping their money in the House bank when we take into account the interest they lost.

Whether they did or didn't, the important point is that they did so with their own money, with every member of the co-operative bank providing the collateral for every other member. No taxpayer money was involved.

The Democratic leadership is at fault here, but not for having a co-operative bank. It is at fault because, true to form, it allowed itself to be bullied into divulging what should be private information. I cringe when one more member of Congress parades his or her $25 dry cleaning check and begs forgiveness.

More interesting to me than the operations of the House bank is how Rep. Newt Gingrich, the Republican whip, and a handful of colleagues organized a campaign to use the issue to discredit Congress.

A recent front-page New York Times story describes the campaign and its objectives. The Times reports that Gingrich firmly believes that by destroying the institution, he and his right-wing colleagues can pick up the pieces. He may be right. Certainly, the White House, by initiating a criminal investigation of the co-op bank, an investigation that I predict will continue until the day after Election Day, seems eager to play along.

The institution of Congress certainly needs reforming. There's no doubt about it. Congress needs internal reform with respect to how it makes decisions. And it needs external reform to make it more immune from the influence of big money. It would be wonderful if, in the next six months, these issues were given as much media attention as the House bank issue received in the last two weeks.

Gingrich doesn't want to reform Congress. He wants to take it over. By making a non-issue a public scandal, he has gone a long way toward achieving that goal. A well-informed public would have nipped his campaign in the bud. A misinformed public has created the hothouse conditions that allow this destructive campaign to blossom.

Letters To The Editor Women's Abortion Rights In Jeopardy

Dear Editor,

I am a concerned citizen because my rights as a woman are being threatened. We should all be concerned because our rights have been diminishing gradually since the Roe vs. Wade decision to legalize abortion was made in 1973. This is an issue of concern to all people.

It affects every woman: your mother, sister, daughter, wife, friend, classmate, professor, etc. Reproductive rights transcend the legality of abortion; it directly challenges the status of women in our country. Whose right is it to determine what we do with our bodies?

I am pro-choice and I value life. In addition to valuing life, I value the opportunity to determine how I will live my life and what I will do with it. I am fortunate enough to be a white middle class woman going to college, because if I was a poor white woman the government would determine those things for me.

The National Organization for Women (NOW) President, Patricia Ireland, recently wrote that "44 million women, including women in the military, young women and poor women, who are disproportionately women of color, have already had the right to abortion severely restricted."

The right to exercise reproductive rights is the moving force behind the national NOW "We Won't Go Back! We Will Fight Back!" march in Washington, D.C. on April 5, 1992.

Can we tolerate the fact that before abortion was legalized 10,000 women died EVERY YEAR from "botched" abortions in the U.S.? Now that it is a legalized medical procedure only ONE in 200,000 women die.

Can we accept a stratified reproductive health care system? The government denies poor women abortions, but will pay for their pre-natal care and birth if the women choose to carry the pregnancy to full term. Who is supposed to feed the child and care for it? Two point two million children are abused every year. Is every abusive parent consciously choosing to hurt their unwanted child?

You have the opportunity to act! Students are organizing on your campus to participate in the National NOW march and you can be involved too! You can actively advocate the following issues that we will be marching for:

- Passage of the FREEDOM OF CHOICE ACT which will preserve the abortion choice regardless of Supreme Court decision.

- Passage of the REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH EQUITY ACT which allows for poor women to have access to reproductive freedom.

- Overturning the "gag rule."

- Women in the military who are overruled to choose abortion as they would any other medical treatment.

- Free RU 486, especially if it can help treat breast cancer.

No matter whether you are for or against abortion - the important issue at hand is who is going to make that choice for you?

Dear Editor,

Over spring break two members of our student body, Michael Monroe Blanton and Timothy Charles Duncan, died. I was saddened to read the article in the March 12th edition of The Seahawk which informed readers of these tragedies. The article was very matter-of-fact and lacked any relation of sympathy. According to The Seahawk, the topic ranked third to Greek issues and SGA elections.

These students were a part of our student body. They matter just as much as you and they should be remembered. They made a difference in the lives of their friends and families as well as the people at this university.

The apathetic treatment of the memory of two relevant and meaningful people by the university is discouraging. You are a part of the student community at UNCW and I hope you feel empathy for these tragic losses and concern for the priorities of this school.

Two Hours Of Sex Is Not Enough To Hold Audience

D. NEAL LEEPER
Entertainment Writer

The last thing I wanted to see on a Friday night was Michael Douglas having passionate sex for two hours with several women. Actually, I had already seen that a couple of years ago during his award-winning film FATAL ATTRACTION. But now, he's back, and it's more forceful, wild, hard, wet, explicit, boring, repetitive and sad. Douglas is a star of this week's review, BASIC INSTINCT.

The film starts off with a couple engaging in the act with a "looking through the mirror above the bed" shot. After a few minutes of that (most of which was VERY interesting) the female member of the party grabs a very sharp ice pick that is conveniently laying on the bed, and stabs the retired rock star twenty seven times.

As with all tacky movies, the maid discovers the body in the morning and calls the San Francisco Police to investigate. A special member of the mayor's staff comes to assist in the investigation. It seems that the mayor and the deceased have a special link with one another. (A second clue to a tacky movie: the mayor is involved.)

This mysterious murder prompts a quick investigation into the life and relationships of Mr. Boz's (the dead creep) girlfriend, Ms. Tramell. It seems the beautiful Tramell just has sex with Mr. Boz. That is not too surprising, is it? At least she doesn't get paid for her services. It seems during the course of her life, she has lost several wealthy people she was close to which has enabled her to accumulate an amount over one hundred and ten million dollars. (Gee, I wonder if any fowl play exists here? H-m-m-m.)

Anyway, to make a long review short, Detective Nick Curran, played by Douglas, is the key player in the investigation. Curran is considered to be a "damn good cop" by San Francisco standards, so he obviously is the only brain of the outfit. He soon discovers that Tramell writes books under a pen name. Guess what her first novel was about? A murder of a retired rock star with an ice pick after a night of wild sex. Sounds interesting, doesn't it. Trust me, it isn't. It only gets worse.

It's soon discovered that Tramell has a lesbian live-in-lover, a past history of sexual encounters with Curran's best female friend and a degree in Literature and Psychology from University of California—Berkeley.

What else can go wrong? Everything. Curran's partner and best friend gets murdered with an ice pick. People that Curran disagreed with also end up murdered. The major question was this: Who did it? The answer is simple: Who cares?

For my review, it can easily be gathered that it started off with a "big bang" but as it continued, it got worse. Douglas fell in love with the bad guy (girl) and ended up in the sack every fifteen minutes. That got boring after a while ("a while" being a half an hour). People were continuously leaving throughout the showing. The audience sighed and moaned every time the "passionate" scenes came on the screen. People even "boo-ed" during the roll of credits. I should never have let my friends take me out of seeing THE CUTTING EDGE (the film I've been waiting to see).

This film receives a "2"—only because of the beautiful women that were in this movie. Until next time.

Music News: CD's & G N'R

BY GARY GRAFF
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

The music industry's recent announcement that it will eliminate the environmentally unfriendly CD longbox package means that, within the next year, your favorite record store will look considerably different.

The end of the 5-by-12-inch cardboard container is an unqualified victory for consumers. As a package it's wasteful, tossed out after the CD is purchased. And in a rare moment of bowing to consumer wishes, music manufacturers have elected to continue using the sturdy plastic jewel box package.

This move, however, has made life difficult for retailers, who have to reconfigure their stores to fit the smaller package. It's become a heated industry issue, and at the recent National Association of Record Merchandisers convention in New Orleans, retailers spent considerable time grousing about the expense and complaining that they weren't consulted by the manufacturers.

Their hope is that the music companies, using some of the savings from no longer having to produce longboxes, will share the costs of reconfiguring the record stores. "Whatever money is saved there will probably be used to help the retailers with their costs," says Larry Bole, Midwest regional marketing manager for Warner Bros. Records. "I doubt if it will be passed along all the way to the consumer."

Still, most retailers are making plans without counting on help from the manufacturers. The 33-store Harmony House will purchase, at around 60 cents apiece, up to 500,000 Alpha Paks — the white plastic storage trays similar to those used for cassettes.

"They're definitely more labor-intensive, and they're not too attractive, but the truth is that the current packaging is ecologically wasteful and we're happy to see it gone," says Harmony House marketing director Chuck Panke.

Roman Kotsky, owner of the three-store Repeat the Beat chain, notes that the United States is the last country to do away with longboxes. He's planning a trip to Toronto to see how Canadian retailers have designed their stores. "If all the others can get away with it, so can we," says Kotsky. "We're hoping for some kind of label support; if not, we'll do the best we can. You just have to make it work for your store."

Attention Guns N' Roses fans:

Axl W. Rose, the group's outspoken, wild-child lead singer, is warning you not to go see the group if you're going to complain about the performance starting late.

"If you gotta be home at (bleeping) midnight, don't bother," Rose says in the latest issue of Rolling Stone magazine. "I don't think I'd want to. If you've got a problem with me ... doing the show the best I can, then just don't come, man. It's not a problem."

In the interview, Rose explains that the group sometimes goes on late — often after midnight, playing until 3 in the morning — because "I pretty much follow my own internal clock, and I perform better late at night. Nothing seems to work for me until later at night. ... I try to make it up by coming out and doing a good show."

Rick Franks of Cellar Door Productions, which is promoting Guns N' Roses' April 13-14 dates in Detroit, just laughs when asked what time he expects the band to go onstage.

"It's totally up to the band as to when they're ready," Franks says. "The tickets say around 8 o'clock. I've had them go on at 8 and I've had them go on at 12:30 a.m. We put disclaimers in our ads telling people to plan on spending the entire night there."

"We don't know when (their performance) is going to start and we don't know when it's going to end."

The lineup has been set for Lollapalooza II, the alternative pop package tour that was last summer's sensation.

Funk-rockers the Red Hot Chili Peppers and controversial rapper Ice Cube will headline the bill.

Also included: Seattle hard rockers Soundgarden and Pearl Jam and British acts the Jesus & Mary Chain, Ministry and either Teenage Fan Club or Lush.

The tour is slated to run July 18-Aug. 30; specific dates are being worked out.

In the book, Fidel Castro, who drops dead early on, lights up one of Cuba's finest — but, wait, didn't the real-life dictator kick the cigar habit in 1985? "He supposedly stopped," says Quayle. Yo, John Goodman, maybe it's time to, uh, take a meeting? Not the Hollywood kind, but the 12-step variety. The "Roseanne" star does a little two-fisted soul-baring in the April issue of QG magazine.

Of course, I weigh 300 pounds, I eat and drink too much and I smoke cigarettes. ... I'm probably an alcoholic is what the deal is," the actor says. "I should talk to somebody about it. Or I should drink more moderately. I drink way too much when I drink. But I really do enjoy it, and I want to keep doing it because I like doing it in company. I don't want to stop doing it (altogether), so I'm trying to back off. I'll probably wind up in a (bleep) rehab center. So right now I'm trying to do it on my own. Which is what they call denial."

Magic Johnson's wife, Cookie, says standing by her man isn't difficult, even in the grim shadow of AIDS. "We've been together off and on for 14 years and the love that we've built up over that time period is what I hold onto. To stay by him was not a hard thing to do," she tells Ebony magazine. Six months pregnant, she has twice tested negative for the HIV virus that ended Magic's L.A. Lakers career. "I honestly feel that the Lord is going to heal him and that we are going to live together forever and have more children and be happy."

Dwight Yonkam and "Basic Instinct" star Sharon Stone are an item, having first locked eyes several weeks ago. "They have been dating," a spokesman for the country singer confirms. Stone says, "I'm dating, but I don't know what it means at this point." Well, let us know.

Books Cafeteria Eating Made Easy

From College Press Service

NEW HAVEN — "Your relationship with cafeteria sandwiches may be getting stale. Maybe it's time for you to start seeing other recipes. Remember, love means never having to say you're hungry."

So reads Tray Gourmet: Be Your Own Chef in the College Cafeteria, a book that promises to make memorable meals out of cafeteria chow.

The 192-page paperback by former Yale University students Larry Berger and Lynn Harris (Lake Isle Press, $10.95) offers simple solutions to ho-hum institutional cooking by relying on the microwave, salad bar and condiments.

Harris and Berger, who shared Yale cafeteria meals every since their freshman year, started the book years ago. "We had a microwave and a big salad bar ... and we turned it into an advanced art form," Harris said. "We're the ones who realized that the microwave could really go places."

Since publication, the authors have been deluged with similar recipes from throughout the country. "People will call and say, 'Oh, I do that,' and send us their recipes," Harris said.

A chapter, for example, is devoted to "Multi-Cultural Tuna" featuring a recipe for "Dead White Male Tuna" which consists of "3/4 bowl of plain tuna fish and one heaping soup spoon of mayonnaise."

By adding soy sauce and chopped green pepper, the recipe converts to "Asian Tuna," add curry and it becomes "Indian Tuna," and Dijon mustard and onions transform the dish into "Continental Tuna."

In another chapter, "Rebel Without a Sauce: Rehabilitating Plain Pasta," an "Algerian Pasta" features tuna and raw broccoli, and was created by a contributing Yale student who describes it as "a delightful mix of color and textures."

Some of Berger and Harris' tried-and-true recipes are stunningly simple. For example: "Pie Beta Kappa" is "one slice of pie, any kind with two scoops of ice cream, any kind."

Students can now disguise that inevitable portion of mystery meat served in college cafeterias across the United States.

The book suggests a sauce, for example, to dress up institutional roast beef: microwave a combination of peanut butter, Worcestershire sauce, lemon juice, sugar or honey, soy sauce and a dash of ginger.

For bland pork dishes, the book offers a topping of ketchup, lemon juice, cinnamon, red pepper flakes and "as many drops of Tabasco as you dare."

Other recipes in the cleverly illustrated book include Nietzsche's Nachos, Chinese Peanut Pasta, Plato's Pita Pocket, Holy Guacamole, Je Ne Sais Quoi Crepes and Pita Fajitas.

"This thoroughly entertaining book is surprisingly accurate, entirely practical and professionally wrought," says Publisher's Weekly.

The Campus Marketplace says: "This trade paperback would stand on its own as a humor book, but it's far too practical to be dismissed as silly."

Portions of the proceeds of Tray Gourmet will go to the Children's Defense Fund. Berger, a Rhodes scholar at Oxford in England, graduated summa cum laude in 1990 from Yale, where he won the undergraduate fiction writing competition.

Harris is also a summa cum laude graduate from Yale and is now a free-lance writer. Illustrator Chris Kalb, former graphics editor of the Yale Daily News, graduated from Yale in 1990 with a degree in graphic design.

We Will Miss You!

Greetings Fellow Students,

It's the last week of my term and I thought I would volunteer my thoughts on my year as president. First let me say that this has been a superb year. SGA has started on the slow uphill trail to realizing and utilizing its enormous potential. We have grown in many areas, remained steady in some, and backtracked in others. This year has brought forth many new programs and services for the students, Legal Services, SGA Bookstore, Take a Faculty to Lunch and others. Each one designed to meet the needs and desires of the students.

Not only did we establish new services, but we strengthened the internal workings and organization of SGA. This helped clear the confusion usually involved in large organizations and let us focus on 'Serving the Students'. In my four years of SGA experience at UNCW this year has been filled with less internal strife and more on what we can do for the students. While we did not always get along we did always agree on our ultimate purpose and worked toward that goal. We established committees which did not fade out as the year went on, but continued to meet and work toward the goals they set.

Dedication, motivation, and a sense of pride in a job well done have been the keys to such a great year. These keys are part of what I have helped forge and apply. With these keys we have unlocked many doors which were closed in the past. Enthusiasm and refreshing humor are also keys which have been helpful this year. Throw in intelligent people capable of using these keys and that's what you had this year.

To sum it up I am glad that I have had a chance to play a part in one of the best years of UNCW's Student Government Association. I only hope that the traditions we have started will be continued by the next generation. They can build and expand what we have done but the bottom line is the student. You must get active, use your voice, and take a stand.

Otherwise why are you here. . .

Sideline Sensations

It's Mayhem And Madness Come March

It's here. The insanity. The wackiness. The tired bodies and bleary eyes.

The non-stop entertainment from noon to midnight has come to Wilmington.

It always does this time of the year. It can't be helped.

Yes, the Madness invaded UNCW on Thursday. It's still going strong today.

Yes, we have all entered "The Fast Break Zone" (Insert eric music here).

Center Stage was mobbed Thursday morning as throngs of Carolina fans promised their souls to the devil if the Tar Heels beat Miami of Ohio. This explained the long line in front of the parking office after the game. (Come on, we know who writes those tickets.)

Later that night, basketball fanatics couldn't wait to see the marquee mixed-up match-up between the mighty Campbell Camels and the No. 1, final four lock, nearly invincible, and taller Duke Blue Devils.

Unfortunately they had to. The coliseum lights- because of a major storm system (or so believed)- kept going out during play.

You could almost hear Campbell coach Bill Lee saying to his troops, "O-kay we may have a toothpick against their sword but they can't see it. Go for the whites of their eyes, quick!"

Unfortunately for the Camels, their ruse was discovered when a security guard, caught the mascot's hump laughing madly and leaning on a circuit breaker. Lee responded stating, "The hump was acting on its own accord and under no direction from the university. The PLO maybe but not CU."

Speaking of shooting the lights out, that's what happened in Trask during a three-point shooting and slam dunk contest. Yours truly skipped the dunk contest (like at 5-10, I had a chance!) to shoot threes.

And like Campbell I would have done better with the lights off.

However, some contestants, like freshman Patrick Boykin, showed that sight wasn't needed as he dunked the basketball (a la Doc Brown) with his arm over his eyes. It was indeed Fantastic.

Fantastic competition was the norm on Brooks field, this weekend as 32 ultimate teams competed at the Third Annual Easterns Tournament. Some clubs, like Vermont, left home on Thursday or Wednesday to travel the 17 hours to play.

Other teams like ECU sped the two-hour distance on Interstate 40 Friday night. Vans, grandmothers' homes, and tents were stuffed full of players who crammed into tight quarters to save money.

In the end, the hosts weren't gracious to its guests, winning the event in both the men's and women's division. The Seamen defeated Cornell 17-8 and the Seaweed topped Columbia in the title game, 15-9.

Both squads have been ranked nationally for several years. The Seamen currently are the No. 2 ranked college team in the USA while the Seaweed are at the top women's polls.

Another UNC-Wilmington student doing well nationally is former Seahawk reserve basketball guard John Calipari (78-79). Calipari is head coach of the University of Massachusetts Minutemen who hold the NCAA best record this season, a 28-4 mark.

There was some controversy regarding the Minute Men's No. 3 seeding in this year's tournament. The Big East Conference wailed that at least one of their five teams was better than any Atlantic 10 entry. Well, eat your words guys.

The Big East has only one team left, Seton Hall, after the second round of play. Massachusetts personally exist in your journey winner, Syracuse, on their way to the Sweet 16.

Which proves that the size or lack of recognition a conference receives doesn't reflect the caliber of the teams in them. Take heart CAA squads.

And finally, on my honor to Allah, God, Dick Vitale, and the roundball wizard in the sky, I promise never, ever, ever, to pick a final four team from the Southeast conference again.

I admit it. I'm a curse, like the Sports Illustrated cover jinx, to any team I name. Yes, for the third straight year, my final four selection from this region fell in the first round.

In '90 it was Iowa, last year Syracuse went down (thanks Richmond), and in '92 Arizona got the final prediction falling to East Tennessee State. All I can say is sorry guys and promise I will never do it again. Honest. (Yeah...right!).

The Madness continues.

Ultimate Teams Take Easterns

BY PATRICK FOWLER
Sports Editor

On a Sunday afternoon, two UNCW teams did what no other Seahawk athletic organization has done, they dominated a sport.

The men's and women's ultimate frisbee squads, the Seamen and the Seaweed, lived up to their national rankings and captured the Third Annual Ultimate Easterns Tournament titles last weekend on Brooks field.

The men's team, ranked second nationally, defeated Cornell in the final 17-8. The women, ranked No. 1, shut down Columbia 15-9.

Ultimate, a sport that combines the skills of football, soccer, and baseball has gained popularity on college campuses for the last five years.

The game, composed of nine players passing a disc (frisbee) diagonally and vertically down a 70-yard field towards a 15-foot end zone, has grown because of the sport's simplicity. The only equipment required is field markers, a good pair of lungs, and a disc.

"Who doesn't like to play frisbee," said Linda Crowley, a player-coach from Purchase University in New York. "Nobody I know."

Other players listed the non-stop running and catching action as the reason for new teams sprouting up on campuses nationwide.

"Where else do people applaud when you fall down on your face?" Harvard team member Henry Bial said during a break in action. "If you did that on the street, they (people) would laugh..."

Ultimate action is broken down between 18 players, nine attackers, and nine defenders. Attackers move the disc towards an end zone, passing it from player to player, while defenders try to intercept or knock the disc to the ground. If the defender is successful, a turnover results and the defender becomes the attacker.

Players can pass the frisbee to each other in a variety of fashions. There is the overhand toss—a hammer throw—where players turn the disc sideways, a backhanded toss where an individual tosses the disc with his palms pointed up, and the forehead toss where palms face down. A point is scored when an attacking player catches the disc in the end zone.

"Some players spike the disk after a score," Columbia player Kevin Boyers said, "but it is frowned on. It doesn't keep with the 'spirit of the game'."

"The spirit of the game" is an unwritten code that the ultimate players follow. The "spirit" requires good sportsmanship, honesty, and fair play. The sport has no referees. Players are supposed to call their own fouls and penalties. Disagreements do occur, but disputes are settled quickly as play resumes without much delay.

"Sure there are arguments," second-class Navy cadet Jeff Davis said, "but they don't last long. If somebody cheats they usually play in a bad throw. The disc doesn't lie."

This year's tournament featured 32 squads across the Eastern seaboard. Teams began arriving Friday, many on Spring Break, from as far as New Hampshire and as close as Greenville. Many ultimate members left snow and cold weather behind for a chance of warm temperatures and the beach.

"We're staying at a friend's condo at the beach," Georgia Tech player Jeff Kingsley said Saturday. "We got in late Friday so I didn't get a chance to see it and it was kinda cold too, but I plan to attend today's competition."

Although Wilmington temperatures remained cool and windy the whole weekend, the players' enthusiasm didn't dampen as teams began play as early as nine a.m.

"This is the one thing in my college life that is not stressful," Harvard player John Fisk said. "All you have to worry about is catching a plastic disc."

And for 14 overcast, breezy, and physical demanding hours that is all 300 diehard ultimate players cared about.

Graduation Studies In UNCW Earns "A's"

BY PATRICK FOWLER
Sports Editor

The myth that jocks don't study is slowly dissolving.

The theory suffered another blow following a recently completed study commissioned by the UNC Board of Governors on athletics and academics.

The Sixth Annual Intercollegiate Athletic Report, which studied both athletes' and traditional students' graduation rates over a five-year period, concluded in July of 1991 that UNCW was at the top of the 16 UNC-school systems.

Seahawk athletes finished first overall of freshmen entering the school in 1986, posting a graduation rate of 75 percent.

The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill was second with a 71.4 percentage, followed by Appalachian State (55.2%), UNC-Charlotte (52.5%), and UNC-Greensboro (52.6%) who rounded out the top five institutions.

UNCW placed second only behind UNC-Chapel Hill, during the years 1983-1985 in graduating its athletes in the five-year period. Each year UNCW improved its percentage, rising from 62.1 percent to 67.3 percent to 68.7 before hitting the three-quarter mark this past fall.

"I think this report shows what we're doing here at UNCW," athletic director Paul Miller said. "We are here first to perform academically and then in the playing arena."

"We are very proud of the fine student-athletes who have earned this recognition."

The report came after several UNCW athletes were recognized for their academic achievement.

Senior swim-team captain Laura Doepf was awarded a pre-medical scholarship by New Hanover-Pender County Medical Society in February. Basketball player Mark Eaton was named to the All-CAA Academic Team for the second straight year.

Former swimmer Steve Hewias captured the Chancellor's Cup Award for academics in the spring and was awarded a post-graduate scholarship to continue his education this fall.

"The only way to do well in class is to go and focus on your studies," Doepf said.

The senior plans to attend medical school or enroll in a medical semester classroom.

The graduation study also placed all UNCW students seventh and eighth overall in the UNC-system with a 41 percent success rate.

UNCW-Chapel Hill again led all schools in academics with a 79 percent graduation percentage followed by Appalachian State (55.3%), N.C. State (49.2%), UNC-Charlotte (43.3%), and East Carolina (43.0%) to round out the top five.

The figures agree with a similar five-year study released by the Chronicle of Higher Education last year covering the years from 1984 to 1989, that showed nationwide student athletes graduate more frequently (56% to 48%) than the normal student body.

UNCW, during the same time frame, showed a 29 percent gap (67.3 to 38) between student athletes and the regular student body.

"The student comes first in student-athlete," UNCW Chancellor James Leuter said.

Any dumb jock can see that.

Frisbee Fun

UNCW senior Ed Wagenaar, a member of the Seamen Ultimate team, guards a Georgia attacker in the semi-finals of the Easterns Ultimate Tournament Sunday afternoon. The Seamen defeated Georgia in the semi, 17-5, and Cornell University in the final, 17-8. The Seaweed (women's team) also won the tournament, beating both ECU (15-7) and Columbia (15-9).

Coach Mark Scalf's baseball team took over sole possession of first place in the Colonial Athletic Association standings over the weekend. UNCW (5-1, 13-15) took three games from William and Mary in Williamsburg, VA.

The Seahawks won two on Saturday by the scores of 8-2 and 1-0. Sunday, UNCW cruised to a 9-1 victory. UNCW batted out 33 hits over the weekend and raised the team batting average to .253.

Junior 3B Billy Gray leads the team with a .333 average. Two-time All-CAA selection Mark Chamberlain has raised his average to .290, second on the team.

Next up for the Seahawks is conference foe East Carolina in Greenville. The teams will play a double-header Saturday and one on Sunday. Game time both days is 2 p.m.

Trekkers Shine

The men's and women's relay teams sparked in Winston-Salem at the Wake Forest Relays. Five school records in those events were set in the third meet of the outdoor season.

The women set new standards in the 4x1600 Relay (22:04.49), 4x800 Relay (10:30.03), and the Distance Medley Relay (12:49.85).

Two men's records were set in the 4x200 Relay (1:33.72), and 4x1600 Relay (17:51.20). Freshman Steve Benfield also set a new mark for the 100 meters (11.41).

Next up for Coach Bill Cason's team is the Colonial Relays in Williamsburg, VA, April 3-4.

Golfers Prepare

The men's golf team will have their final competition regular season match this weekend in the annual Camp Lejeune Intercollegiate Tournament in Jacksonville, NC. This will be the final match before the Colonial Athletic Association Golf Championships.

The team is coming off impressive finishes in the Greensboro Exchange Golf Tournament (2 out of 20), and the Sheraton-Emerald Intercollegiate Tournament (8-18).

The CAA championships will be held April

10-12 at the Wilson Country Club in Wilson, NC.

Netters Split

Coach Larry Honeycutt's No. 1 player, sophomore German Alvarez, won two matches over the weekend and improved his record to 8-1 in the first weekend of Colonial Athletic Association action for the men's tennis team.

UNCW defeated George Mason 5-4 and lost to Old Dominion by the same score over the weekend. The match scheduled with William and Mary was suspended and will be resumed next weekend.

The men will go on the road to play James Madison University on Friday, the University of Richmond on Saturday, and American University on Sunday.

The UNCW women's tennis team broke even in their first Colonial Athletic Association action. Coach Jeri Whiting's team defeated East Carolina (6-3) and George Mason (5-4), and lost to American (4-1) and Old Dominion (6-3).

Wilson Sworn In Monday

BY CAROLE MEHLE
News Editor

Incumbent Curtis Wilson shocked members of Student Government Association Monday by being inaugurated despite the fact that his election is still subject to appeal.

Members of the executive board said earlier that afternoon that Wilson would not be inaugurated until front runner Joe Mitchell's disqualification was final. Wilson decided to move forward with the inauguration anyway.

"It was my decision," Wilson said. He then declined to comment further.

"I didn't have anything to do with this," Shasta McAllister, chairman of the Election Board Committee, said after the inauguration.

As Wilson was sworn in as president by outgoing Vice President Barry Graham, disqualifying opponent Joe Mitchell—who received 207 votes in the runoff election to Wilson's 197—stormed out of the room.

Other SGA members left as well. Wilson's first duty as president was to swear in executive board members Duane "Ziggy" Nix as vice president, Lisa Royal as attorney general and Rob Oliver as student services coordinator. Nix swore in the members of the legislative board, which included class officers and senators.

Monday night was also a night of awards. Senate awards and scholarships were announced. "All the senate deserves awards," retiring Vice President Barry Graham said during the presentation.

Christy Gunnell, retiring senior class president and chairman of the Consigned Bookstore Committee, won Senator of the Year.

Retiring Senior Senator Ken Lemon won Speaker of the Year.

Lee Person, outgoing sophomore class senator, took "The Horse's Rear End of the Year" for playing as Graham said "the necessary role of devil's advocate."

SGA scholarships were awarded in seven categories.

The Best Attendance scholarship was awarded to Ivy Chalmers, outgoing special senator.

The scholarship for Senator of the Year went to Gunnell.

The scholarship for a service project was awarded to Shanda Williams of Association for Campus Entertainment for Homecoming 1992 activities.

Person also took the Executive Choice Scholarship.

The Best Executive Board member scholarship was awarded to Scott Huffman, executive assistant.

Senators Dallas Romanowski and Vanessa Nye also won scholarships.

Honorable mention went to Roger Hyman, outgoing freshman class president, and Krista Haebecker, outgoing freshman class senator, for their work on the "Little Seahawk" program.

In his inauguration speech, Wilson said he wanted to make sure the work that had been done in his previous term continued.

Nix, in closing remarks, said, "The outgoing senate has been productive. I hope the new one will top them."

Also in attendance at the ceremony was Dr. William Bryan, vice chancellor of Student Affairs. Bryan told the assembly that, "SGA has a powerful role in shaping the community.... I would not want to be on a campus without an active one (student government)."

Election Board Rejects Appeal, Upholds Disqualification

BY CAROLE MEHLE
News Editor

Joe Mitchell had his day in court and lost.

The Election Board, which disqualified Mitchell from a runoff for student body president, rejected Mitchell's appeal Wednesday afternoon.

The six voting members of the board—Arim Williams, Robbie Wise, Chris Bricker, Rodney Warren, Tara Williams, and sophomore Valerie White—voted unanimously to reject Mitchell's appeal.

Mitchell was disqualified after former Senator Ivy Chalmers filed a complaint that Mitchell was campaigning in the Student Government office when the polls were open.

Mitchell's opponent, incumbent President Curtis

"I just want it to be resolved."

Wilson, was sworn in Monday night, while Mitchell's appeal was still pending.

"Typical," Mitchell said. "It's ridiculous. It's unfair while in the process for a person to be inaugurated."

Mitchell said the charges should have been resolved before anyone was inaugurated.

"I just want it to be resolved. I know I'm telling the truth. The accuser [Chalmers] has to prove me guilty. "They [the Election Board] think my credibility is low. My credibility is pretty high," Mitchell said.

"Everything is a lie." During his hearing, Mitchell told the board, "I know I was outside the office.... I know when I talked we were outside."

Mitchell said that the person to whom he was talking "may have stepped in [the office].... [he] was close, but outside."

Mitchell said he'll take his appeal to the Student Government Association Senate. Mitchell said that he has "no idea" how the senate will vote on the matter.

Because some of the terms of the 1991-92 senators expired, Mitchell will be appealing to the 1992-93 senate. Mitchell said that "maybe" he has a chance with the new senate.

Election Board Procedures Questions Remain About Disqualification

BY DAVID PURKE
Editor in Chief

The March 23 election for student body president was thrown into disarray when front runner Joe Mitchell was disqualified hours after the polls closed.

Mitchell was disqualified in a vote by five members of the SGA Election Board Committee. Records of what happened at that meeting are missing.

Mitchell appealed the ruling of the committee Wednesday and was denied. He says he will make his final appeal to the SGA Senate this coming Monday. In the meantime, Curtis Wilson has been inaugurated as president.

In a hastily assembled, late night meeting in the chairperson's apartment, the committee disqualified Mitchell for violating a campaign rule. Chairperson Shasta McAllister said she and committee secretary Tara Williams both took minutes during the meeting. However, Williams said she didn't take any notes during the meeting.

McAllister said that she turned the minutes in to the SGA office to be typed, but couldn't remember to whom she gave the notes, or what day she turned them in. As of Wednesday, neither McAllister nor members of the SGA office staff could find them.

McAllister said that she still had notes of what happened, but refused to reveal their contents.

Little is known of what went on at that meeting, and committee members disagree in their recollections of what happened. At about 6:00 p.m. that day, about 30 minutes before the last election polls closed, McAllister received a complaint from Special Student Senator Ivy Chalmers. Chalmers, who four days before lost in her bid to become SGA student services coordinator, stated in her complaint that Mitchell discussed the election with someone while in the SGA office. Such a discussion is a violation of campaign regulations.

After receiving the complaint, McAllister called members of the Election Board Committee and Mitchell for a meeting in her on-campus apartment that night.

Neither Mitchell nor the committee knew it, but by the time he returned her call at about 10:00 p.m., he had 207 votes to opponent Curtis Wilson's 197.

McAllister read the complaint to Mitchell over the phone, and asked him to come before the committee. When he arrived at her apartment at about 10:45 p.m., the meeting began. Mitchell brought two friends with him to the meeting.

Mitchell said that he told the committee that he had a conversation with Michael McDonald about the election, but that it had occurred outside the SGA office. Because the discussion happened outside the office, Mitchell argued, no campaign rule was broken.

Mitchell said that the members of the committee were skeptical about his testimony. "They said, 'Why should we believe you?'" he said.

After Mitchell testified, the members of the committee went into McAllister's bedroom and closed the door. "They were in her bedroom about ten minutes," Mitchell said. "Then they came out and told me I was disqualified."

"It did all happen very, very quickly," he said.

McAllister said that the committee disqualified Mitchell because of a contradiction between his and McDonald's version of what happened.

However, according to Committee Secretary Williams, McDonald wasn't contacted until after Mitchell was disqualified and had left the apartment.

Williams said the committee tried to call McDonald when they were in the bedroom, but he was not home. She said that Mitchell had already been disqualified by the time McDonald got in touch with them.

McAllister refused to comment on when each person testified.

When McDonald called her back, he spoke with McAllister. She relayed his words to the others in the room.

McDonald said McAllister asked him only two questions: "At the conversation took place, and where it took place. McDonald said he told her that he and Mitchell had a conversation about the election, and that it took place outside the office."

Based on what little testimony he gave, it would have been hard to find a contradiction, McDonald said.

McDonald also said that he had no significant ties that would bias his testimony for Mitchell. In fact, "On a lot of things, we don't see eye to eye," he said.

McAllister said that, even though Mitchell had less than an hour to prepare, the meeting was fair. "I don't see that there was anything that he needed time to prepare."

"The whole complaint was checked out from every angle," she said.

The committee will give its reasons for the disqualifications during Mitchell's appeal to the SGA Senate Monday.

Mitchell said that the Senate hearing will be his last attempt to become president. "I've got one more shot and if it doesn't work out, it just doesn't," he said.

Medical Ethics Questioned

BY STEPHEN SMITH
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — She wore a baby's clothes and had a name of her own. She wriggled her hands and kicked her feet, like most newborns. But was Theresa Ann Pearson — born without a brain, bereft of thought, doomed to a quick death — really a living being?

It was a question raised, but not answered, by a panel of doctors and philosophers Wednesday at the University of Miami School of Medicine.

"Is Theresa a person? Because if Joe's like one from the nose down, is that good enough?" said Kenneth Goodman, a medical ethicist and philosopher. "What is it to be a person?"

The answer to that question likely will be pivotal in determining whether Florida and other states change laws that say a person is not dead unless the whole brain stops working, including the brain stem.

Theresa Ann Pearson had a brain stem and nothing else, not even a skull. The brain stem did not let her think or respond to life, but it did function as a thermostat, regulating her bodily functions for the nine days she lived.

The condition is called anencephaly, and a pediatrician suggested Wednesday that state legislators should consider changing the death law to incorporate that condition — but nothing else. The parents of Theresa wanted to donate her organs immediately after her birth, but a court said they couldn't because of the law.

"I would hope there might be a possibility the statutes could be changed very specifically and very definitively for anencephalic babies," said Dr. Ilene R. Sosenko, who has treated other infants with the condition.

"That would help the parents turn something so terribly tragic into something positive — the very short life of their child could enable other children to live through their child."

But what if the law is changed? Will it so dramatically alter our perception of what a living person is that it will render some lives more valuable than others?

"Today, if we use anencephalic children, tomorrow can we use severely retarded children? And the day after that, less severely retarded children?" said Leslie C. Olson, director of Miami's organ procurement program. "We don't want to get on that slippery slope."

The case of Baby Theresa forced people to ask fundamental questions about life and death and to wonder: What makes a person a person?

"Difficulty in finding an answer doesn't mean there is no answer," said Goodman, the philosopher. "Good heavens, these questions have to be difficult. We're talking about life and death here."

Legal Services

Program Advises Over 100

BY JENNY NEAL
Staff Writer

Have two of your roommates skipped out, leaving you with a $350 a month lease on a touch-infested apartment? Do you wonder what your rights are or if you even have any?

Bruce Mason, one of the attorneys with Student Government's Legal Services, said it is crucial for students to read their lease agreements thoroughly and to fully understand each roommate's responsibility to pay on the lease. "Fifty to sixty percent of the cases we consult are related to landlord-tenant disputes and also traffic violations."

"While we attorneys at Legal Services cannot represent the students in court, we can offer consultation and advise students of their legal rights and obligations and we can also refer them to attorneys who can represent them in court."

The Legal Services program is free. However, attorneys which represent students in court charge regular attorney fees. According to Mason, over a hundred students have used the legal services since January.

"Ellen Kiernan and I have enjoyed providing these services to the students at UNCW. Students should feel free to come by and talk to us about any legal concern they might have, no matter how unimportant they think it is. We are happy to be of help to the students of UNCW and look forward to continuing our services."

commented that the legal services program has gotten an overwhelming response from the student body and that so far it is a very successful program.

Legal services consultation is available in the SGA office on Tuesday and Wednesday 12-4, and on Thursday 1-3 until the beginning of the summer session. During the summer, hours will be different, however, the attorneys will still be on campus for consultation. Summer hours have not yet been determined but the attorneys will be on campus at least six hours a week.

For further information about legal services call the SGA office at 395-3553 or stop by the SGA office in the University Union to schedule an appointment.

Fool Around Naturally Drinking Question Addressed

BY JENNY NEAL
Staff Writer

Based on a survey of a sample of UNCW students conducted in October 1990, 33% of the respondents said they consume three or more drinks a week.

Nationally, the average on other college campuses was 22%, according to Diane Reichard, coordinator of Alternatives! "The definition of drinking to intoxication is five or more drinks at a single sitting," Ms. Reichard noted.

In the survey 51% of UNCW respondents said that in a two week period they consume five or more drinks in a single sitting.

Nationally, 40% of college students said they drink five or more drinks in a single sitting. Furthermore, 25% of the respondents at UNCW said they had driven a car under the influence three or more times in the past year. Nationally, the average was 15%.

"Alternatives! is concerned about the drinking problem on campus and while abstinence is not a realistic expectation we would like to promote moderation, at least," Ms.

Reichard added.

In response to student drinking, Alternatives! held a Carnival yesterday to provide students with alternatives to drinking. "The fair is targeted toward prevention rather than education. It was our goal to show students these are activities which are fun without drugs or alcohol," Sandy Errante, program developer for Alternatives! said.

She added that the peer educators made all the arrangements and that Izza Pizza and Coca-Cola contributed pizza and coke.

Various activities were available at the carnival from face-painting to a tarot card reader. Campus clubs such as the Water Ski Club and the UNCW Sailing Club, as well as the Discover Outdoor Leadership Center had booths set up to give information about their various activities.

"Students drink sometimes to relieve stress. If they can find an activity they enjoy I think they may be less likely to drink," Dennis Smith president of the Water Ski Club commented.

Lee Matthews, secretary of UNCW's Sailing Club explained that the sailing club gives sailing lessons, camping and sailing trips and also has intercollegiate racing.

"Boredom often causes students to drink and while activities may cut down on drinking to an extent I still think that if a student is going to drink they will, regardless of the availability of activities," Matthews said.

Brian Barnold, prevention education specialist with Cape Fear Substance Abuse Center added that the presentation of alternatives to alcohol and drug use gives students other options.

Christy Harrison, program assistant for Discover, an outdoor leadership program on campus, explained that Discover sponsors activities such as canoe trips and backpacking in the N.C. mountains. She noted that Discover tries to develop a students' self-esteem, then they are less likely to drink or become involved in drugs.

Information about campus activities and clubs are available at the Student Activities Office in 202UU.

Writing Place Offers Help

BY LAURA KEETER
Staff Writer

Students who want help with any type of paper can make an appointment at the Writing Place in 202/203 Morton Hall.

The Writing Place encourages appointments for any writing endeavor students need help with, such as graduate school applications, Dr. Tom MacLennan, director of the Writing Place, said.

"It's intended for the entire writing community. One of the myths I'd like to dispel is that it's just for the English majors or students in trouble," he said.

Another "myth" is that the consultant is an intimidating "tutor," when in fact the Writing Place stresses collaboration, MacLennan said. Collaboration means the consultant raises Socratic questions, monitors and guides the developing draft.

Freshman Crystal Frederick said, "I like going to the Writing Place because I think it helps me put my thoughts on paper. The thing I like the most is the encouragement I get from the consultants."

English graduate student Kate Forbis works as a consultants and also makes appointments for help with her own papers. "I trust what people have to tell me here about my paper. It's always good to have someone else's perspective because you can't separate yourself from the paper."

Many professors require students to go to the Writing Place, such as Dr. Gabriel Lugo of Mathematical Sciences. He said that students are helped with how to organize their paper and write difficult mathematical concepts clearly.

"When papers are written clearly it helps me understand how they think about the problem, which is important because sometimes what they're thinking is wrong," he said.

"It's been real effective. By the end of the year, they're writing real good papers."

The Writing Place notifies professors when their students collaborate with a consultant on an assignment, and frequently professors send their assignments to focus the appointments, Office Manager Deborah Gay said.

Because writing is a process and students improve with practice and hard work, MacLennan said that students should come to the Writing Place a couple of weeks before the paper is due and then come back again and again.

"We want a student to have an improved paper, but usually that comes over a period of time and as a number of drafts rather than something that's dashed off at the last minute," he said.

Gay, who has worked at the Writing Place for about seven years, said "It's real satisfying to see that students who came as freshmen are still coming regularly as seniors. That lets me know they like the help they're getting."

Writing Place hours are 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Friday and 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. Sunday. Students can call 395-3549 to make an appointment for a consultation or a reservation for one of the word processors.

President Election Was A Flop

There is a definite similarity between the case of Clarence Thomas and the case of Joe Mitchell. That similarity is simple: we probably won't ever know for sure what really happened.

Mitchell said that he was outside of the SGA office when his conversation with Mike McDonald occurred. The Election Board Committee had reason to believe otherwise.

The thing we can be sure of is that this whole matter could have been handled differently, and better.

When the members of the committee received the complaint, a meeting should have been scheduled for the next day. This would have given everyone involved time to prepare — witnesses could have been notified and scheduled for testimony, and that testimony could be verified. As it was, there was no time for any of that.

Election Board Committee Chairperson Shasta McAllister said that the committee explored every angle of the case before the disqualification was made. How could every angle have been explored when the entire event took place start to finish in a few hours?

The testimony of Mike McDonald should serve as an obvious example that things weren't being handled properly. He said that at the beginning of his questioning over the telephone, he wasn't even made aware that he was testifying in a student government hearing.

But the most glaring misjudgment in this matter was the decision to try Mitchell in a secret meeting, in McAllister's apartment.

What McAllister forgot is that SGA meetings are public. Any student, or any member of the press should be able to attend meetings. These committees run on money from student fees. That means the students have a right to know what SGA does.

When the members of SGA forget who they are responsible to (or that they are responsible to anyone at all), bad things happen. We need only look to this whole mess to find evidence of that.

After this is all over, regardless of who is student body president, SGA had better remember why they are around.

Stillpoint with Bob Haywood We Can't Deny Unpleasant Things

A television news item grabbed my attention recently. It reported that an incumbent senator from New Hampshire had recently decided not to run again. He was frustrated with Congress' unwillingness to deal with the problem of the national debt and the American people's unwillingness to deal with the unpleasant realities and implications of that same national debt. My reaction was that this man was speaking the truth and I wished that there was some way that I could vote for him.

In my cynicism, it seems to me that presidential candidates are trying for media attention to tell the American public what they think we want to hear. I believe little or nothing that I see or hear in this presidential courtship game.

A reality of the human condition appears to be that nobody wants to hear unpleasant truths. I have a vague recollection of being taught that if a soldier of ancient Greece was sent as a messenger to report bad military news to his commander, he was killed for being the bearer of bad news.

The opposite seems true as well. We don't like speaking tough truth either. In dysfunctional families there is always someone playing the role of enabler, which means going along with addictive or dysfunctional behavior out of fear of the emotional cost that goes along with speaking the real truth to someone we love. We talk of "speaking the truth in love," but find that very difficult to do with someone to whom we are attached.

So if hearing tough truth is hard and speaking tough truth is hard; where does that leave us? It leaves us, largely, avoiding these truths altogether and, by our silence, enabling a dysfunctional political or relational system to get worse and worse until it reaches the point of some inevitable breakdown. Even our cultural values support the conspiracy of silence by labeling those who tell the truth as troublemakers, stool pigeons and whistle blowers—all negative connotations.

I don't have a simple solution to this problem. I am convinced that not speaking the truth is self-destructive in the long run. I do believe that more and more of us need to cultivate in ourselves the conviction that speaking the truth in love is a moral necessity. I do realize that in many situations, speaking the truth is painful, both for the speaker and for the hearer. And I do realize that any truth speaking must include an honest acknowledgment that we speak not only out of our own limited perspective, but must speak in the hope that truth shared can become truth enlarged.

It does come down, as in so many cases, to our own personal values. We need to decide, yet again, that we are willing to hear unpleasant truth about ourselves and our society because we believe it can foster positive change. And we are also willing to speak unpleasant truth to people whom we love because we believe that true love is best served through tough truth.

Fun In The Water Sometimes Isn't

There comes a time in a man's life when he hears the call of the sea.

"Hey, YOU!" are the sea's exact words.

If the man has a brain in his head, he will hang up the phone immediately. That's what I should have done recently when I was called to sea by my friends Hannah and Paddy, who had rented a sailboat in the Florida Keys. They love to sail. Their dream is to quit their jobs and sail around the world, living a life of carefree adventure until their boat is sunk by an irate whale and they wind up drifting in a tiny raft and fighting over who gets to eat the sun block. At least that's the way I see it turning out.

The only safe way to venture onto the ocean is aboard a cruise ship the size of a rural school district. Even then you're not safe, because you might become trapped in your cabin due to bodily expansion. Cruise ships carry thousands of tons of high-calorie food, and under maritime law they cannot return to port until all of it has been converted into passenger fat. So there are at least eight feedings a day. Crew members often creep into cabins at night and use high-pressure hoses to shoot seasickness directly down the throats of sleeping passengers.

But on cruise ships you rarely find yourself dangling from poles, which is more than I can say for the sailboat rented by Hannah and Paddy. The captain was a man named Dan, who used to be a race-car driver until he had heart trouble and switched from fast cars to sailboats, which are the slowest form of transportation on Earth with the possible exception of airline flights that go through O'Hare. Sometimes I suspect that sailboats never move at all, and the only reason they appear to go from place to place is continental drift.

Nevertheless we were having a pleasant day on Captain Dan's boat, the Jersey Girl, doing busy nautical things like hoisting the main stizen and muzzing the aft beam, and meanwhile getting passed by other boats, seaweed, lobsters, glaciers, etc. The trouble arose when we attempted to enter a little harbor so we could go to a bar featuring a band headed by a large man named Richard. This band is called — really — "Big Dick and the Extenders." We were close enough to hear them playing when the Jersey Girl plowed into what nautical experts call the "bottom."

The problem was an unusually low tide. Helpful people in smaller boats kept telling us this.

"It's an unusually low tide!" they shout helpfully as we went past. They were lucky the Jersey Girl doesn't have a cannon.

We'd been sitting there for quite a while when Captain Dan suggested, with a straight face, that if some of us held onto a large pole called the "boom" and swung out over the water, our weight might make the boat lean over enough to get free. I now realize that this was a prank. Fun-loving sailboat captains are probably always trying to get people out on the boom, but most people aren't that stupid.

We, however, had been substantially refreshed by beverages under a hot sun, so we actually did it. Four of us climbed up, hung our stomachs over the boom, kicked off from the side of the boat and NOOOOOO...

Picture a giant shish kebab skewer sticking out sideways from a boat 10 feet over the water, except instead of pieces of meat on it, there are four out-of-shape guys, faces pale and sweating, flabby legs flailing, ligaments snapping like rifle shots. We instantly became a tourist attraction. A crowd gathered on shore, laughing and pointing. Some of them were probably sailboat captains.

"Look!" they were probably saying, "Captain Dan got FOUR of them out on the boom! A new record!"

Meanwhile, next to me, Paddy, a middle-aged attorney who is not, let's be honest, built like an Olympic gymnast, who is in fact built a lot like a gym, was saying, in an usually high voice, "We better bring the boom back now. OK? Now? OK?? WE BETTER BRING THE BOOM BACK NOW! BRINGTHEBOOMBACKNOW!! I SAID..."

"HANG ON!" Captain Dan was shouting. "She's about to move!"

People on shore were now taking pictures.

"IT'S AN UNUSUALLY LOW TIDE!" a helpful boater was shouting.

"Please," Paddy was saying, very quietly now.

"I think she's moving!" Captain Dan sang out.

In the case of the Jersey Girl was exhibiting no more flotation than central Nebraska. As I clung to the boom, listening to Paddy whimper, two thoughts penetrated my pain: (1) He was PADDING for this experience; and (2) If you have to die, you want it to be for a noble cause. You don't want it to be for "Big Dick and the Extenders."

It turned out we didn't die. We finally got swung back onto the boat and began thinking about leading our lives without moving any muscles ever again. And eventually Captain Dan got the boat unstuck. He needed the help of a motorboat. I am certain this was also true of Columbus.

Campus Land Is Worth Saving

You know, there is a time to be serious, and although I try at all costs to avoid that period, it always tracks me down. Such is the case now. In the past three years, I have repeatedly attempted to make my case against building campus property for parking lots. My last argument, veiled in what I considered a witty and pointed piece of prose about paving the whole world, must have been a little too subtle for the powers that be to understand. Or else, they were just ignoring me. Imagine that, the business administrators ignoring the pleas of a student.

I went so far as to submit my concerns in a letter to Dr. Leutze via the suggestion box. I also suggested that, since I realized I could hardly speak for a majority of the student body, a student referendum should be held. Several months later, I received a response telling me that the suggestion had been placed before the business affairs division "for consideration." In the March 19 Seahawk, I saw how much consideration my suggestion had received.

It's not that there is not a parking problem on the campus. If a student wants to park right in front of his classroom every day, then odds are he is going to have a problem finding a space. In fact, if that student intends to park within a quarter mile of his classroom, he will likely have trouble... unless he arrives at 7:30 in the morning.

There is one obvious solution to this problem, and the student is too lazy (Of course this excludes the handicapped and elderly students) to walk a half mile to class will go for this, is to build new lots. As is the case with so many other administrative judgements, this obvious option quickly overrides any alternatives that might require a little thought. Let's just call in the bulldozers and the paving trucks and put up another rain-imperious surface at the expense of a few more useless trees and weeds. The students won't mind paying for it.

Why doesn't it seem to occur to anybody that, if they continue to build new lots every time the demand goes up, the whole campus will become asphalt and speed bumps? Has no one noticed that part of the beauty of this campus is the natural setting? Come to UNCW and study amidst the native flora of southeastern NC—pine trees, turkey oaks, sandpurs and all. If you want pavement and clutter, go to State.

The time is going to come when parking on this campus will have to be restrictive. Non-students/staff will have to pay their parking tickets, just like us insignificant, registered peons. Freshmen will be, by necessity, excluded from parking on campus. Lots at WalMart and University Square will be cordoned off, and an annual fee will be charged by private entrepreneurs for parking there. A whole new market in tow-trucks will open up.

I say (and have said, ad nauseum) that the time for restrictive parking is now. Parking stickers should be sold by lots, and inner-campus parking should cost a little more than the fringe areas. They should also be sold with class priority, beginning with seniors and graduate students, then down until all spaces are sold. Freshman parking (sorry guys, but your day will come) should be limited to commuter students only.

Maybe in saying this, I have stepped on some toes. I don't doubt that there are freshmen out there who would really hate me if my suggestions came to fruition. There are probably others of you out there who think I am talking out the wrong Georgian (CHECK column. Of course, I don't know how popular my ideas are. My point is, neither does the administration. They have never bothered to ask us, the students, how we feel about this on a whole. All they are hearing is a bunch of people whining about having to drive around one parking lot for half an hour waiting for a space. And I have a news flash. Those who believe that opening up a few more spaces way over by Wagoner Hall is going to silence those whining voices, you're wrong. These people are not going to walk. They will continue to drive around the same parking lots, waiting for the same nonexistent spaces.

I realize that the school is going to have to grow. I defy the fact however, that progress, in the form of paved sand hills and bulldozed pines, is inevitable. Planning and drastic measures now can circumvent that destruction later. It is time that we, as little more than inhabitants of this planet, begin to put our petty desires and laziness aside. We have a place in the scheme of things here, in that place is not ascribe a built-in error.

Soft Drinks Can Be Harmful To You

There is no doubt in my mind that those of you who are regular, faithful readers missed hearing from me last week. (More than likely, no one noticed and/or cared.) I did actually write a column last week about how Joe Mitchell was being schieved out of his "win" in the Student Government Association Presidential election. (Please see "SGA Disqualifies Mitchell In Runoff" in your March 26 copy of The Seahawk.) What I had to say about the SGA Election Board was in all likelihood too filthy to print, and may in fact have caused some young impressionable freshman to plant a bomb in the SGA office and then I would have felt really bad.

Anyhow, this week's topic was brought to my attention in an intelligent, semi-coherent letter sent in by Lawrence B. Nonad, an intelligent, semi-coherent reader. It reads, "Warning, Warning! Caution, Beware! Don't drink that Sun Drop, don't you dare!" The letter went on to explain, in terms not befitting this column, the new-found hazards associated with drinking beverages with "FD&C Yellow #5" dye in them.

In case you haven't heard about the most devastating event to hit the soft drink industry since Michael Jackson's hair burned up, I'll try to fill you in so you don't end up with the same problem as Mr. Nonad. According to the Major Side Effects Division of the United States Department of Soft Drink Dye Testing, something in the FD&C Yellow #5 dye prevents the human reproductive system from, I believe they said, "achieving its fullest potential."

I understand the issue was brought to light on a recent episode of ABC NEWS 20/20, or Gerardo, or something like that. According to Mr. Nonad, who watched the show because he has been a lifelong Mountain Dew drinker, the study was done at a major Women's University with a long history of doing such studies. The research team concluded, after years of sampling, analyzing, and measuring, that the dye in yellow soft drinks does in fact retard the development of the male reproductive system.

To fellow Mountain Dew, Sun Drop, and Mellow Yellow drinkers this news could be devastating. To the companies that make the drinks, it could be even more devastating in lost sales as well as personal injury lawsuits.

In order to get a better idea about how the public was reacting to this devastating situation, I pulled some strings and got responses from authorities familiar with the subject matter.

The owner of Ruby's Adult

Video and Gifts said, "It's been great for business. I can hardly keep the synthetic hormones and creams on the shelves."

Pee Wee Herman replied, "Well, now you know where the name came from... I have nothing to hide."

W.S. Senator Ted Kennedy called for a Congressional hearing to determine if recent Supreme Court Nominee Clarence Thomas did in fact drink Mellow Yellow to "keep from incriminating himself" just before his testimony in the confirmation hearings last year. Also, former Arkansas Governor and Presidential hopeful Bill Clinton announced that he once experimented with Sun Drop back in the 1960's but that the public shouldn't hold that against him thirty years later. So you understand that this is an issue that's sure to be in the news for awhile.

In a related story, former heavyweight boxing champion Mike Tyson was sentenced to a six year active jail term after being found guilty on rape charges. When asked what he thought about going to prison he replied that he wasn't that worried about it; as long as they have a boxing ring, weights to work out with, and plenty of Mountain Dew to drink.

Master The Art Of Card Giving, Please

Mastering the art of card giving can be a delicate matter. Having spent the last four years (or has it been eternity?) deeply involved (heavy sarcasm) as a card store employee, not to mention having been afflicted with the dreadful card-givingitis, I feel I have adequate experience to counsel you on this matter.

And you should listen to what I have to say. After a few simple steps, you too, could become afflicted with card-givingitis, amazing your loved ones and friends who will be so pleased that you've finally figured out how to use the postal system!

In the past you were probably on the receiving end of most correspondents. The chain of events probably went something like this ... You were surprised, touched that someone remembered you, delighted that you had "real mail" in your box—and then disappointed there wasn't any dinero/cold-hard-cash / check or money order in the puke flower coated card—and you swiftly proceeded to chuck it into the nearest trash can. Yes—even the one from dear old Grandma—who did send you money! Perhaps after becoming the one who laboriously searches for just the right card, you'll think twice of chucking that recycle-able into the garbage.

Here are the few simple steps for maximum effect you must take the time to (a) buy or make a card (b) sign the card (c) buy a stamp, and the most important factor and perhaps the most difficult of this equation is to (d) find a mail box and drop the card into it. I, myself have been recovering from this dreadful post-mail-aphobia, and I sympathize with the inability of others to grasp command of this last crucial step.

If you're thinking of foregoing the cost of the stamp and the postal service, think again. It is simply inefficient to hand the card to the person. There's no mystery—the recipient knows who it's from. Further, the person has to keep a "ecstatically happy" look frozen on their face while they open that puke flower coated card right there front of you. There's something about being surprised, about finding it in your lonely mailbox, about ripping open the envelope to discover someone has just sent you a puke flower coated card with no money in it.

It seems a card just isn't appreciated as much unless it has spent two days or more in the inner depths of postal sanctimony, and has taken a mysterious journey to far away exotic places—like Fayetteville—in order to receive a postmark. So, put aside your fears of mailophobia and find a drop box today. Just think how thankful your friends and creditors will be!

And if you're feeling a little neglected—like you haven't received enough puke flower coated cards in your P.O. Box lately—just submit a resume and sizable contribution to P.O. Box 24386 and I'll be sending you a puke flower coated card by the next holiday. Yeah...right.

If You Feel Burnt-out Come Meltdown Saturday

BY HOLLY PRICE

Contributing Writer

There must have been some magic in that Pi Kappa hat they found.

For when they placed it on his head he headed for Meltdown.

This is the message written on the T-shirts for the first annual Pi Kappa Phi Meltdown being held this Saturday in Hugh MacCrae Park.

The all-day party starts at 11 a.m. and ends at 6 p.m. Two bands will perform throughout the day, Captain Cook and the Coconutz and Rude Dogs. Captain Cook starts playing at 12:30 p.m. and Rude Dogs at 3:15 p.m.

Several local restaurants will be there selling food; P.T.'s Grille, Hooters, and Dominos.

"For the money you can't beat it," said Will Mitchell chairman of the 1992 Meltdown celebration. "Where else can you see both of these bands for five bucks?"

Admission is five dollars if you buy your tickets before Saturday. Tickets are available at Hooters and

P.T.'s Grille. Tickets are also available at the gate for seven dollars.

The purpose of the event is to raise money for Pi Kappa Phi's national philanthropy, PUSH (People understanding the severely handicapped.) "We hope to take the money we raise and build a play ground at Snipes School here in Wilmington," Mitchell said.

Meltdown '92 has been in the making for over a year. "You've heard of Lawn Party...You've heard of Burnout...Now experience Pi Kappa Phi's Meltdown," states the posters covering The University of North Carolina's campus. Mitchell explained that they wanted to put something together every year that would draw people to Wilmington.

"We've got the backing from the community; now all we need is the students to come out."

When asked about a rain date Mitchell smiled slyly and said, "I called the National Weather Service, it isn't raining anywhere in the United States this Saturday."

Def Leppard Releases New Album

BY GARY GRAFF
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

ADRENALIZE—Def Leppard (Mercury): Def Leppard has become a real-life Spinal Tap. The British group's members don't spontaneously combust, but between-album tragedies have become regular occurrences: Drummer Rick Allen lost his left arm in a 1984 auto accident, and guitarist Steve Clark died last year after a long history of substance abuse.

This is heavy-duty stuff, and Def Leppard deserves respect for soldiering on and for making records that are consistently crafted and hitworthy, if not cerebrally challenging.

"Adrenalize," the band's fifth album, glides in that polished and heavily produced mode, consistent with Def Leppard's two previous megasellers, "Pyromania" and "Hysteria." The new record leans more toward the former, eschewing the latter's arty indulgences for more consistency.

Any pretense of head-banging is gone: Def Leppard mines gold in an area between Sweet and Guns N' Roses, dressing up basic pop tunes in hard rock regalia—power chords, thundering beats and layered vocal harmonies. Except for "White Lightning," a seven minute-plus opus to fallen comrade Clark, the tracks are aimed at and about women, ranging from sexist come-ons to moon-eyed love songs.

Def Leppard falters only when it slows down, particularly on the link-linked "Have You Ever Needed Someone So Bad." When it rocks out on "Heaven Is" ("Adrenalize's" best song), "Tear It Down," "Let's Get Rocked" and "Make Love Like a Man," the quartet delivers the kind of useful and catchy material that makes for relatively remorseless guilty pleasures.

KING'S X (Atlantic): This trio's fourth album is a harder hitter than its hot-selling predecessor ("Faith Healer"), though it stays true to its milieu of blending metal conventions with polished harmonies and Beatles-style production techniques.

VULGAR DISPLAY OF POWER—Pantera (Atco): A title that says it all. If you crave Metallica-style power pummel with political overtones, stick to the real thing.

BREAK LIKE THE WIND—Spinal Tap (MCA): Most jokes—like this heavy-metal parody—are seldom funny on the second telling.

The Arts NEA Poll Clashes With Buchanan

BY BLAIR KAMIN
Chicago Tribune

A new Harris poll paints a strikingly different portrait of American attitudes toward the arts than the picture being conveyed through the looking glass of presidential politics.

Among the poll's conclusions: A majority of people in every region of the country support federal financing of arts organizations. Majorities in every income group and in nearly every age group also back government grants to the arts.

The findings contrast sharply with the rhetoric of Patrick Buchanan, who has charged the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) with supporting "pornographic and blasphemous art."

Which view more accurately reflects the sentiments of the American people is likely to be the subject of heated debate as members of Congress — and perhaps the presidential nominees — clash on the issue of funding for the endowment and whether the 27-year-old federal agency should continue to exist.

At stake is an organization that has made nearly 100,000 grants, the vast majority of which have supported mainstream cultural institutions like the Art Institute of Chicago. NEA grants also have backed such popular television programs as "Live From Lincoln Center."

Yet more than 20 grants to controversial artists, including Robert Mapplethorpe and Andres Serrano, have made the agency a prime target for Buchanan, whose attacks in February led to President Bush sacking endowment chairman John Frohnmayer.

Some may find it surprising that a small arts agency has become the subject of intense political controversy, especially in a time of recession. The NEA's annual budget is about $175 million, minuscule in comparison to the $278 billion the United States will spend this year on the military.

"The arts are making a major contribution to our culture in myriad ways..."

But in his campaign for the Republican presidential nomination, Buchanan has given the agency a public profile far greater than its actual size.

He has run television ads attacking the agency's support for a program about black homosexuals that appeared last year on some PBS stations. The candidate also has promised that, if elected, he will have the endowment "padlocked and fumigated."

"We have a (huge) deficit," said Buchanan spokesman Greg Mueller. "We've got to prioritize where things are needed. The arts are a very rich industry. There's no reason why they can't find money to fund themselves."

But the recession has had a devastating effect on the arts, creating funding gaps the private sector has been unable to plug. For example, the Detroit Institute of Arts can open only half its galleries at a time.

And despite the recession, public support for federal financing of the arts is strong, according to the Harris poll.

The nationwide telephone survey of 1,500 adults was conducted from Feb. 7 to Feb. 26, a period that coincided with the Feb. 21 announcement of Frohnmayer's resignation.

The poll, which has a margin of error of plus or minus 3 percentage points, showed that:

—Americans support federal assistance to arts organizations by 60 percent to 37 percent, with 3 percent undecided. Those percentages were virtually identical to a 1987 Harris poll, in which 59 percent backed federal support for the arts.

—Easterners back federal funding for arts organizations by 64 percent to 34 percent. So did Southerners (61 percent to 36 percent), Midwesterners and Westerners (both 57 to 40 percent), negating Buchanan's contention that support for the arts exists only among Eastern liberals.

—Sixty-three percent of people with incomes of $15,000 to $25,000 back federal funding. Comparable majorities were recorded in the brackets between $25,000 and $35,000 (57 percent), $35,000 and $50,000 (64 percent) and $50,000 and $75,000 (61 percent).

—Eighteen- to 29-year-olds favor federal funding (78 percent to 21 percent), as do 30- to 49-year-olds (64 percent to 34 percent). But a majority of those over age 50 opposed federal funding, a trend pollster Louis Harris attributed to the traditional view that arts organizations should support themselves.

—A majority of Americans — 52 percent to 45 percent — favor federal grants to individual artists. That represented a turnaround from 1987, when 51 percent opposed such grants.

But it is one thing to ask, as the poll did, whether people support federal assistance for arts organizations, such as symphony orchestras. It is quite another to determine whether taxpayers want their hard-earned money going to, say, an artist who immerses a crucifix in urine.

"Did they ask about blasphemous art?" Buchanan spokesman Mueller said. "When you cross the line, people not only get offended, they get unwilling to fund what isn't supported by the majority."

Arts advocates have responded to Buchanan's attacks by comparing him to Joseph McCarthy, the late Wisconsin senator who claimed — on scant evidence — that government officials and people in the entertainment industry were Communist subversives.

Some think they are overreacting.

"We are entitled to object when tax monies are being used to fund what we object to. It's standard fare for American politics, and the arts are no exception," said Michael McConnell, a professor of law at the University of Chicago.

Yet arts advocates argue that plans to prevent the NEA from supporting controversial art would limit the agency's ability to reflect the increasing diversity of American culture.

Such proposals would restrict the endowment to supporting art fashioned by "dead, white European males," Frohnmayer said last week in a speech to the National Press Club.

A 1988 study of nonprofit arts groups, commissioned by the Illinois Arts Alliance Foundation, suggests another reason for maintaining government support for the arts: They spur economic growth.

According to the study, an estimated 220,000 people visit Illinois each year solely because of the arts, creating about $88.5 million in economic activity.

When other factors were taken into account, including goods and services purchased by non-profit arts groups, statewide arts-related business generates more than $650 million annually, the report concluded.

"The arts are making a major contribution to our culture in myriad ways, from schools to theaters to senior citizens homes to playgrounds," said Alene Valkanas, executive director of the Illinois Arts Alliance Foundation. To single out a tiny percentage of controversial grants to portray the entire record of the NEA, she said, "is not only not fair, it's not accurate."

People In The News...

BY CHERYL
LEVENBROWN
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

Mike Tyson's having a bumpy adjustment to prison life. The heavyweight champ, sentenced last week to six years for raping a Miss Black America contestant last year, has turned up his nose at prison chow and is already in lukewarm water with the warden for signing autographs for his fellow inmates, a behind-bars no-no.

Tyson, 25, has only taken fluids during his five days at the Reception and Diagnostic Center outside Indianapolis, an Indiana Department of Correction spokesman said Monday. "He's told the staff he wants to lose weight," spokesman Kevin Moore said. "He goes to the dining room with the other people assigned to his group and he interacts with people very well. He just doesn't want to eat."

Tyson faces a disciplinary hearing Tuesday on giving out his autograph, which violates a prison rule against giving anything of value to another inmate. "We found a couple of offenders who had autographs," Moore said. "He said, 'Yeah, I gave them. That's what I always do.'" Refusing to eat is common among new prisoners, Moore said, but the autographs could bring Tyson sanctions ranging from a reprimand to the loss of his good-time credit.

Metal maniac Ozzy Osbourne bit off more than he could chew Saturday when he invited the front row at the Irvine (Calif.) Meadows Amphitheater to join him onstage for the finale. About 600 fans rushed past security and swarmed the stage, giving the band's rendition of "Paranoid" an all-too-real feeling.

"They were stoned," said Osbourne, who crawled backstage to safety. "It was like 'Village of the Damned' coming at me. It was out-of-control rock 'n' roll."

Damage estimates topped $100,000, coincidentally the amount Ozzy hoped the benefit concert would raise to build a tomb for his former guitarist Randy Rhoads, who died in 1982.

Sylvester Stallone, Arnold Schwarzenegger and Bruce Willis are going west with their New York restaurant, Planet Hollywood. Sly says the Santa Ana, Calif., version of the movie memorabilia-themed eatery will include, among other cinematic collectibles, the original Darth Vader costume from "Star Wars." The $5 million project is set to open this summer, despite a lawsuit filed by Hard Rock Cafe co-founder Peter Morton, who contends Planet Hollywood is a pale rip-off. "Cinderella had a lot of ugly sisters," Sly says. "But that didn't stop her from going to the ball."

Stalking Becomes A Haunting Part Of Society

BY CHRISTINE EVANS
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

MIAMI — Laurisa Anello's admirer was a generous fellow. He sent gifts. Yellow roses. Pepperoni pizzas. Family Circle magazine. Then things got weird. He drove by her house at all hours. He tucked disturbing notes into her morning paper. He bought her dolls and tea sets, then mailed her the bills. Worst of all, whenever Laurisa's mother glanced in her rearview mirror, there it would be — his gray Hyundai.

"Like a Hitchcock movie," Linda Anello said. "He was always following."

Nothing, it seemed, could stop him. It is not a crime to send someone gifts, or to watch their house, or to follow them to the mall or a ball game.

And that is why Linda Anello felt compelled to drive five hours from her St. Petersburg home to the state capitol in Tallahassee, where, on behalf of her 17-year-old daughter, she helped persuade legislators to do something drastic.

Outlaw Stalking

The bill, passed overwhelmingly in the House and Senate, is awaiting Gov. Lawton Chiles' blessing. If he signs, as he is expected to, Florida on July 1 will become one of the first states to make stalking a criminal offense, punishable by up to five years in prison. For Anello and scores of others like her, it is not just a victory. It is peace of mind.

"For the very first time, this kind of behavior can be dealt with by criminal law," said Tallahassee prosecutor Ray Marky, who helped write the bill and whose own young daughter was stalked. "It's not going to be the salvation of all men's problems, but it is a tool that I'm convinced is going to save a few lives."

In the old days, stalkers were dealt with simply: The victim's big brother or father punched the guy out. But these days, stalkers, like society, are more sophisticated, and so are the methods employed to stop them. The Los Angeles Police Department, for example, recently formed a Threat Management Unit to track and arrest stalkers. In Washington, D.C., Capitol Police keep voluminous files on threats to members of Congress. And the U.S. Justice Department commissioned the nation's top experts to study the delusions that drive stalkers to seek out prominent people.

Celebrity stalkers grab the most headlines. Jodie Foster, Michael J. Fox, Rebecca Schaeffer — all were relentlessly pursued by obsessed strangers, dangerously smitten. The "fans" penned love notes, staked out driveways, peered through windows, showed up on doorsteps and, in one case, fired a single shot that eliminated the object of his affections. Rebecca Schaeffer, star of the sitcom "My Sister Sam," died on July 18, 1989, focusing national attention on the problem.

Star stalkers often go to great lengths to attach themselves to the one they think they love. Margaret Ray told the world she was really Mrs. David Letterman — and then moved into his home. Arthur Jackson, who stabbed actress Theresa Saldana, hired a private eye to dig up Saldana's mother's unlisted phone number and then posed as director Martin Scorsese to obtain the actress' address. And just last week, Harry Velman III was convicted of besieging gold-medal skater Katarina Witt with 20-page letters and 3 a.m. visits.

But the majority of stalking victims aren't stars. They are everyday folks.

Maria Pinkston of Plantation, Fla., recently settled out of court with her alleged stalker, whom she blames for frightening phone calls, threatening notes and slashed tires. Kathleen Baty, wife of Miami Dolphins' tight end Greg Baty, was stalked for eight years by a former high school classmate before he ambushed her in her California home. (Police caught him.) And Gail Manning of Holiday, Fla., has endured her neighbor's perverted advances for six years.

A 39-year-old medical transcriptionist, Manning testified in January before the state House Criminal Justice Committee. She says her stalker is so eager to learn details of her personal life that he occasionally steals her garbage, then carries it home to examine.

"What he's looking for, who knows. It's like I can't have a life as long as he's around. He stands outside and listens to my conversations. He trails my dates. I tried to get a restraining order, but I was told that first he had to hurt me twice."

Indeed, the law is a fickle thing. There are state statutes that protect against harassing phone calls and federal laws that cover threats made through the U.S. mail. But there is nothing that prohibits a love-struck individual from relentlessly pursuing the unfortunate object of desire, unless there are repeated assaults.

Domestic violence laws, recently strengthened, make some provisions against stalking, but they don't cover many cases of stranger or acquaintance obsession. Besides, stalkers often outsmart the law. They behave properly as long as a court restraining order is in effect, then, often on the day it expires, harass their victims anew.

"The frustration these victims had with the system was really upsetting," said Lisa Yurkin, legislative assistant to state Rep. Carol Hanson, R-Boca Raton, who sponsored the bill. "They come into your office crying or hysterical, saying their son or daughter or mother is going to be hurt and the law can't do a thing about it."

The bill would change that. Under the new law, police may make an arrest without obtaining a warrant or catching the supposed culprit in the act, a prospect that has raised some objections. Defense lawyers question the constitutionality of arresting someone solely on the word of the alleged victim; a judge, they argue, should review the matter first.

"The potential for abuse is there," said Jeffrey Weiner, a Miami lawyer and president of the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers. Still, "the bill itself is absolutely legitimate. There have been a lot of tragedies that could have been avoided."

For evidence, one only has to look to California, where the nation's first stalking bill was passed two years ago after five Orange County women were murdered in succession by ex-husbands or boyfriends.

"It's a growing phenomenon here," said Philip Little, president of West Coast Detectives in North Hollywood, Calif., where clients range from corporate honchos and politicians to regular working folks.

At West Coast, if a client receives a strange letter, he turns it over to the detectives, who forward it to a psychiatrist for evaluation. Sometimes, the envelope contains more than a note.

"One time, we had a finger that was sent in," Little said. "We've had locks of hair, toe nails, finger nails. There's no accounting."

The typical stalker, Little believes, "has to be a little mentally disturbed. They're not totally right with life. They get a fixation with a person — their voice or mannerisms or physical looks or status in life — and they convince themselves that he or she likes them, too."

"My face was numb. It was maybe 25 degrees out, there was snow on the ground, and right in front of my apartment door was a bum wearing a Mets T-shirt freezing to death. I stepped around him and went in. I thought, 'great, just the ending I needed to an already lousy day.' Just then, this sick feeling came over me. Forget me, what about that guy? I went to my closet and pulled out a coat I haven't worn since college. I stood there, feeling dumb. Was he going to be mad if I give him a hand-out? He's freezing to death. I opened my door and handed him the clothes. He put them on and stared at me. Then he walked away. It was weird but it was good. I'm not the Salvation Army, but giving out a coat isn't all that hard."

This is Bart Darness's real-life story. He is one of the little crawlers to the big problems facing every community in America. And because there are more people than problems, things will get done. All you have to do is something. Do anything. To find out how, call 1 (800) 677-5515.

Sideline Sensations

Good "Knight" What A Fuss!

Allow me to say from the start, that I'm not a big fan of Bobby Knight.

To disapprove of his frequent temper tantrums on the court, I disagree with his use of fear to motivate his players. I also dislike his antagonistic attitude he shows toward the media and his overall poor sportsmanship.

He's thrown chairs, beat up phones, and shaken players who weren't responding to his directions. His skills as an international sportsman are also lacking.

This was evident at the '79 Pan Am games in Puerto Rico where Knight was arrested for assaulting a local police officer.

More than once Knight has proven he is a first rate jerk. That said, the charge that the Hoosier coach is prejudice toward the black race is bunch of bull droppings.

Yet, since the day after a picture of him appeared in last Thursday's Albuquerque Journal, the coach has been in hot water with the NAACP.

The picture shows him brandishing a whip and playfully taking a swipe at Indiana forward Calbert Cheaney, who had his shorts pulled down.

The local National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) who labeled the picture racially offensive—demanded an apology from the outspoken coach accusing him of being "insensitive" and unable to "understand what that message sends" to Afro-Americans.

"We've got to learn from the past," Alice Hoppes, president of the local NAACP chapter said in USA Today. "People need to realize that a whip to an Afro-American is like a swastika to the Jews."

Can we say someone here needs a reality check?

Yes, I agree that racism is still an ugly flaw that needs to be addressed in our society. And no, as a white man, I can't possibly begin to fathom the suffering and brutal treatment that Afro-Americans withstood at the hands of white masters.

Neither can I dream to appreciate, the harsh struggles blacks endured as they fought for freedom and equality in this country. Yet, despite those shortcomings it is beyond me why the NAACP has such a beef in a such trivial prank like this.

To suggest Knight is anything less than fair when it comes to recruiting and fair treatment to his players, is wrong. Throughout the years he has shown he is equally hard on all of his players. He yells at seniors, juniors, sophomores, and freshman alike. All must execute the game the way he draws it up.

Was it not Bobby Knight who recruited the first black player for Army at West Point? Who was it that graduated 15 of 18 black players who played for him all four years? I believe his initials was B.K.

True, some coaches and institutions may have higher success rates, but there is no evidence that Knight discriminated against or humiliated his Afro-American—for that matter any other minority—players.

Another point to consider is that his players gave him the whip because of his fierce general-like approach to the game. It was also Cheaney's idea to bend over and take a pretend slap.

In addition, during the time the so-called racial photo was taken, Knight was also playfully hitting a white player, but there has been no cries of foul play from the Ku Klux Klan to date.

Finally the assertion by Ms. Hoppes that a whip and a swastika are alike is outrageous. I have yet seen any of my black associates wince during an Indiana Jones (obvious an equal Hoosier racist) film.

The notion that the site of a whip is such a detrimental message to young Afro-Americans is equally idiotic. If one followed that logic, we should eliminate all association with the controversial object.

That means, carrying all the lion and tiger tamer acts (Sorry, Sigfried and Roy), eliminating all the horse jockey jobs, and of course, burning all six video volumes of Alex Haley's book "Root's", which we all know shows graphic scenes of whipping violence.

The point is, there are no real racial wrongdoings on the part of Bobby Knight. If the NAACP wants to yell at someone, they should address the editors of the Albuquerque Journal who chose to run the picture in the first place.

I myself have a problem with my fellow media colleagues for even giving this kind of unfounded charge space on their sports pages.

Either way, there are far greater racial injustices the NAACP should be addressing.

I agree with Knight's reply to a reporter's question about the so-called racist picture, "Don't bother me with that...next question."

Yes, let's move on.

Softball Team On Roll, Take 4-5

BY PATRICK FOWLER
Sports Editor

UNCW softball center fielder Sheri Jernigan lived up to her bulging .481 batting average this weekend. The Lady Seahawks went 8-17 (.470) in a five-game home stand finishing with four RBIs and five runs as UNCW won four of their five contests at Brooks Field.

"Sheri is picking up where she left off last season," UNCW head coach Maggie St. Ledger said. "She is trouble at the plate for opponents. She has such a great balance between speed and power. She may take a hellacious swing and drive a ball foul down the third base line and when that fielder backs up on the next pitch she'll lay down a bunt in front of her."

Jernigan, who boasts a team-high .514 on base percentage, is equally troublesome on the base paths. Going into the weekend games, the senior had been caught stealing just once in 27 attempts.

The speedy Seahawk collected six more thefts over the weekend and now posts a 97 percent success rate.

"Coach gives me the green light to steal and I always check who is taking the throw (second base) before I go," Jernigan said. "If the shortstop moves to take it I slide more to the outside of the bag, if it's the second baseman I angle more toward the inside."

The Seahawks, who improved their season record to 14-17, might have swept all five home contests if it weren't for a disastrous first inning against Coastal Carolina.

"We stunk it up against Coastal," Jenkins said. "The game might have been closer if it wasn't for that first inning. We gave them six extra outs."

UNCW committed three errors in the inning, which allowed three of the nine runs in the first to score unearned. The Lady Seahawks battled back with three runs in the third and two more in the fifth on singles by Cornia Reece, Marti Anderson, Christa Long and a double by Kim Niedzwiecki.

The Chanticleers however, continued their hitting spree. Coastal tagged starting pitcher, Joelle Kibler for eight hits and reliever Heather Petroff for three as Chanticleers scored two runs in both the second and fourth-inning and five in the bottom of the sixth.

"[Sheri Jernigan] has such a great balance between speed and power. She may take a hellacious swing and drive a ball down the third base line and when that fielder backs up on the next pitch she'll lay down a bunt right in front of her."

"Coastal is a solid team and was really on today," junior Polly Granack said. "However, if it wasn't for those first two innings we had a shot of beating them."

UNCW sophomore pitcher Joelle Kibler (0-6) took the loss.

The Seahawks won earlier in the day against Bucknell in a five-run fourth that erased an early 2-0 deficit. Doubles by Jernigan and Krista Engels and a single by Granack brought in two walked runners.

UNCW added two insurance runs in the sixth on a Missy Whaley's walk and sacrifices by Granack and Jernigan.

Sunday, the Lady Seahawks' main problem was staying focused as UNCW punned their NAIA opponent, St. Andrews, by a combined run count of 36-4.

"We talk to each other and stay behind the batters," Jernigan said, "but it is hard to stay focus when you are ahead a lot."

Jernigan went six for ten in the three contests with four RBIs and four stolen bases.

UNCW started the day finishing a rain suspended match from earlier in the year. The Lady Seahawks broke a 2-2 tie in the bottom of the sixth, scoring four runs on three walks and singles by Wendy Maultsby and Heather Petroff.

UNCW added three more runs in the top of the seventh on two wild pitches and a fielder's choice. Sophomore pitcher Krista Engels improve her record to 9-4 on the year and Kibler picked up her first save of the season.

The other two games were stopped early because of a 10-run lead rule. UNCW broke open a close 3-2 game in the second inning, with an eight-run explosion over the next four times at bat. UNCW scored two runs in the third, one in the fourth, four in the fifth, and two in the sixth. Freshman catcher Kim Niedzwiecki had a solo home run in the contest.

In game two UNCW scored 12 of their 13 runs by the third inning batting around three times. Sophomore Luellyn Piver had a big day, going 2-3 on the day with four RBIs.

UNCW goes on the road this weekend to compete in the Greensboro Invitational. The team returns home Monday for a contest against Mount Olive.

Tennis Teams Sweep Francis Marion Gentlemen Coast, 7-2 Ladies Escape, 5-4

BY JIM CLARK
Assistant Sports Editor

The men's tennis team dominated Francis Marion College Tuesday for their second victory in a row. Coach Larry Honeycutt's top three players—German Alvarez, Chris Cagle, and Mike Rayos—led the way to the 7-2 non-conference win.

Alvarez ran his record to 11-3 as the No. 1 player with a 6-4, 7-6 victory in a match of top team players. Cagle followed that up with a comfortable 6-3, 6-1 win in the No. 2 pairings. Rayos battled inconsistency through the first two sets before settling down and winning the third set handily, 6-4, 3-6, 6-2.

Other winners in men's singles were the No. 5 and 6 players. No. 5 Alvaro Bedoya cruised to a 6-1, 6-2 win and No. 6 Jimmy Whitehead nearly whitewashed his opponent with a 6-1, 6-0 sweep.

Honeycutt hopes this match is a turning point for his netters. "We've won twice as many as we've lost. We had been losing some three-sets. (Today) we won two out of three three-sets."

In doubles play, the No. 3 team of David Tedder and Rick Norwood raised their record to 5-0 with a 6-3, 5-7, 6-2 victory. UNCW's No. 2 team of Cagle and Rayos won by default.

This weekend the men will travel to Winthrop and UNC Charlotte.

Tuesday's women's tennis match between UNCW and Francis Marion College came down to the final point of the final set of the day. The No. 3 doubles team of Joanne Pautz and Wendy Kristel won the grueling three-set match 6-1, 3-6, 7-6 to give the Lady Seahawks a 5-4 victory. The win raises UNCW's record to 8-6 overall. They are 2-2 in Colonial Athletic Association play.

The two teams each won three singles matches and one doubles match to set up the dramatic finale, which had to be moved to the lighted courts behind the university apartments to be completed.

In singles play, No. 2 player Sandy Williford (5-9) outlasted Sidbnn Murnane 6-2, 2-6, 7-6; No. 4 Cary Symons (9-3) defeated Debbie Cooper 5-4, 6-0; and No. 6 Pautz raised her record to 5-0 in singles play with a 6-3, 6-0 win over Alaina Herdon.

Williford and Symons won their No. 2 doubles match-up over Murnane and Cooper 4-6, 6-0, 6-3; to rally the Lady Seahawks and set up the pivotal final match.

Coach Jeri Whiting is pleased with her team's performance this year. "Because the team has no definite 'superstar,' Whiting has had to alter her line-up, changing the rank of her players, from match to match. "We've moved our team around a lot, but they've stuck with it."

Sports Briefs...UNCW Slips To Second

UNCW's baseball team slipped from first place in the Colonial Athletic Association standings after it lost three straight games to East Carolina University. The Seahawks (5-4, 14-19) are now tied for second with the University of Richmond two-and-a-half games behind George Mason University.

The Pirates swept the Saturday games 1-0 and 3-2. Sophomore pitchers Brian Smith and John Babson turned in strong performances in the losing cause. Smith gave up four hits in six innings in the opener, and Babson scattered five hits in five and one-third innings.

Home runs did in the Seahawks in Sunday's contest. Two solo homers in the bottom of the ninth gave ECU an 8-7 victory.

Junior Darren McCain set a school record by stealing four bases in Sunday's contest. UNCW tied a team record by stealing seven.

The next home games for the Seahawks are this weekend against the Richmond Spiders. The teams will play a doubleheader at Brooks Field Saturday beginning at 1 p.m. A single game will be played Sunday at 1 p.m.

Linkers Accelerate

Coach Calvin Lane's men's golf team will head into CAA tournament championships with a full head of steam. The golfers posted a three-day score of 915 to finish ninth in the 34-team Camp Lejeune Intercollegiate Golf Tournament last weekend. Elon College won the event with a score of 886.

Leading the way for UNCW was Scott Crocker with a 224 three-day score. Lee Watson shot a 226, followed by Hugh Harrell's 230, Greg Cuthill's 236, and Chip Spiron's 243.

Watson had the best UNCW round during the event. He shot a 72 in the first round.

The CAA championships will be held April 10-12 at Wilson Country Club in Wilson, NC.

Hammer Time

The UNCW track and field teams had their best success in the women's hammer throw at the USA/Nike Raleigh Relays over the weekend.

Sissy Baker, Molly Messer, and Kelly Wise each placed in the top ten in the event. Baker wound up seventh, with a throw of 99.1 feet. Messer finished eighth and Wise wound up tenth.

The team will travel to Williamsburg, VA, this weekend for the Colonial Relays. This will be the final tune up before the CAA championships are held at James Madison University April 11.

Tourney Hosted

The UNCW women's golf team will again host the Azalea/Seahawk Invitational on April 10-12 at the Topsails Greens Country Club in Hampstead, N.C.

The appearance will be the fourth and final one for UNCW.

Sophomore Gwen Gravina was the top sharp shooter two weeks ago at the LSU-Fairwood Invitational. Gravina paced the Lady Seahawks with a three-day stroke total of 240 (80-79-81).

Freshmen Michelle Immekis and Shelby Kinder have also had top performances for UNCW this season.

Correction:

The field dimensions for Ultimate story that appeared in the March 26 issue of The Seahawk were inaccurate. The correct dimensions are 70 X 40 yards with endzones 25 yards deep. The number of players on each team was also wrong. Each team has seven players on the field at one time.

We regret any confusion the error might have caused.

Mitchell To Become New SGA President Senate Votes To Overturn Disqualification

BY CAROLE MEHLE

The Student Government overturned the disqualification of student body presidential candidate Joe Mitchell Monday. Mitchell, who was the top vote-getter in the runoff for the post, will be the next student body president.

Mitchell will be sworn in at this Monday's SGA meeting. The meeting will be held in room 100 of the University Union at 6:00 p.m.

Mitchell's opponent, second place vote-getter incumbent Curtis Wilson was sworn in as president Monday, March 30 in a surprising move. SGA Office Manager Susan Goodrum said Wilson was sworn in with the understanding that if Mitchell's appeal was overturned he would step down.

Wilson was among the first to congratulate Mitchell after the decision with a handshake. "I was overjoyed when they told me Mitchell the decision was overturned and I would be president," Mitchell said. "I was so happy. It is something I wanted for so long."

Mitchell's hearing lasted approximately three and a half hours. Part of the hearings were closed to onlookers. The vote was taken by secret ballot during a closed-door part of the meeting. The entire Election Board — the same board that had disqualified Mitchell and upheld the appeal — was present at the hearing and testified to its findings.

Mitchell's disqualification from the race resulted from an Election Board Committee ruling that he had campaigned in the SGA office after regular office hours, a violation of the campaigning rules given to all candidates.

During the Senate hearing, the board called as eyewitnesses former Senators Christy Gunnell and Jeff Gurkin in regard to complaints filed against Mitchell.

Also called were former Special Senator Ivy Chalmers, who filed the complaint that resulted in Mitchell's disqualification, and Mike McDonald, the person to whom Mitchell allegedly campaigned in the SGA office.

SGA Vice President Duane "Ziggy" Nix said the largest influence on the decision of the Senate was the testimony of McDonald. "They were actually hearing his side — the side that hadn't been heard," he said.

McDonald told the Senate that Mitchell was in the office between 5:45 and 6 p.m. looking at mailboxes but was not in the office during their talk. McDonald also testified that he was "not campaigned toward."

McDonald also told the Senate that he was "concerned how the investigation had been handled," and said that "due process was not followed."

He said that he was "never told he was participating in a public hearing" when he returned a call from Shasta McAllister, former Election Board Chairman, to give his recollection of the discussion with Mitchell. McDonald contacted McAllister after Mitchell was disqualified on March 23.

McDonald recalled the incident that led to the disqualification. He said that he asked Mitchell how the elections were going that afternoon as he was leaving from a meeting at the Leadership Center, located down the hall from the SGA office.

Chalmers told the Senate during her testimony that she was in the office after hours "playing Solitaire on the computer on and off."

She agreed that she heard McDonald ask Mitchell about the elections, but said that McDonald and Mitchell talked inside of the office.

The Election Board charged that just by being inside the office after 5:00 p.m., Mitchell was violating a campaign rule.

Mitchell maintained that he was outside the SGA office when his conversation with McDonald took place, and that the Election Board didn't have sufficient cause to disqualify him.

Mitchell previously admitted that he was in the SGA office before the Senate meeting that night to check his mail box and the notebook for the "Be A Faculty Member For A Day" program. He said that he needed to see the notebook for a report he would make at the meeting.

Because the office door was open and the lights were on, he contended, the office was not closed for the day.

During Mitchell's argument he said that the board had showed bias. He said that during the emergency meeting in which he was disqualified, the Election Board asked him, "Why should we believe you?" He added, "This shows a lack of impartiality on part of the board."

He also pointed out the previous practice of the Election Board, alleging that it had broken its own rules.

He said McAllister made an error. See Mitchell, page 2.

Public, Congress Relations Studied

BY STEVE GOLDBERG
Media General News Service

WASHINGTON — Don't think much of Congress? They don't think much of you either.

As public criticism of nation's legislature mounts, Lawrence N. Hansen, a political scientist at George Washington University, talked at length with 12 House members and four senators, and got their candid but anonymous assessments of the public mood. Hansen said he tried to pick "highly respected" members of Congress. Each has been in office an average of 13 years.

For people who think there is an easy way through the nation's legislative thicket, these members — 10 Democrats and six Republicans — say dream on.

"The public complains it is not getting from government what it wants, but the truth is people are getting pretty much what they asked for," said a Democratic House member from a Western state. "In that sense government is quite representative, probably too much so. Whether the public is getting what it needs, as opposed to what it wants, is an entirely different matter."

"The public, according to most polls, says it wants more programs and less taxes — which, when you look at the deficit, is exactly what Congress has given them," said a Midwest Republican House member.

"Think Congress is out of touch? Most of these members spend lots of time seeking out voters, but complain that few people go to town meetings, answer mail surveys on important issues, or even bother to vote."

"Our ears are not just close to the ground; they have become permanent geological features," said a Democratic House member from the Southeast.

'The public complains it is not getting from government what it wants, but the truth is people are getting pretty much what they asked for.'

Said a Republican House member from the Midwest, "We often have people say to us, 'When is Congress going to start listening to us? How come you are all so out of touch with the American people?' Someday, when I am ready for a good fight, I'm going to let these people have it."

Paul Tsongas based his Democratic presidential campaign on the premise that people were ready to face the hard choices, that the public knew it must choose between spending less on programs and paying higher taxes.

The congressmen Hansen interviewed said that's wishful thinking.

"A lot of people say, 'I like a politician who takes a position and stands by it.' That's baloney. People want you to tell them what they want to hear," said a Republican House member from the Midwest.

"The public's capacity for hard truths is damned small," said another Midwest Republican House member. "Why? Because they are spoiled."

"We want more government than we're willing to pay for," said a Democratic House member from the Midwest. "I often wonder why people will not support higher taxes for things they want ... They want to spend more on important things, but they think the way to get them is through efficiency and cutting out waste. I can never persuade an audience that there is relatively little waste in the federal budget."

Said a Democratic House member from the Southeast, "People are refusing to look at the main cause for our problems. The main cause is them."

Hansen decided to offer the members anonymity because he felt it was the only way most would be willing to express themselves honestly. His study followed a bipartisan public opinion study that found the public angry and fed up with Congress and government.

"The public doesn't understand what we do, and I don't know what can be done about it," said a Democratic House member from the Northwest. "There is a sense — and the term limits movement proves it — that the job cannot be very difficult. I'm afraid a large part of the public thinks we vote on questions like: 'Are you for or against spending?'"

To those who complain Congress is dominated by special interests, a Republican House member from the Southwest said, "My daily life consists of answering telephone calls and letters and hearing meetings with people who want us to cut spending and balance the budget, but who also want us to spend more money on their favorite projects. We have become a nation of 275 million competing special interests."

The news media get a big dose of the blame from congressmen for failing to explain Congress.

"If all I knew about Congress was what the average citizen can find out from the news media I would be as mad as they are," said a Democratic House member from the Northwest.

A Democratic senator from the Midwest said, "Scandal sells. People are taken and intrigued by the personal and dramatic. It's boring to talk about the deficit, our trade position, or education."

To make things better, the members interviewed favored campaign finance reform, streamlining the legislative process and — above all — an end to control of the White House by one party and the Congress by another.

"I don't think it is accidental that the (public's) anger is greater now than it ever has been," said a Republican House member from the Southwest. "After all, we have just ended our eleventh consecutive year of divided government, and, therefore, 11 years of political stalemate. And the public created it. ... For thirty of the past forty years, the American people haven't put anybody in charge."

Don't expect too many congressmen to share their views with you face-to-face.

"No one defends Congress," said a Democratic House member from the Midwest. "Why? I can make myself look good before any audience in America by running against Congress. ... Congress is an institution that really has no defenders. Nobody explains what it is about, its importance and the complexity of the task."

Earth Day Affects College Curriculums

From College Press Service

Twenty-two years ago, the world officially woke up to the future of the planet.

An international Earth Day celebration was born, and today the environment has emerged from a topic of conversation to an issue of great global and political concern.

As Earth Day 1992 approaches (April 22), college and universities are looking toward promoting their environmental science curriculums and student research projects, as well as daily campus events and lectures throughout the week.

For example, in 1991 at Clark University in Worcester, Mass., the school founded the George Perkins Marsh Institute, the nation's first university research center devoted to studying the human causes of environmental change and the global responses.

The institute includes a Center for Technology, Environment and Development; a Center for Land, Water and Society; a Center for Global Urban Studies; and the Clark Labs for Cartographic Technology and Geographic Analysis.

At Hobart and William Smith Colleges in Geneva, N.Y., several geoscience students are working at various sites across the state to study environmental and geological conditions.

One group is studying the effects of chemical waste believed to be seeping into Seneca Lake from a landfill in the nearby town of Dix. The local community hopes that the students can determine whether toxic chemicals were dumped at the landfill, which has been closed since 1981 after runoff waste was discovered leaking into a popular fishing stream.

A second group is examining the spread of an industrial chemical through the town of LeRoy's water table following a 1970 train derailment that caused 30,000 gallons of trichloroethene to spill. The chemical, which attacks the central nervous system, was washed away rather than properly contained and vacuumed.

At the University of La Verne in California, the school recently established a major in Environmental Management, designed particularly for business students who will soon be dealing with environmental issues at a rapidly increasing rate.

At Abilene Christian University in Texas, the school just added an interdisciplinary class called Environmental and Technological Science, which focuses on several hot environmental topics — from depletion of the ozone layer and acid rain to the disposal of hazardous waste. All students are required to take the class during their sophomore year.

Mitchell's hearing was officiated by Ivey Graham, chairman of the Campus Judicial Board. The outline followed for the hearing was a "University accepted outline by the CJB," Graham said.

Mitchell said that Wilson has handled the situation concerning the race "very very well." Mitchell added that Wilson has helped him out by acquainting him with the job of president and has introduced him to several members of the faculty and staff.

Mitchell said his job as president will be "different than the past. There is so much with administration." His last SGA position was student services coordinator.

RHODES SCHOLARSHIP SERVICE

Route 1, Box 234-C
Beulaville, NC 28518
919-298-4554

Dear Student,

Is college cost going to be a problem to you sometime in the future? If so, your solution is RHODES SCHOLARSHIP SERVICE. Ideally, parents start saving for their children's college education from the time the children are born, but unfortunately we do not live in an ideal world. Most parents do not start thinking about financing college until their child's junior or senior year in high school.

Many parents turn to need-based federal aid programs to come up with the needed funds. Unfortunately, there have been drastic budget cuts in many federal aid programs.

Scholarships are another option. However, many of the well-known scholarships are highly competitive, making it harder for the average student or even the above-average student to get a scholarship.

However, there are scholarships and other sources of financial aid out there that few people know about. RHODES SCHOLARSHIP SERVICE is dedicated to providing information for students and parents that will help them find financial aid. With that aid they can obtain a college education without subjecting themselves to unnecessary debt or financial strain.

According to the national Commission on Student Financial Assistance, as much as $6.6 billion in student aid from corporations has gone unclaimed because people did not know the money existed or how to apply for it.

Most students qualify for some form of financial aid. There are many sources which do not require a financial need or demonstration of scholastic achievement. In fact, 80% of private aid does not require proof of need. Many of our sources give college funding based upon other characteristics, like interest, hobbies, ethnic background, ancestry, and even name. Age is sometimes a factor also. Some scholarships are specifically for the older student; and 42% of all college students are over 25 years old. So all that parents and students need to do is find these sometimes obscure gold mines that give out scholarships.

If you are one of the many students that doesn't qualify for either merit-based financial aid or enough need-based financial aid, there is a solution to your problem. That solution is RHODES SCHOLARSHIP SERVICE, and the huge financial aid database that we have at our disposal.

With the information contained in our database we can match you with financial aid that will meet your needs. The information you provide for us in your student's profile will allow us to find sources of financial aid you are qualified to receive, which will meet your higher educational expenses for any accredited college.

For only $99.00 (personal checks accepted, but money orders or cashier's checks are preferred and quicker) our service is guaranteed to provide for you at least six different sources of financial aid that match your characteristics and your needs. Most students will actually receive many more than six references, and the aid they are eligible for will far exceed their needs for college.

The only way a student can take full advantage of the college experience is if they have sufficient financing to attend the university of their choice. RHODES SCHOLARSHIP SERVICE has created this financial aid information service to meet the needs of all students, regardless of their personal situations.

Let RHODES SCHOLARSHIP SERVICE help you achieve the goals you have set. It would be a shame for able-minded students to miss out on the entire college experience simply because they or their parents do not have the money to pay for college.

To date we have helped 98.4% of applicants. In the unlikely event that we cannot find you at least six sources of financial aid, we will not charge you for our service and your money will be returned.

Don't delay, send for your information profile today!

Sincerely,
Phil T. Rhodes
Owner

P.S. If you ever wondered where you would get the money to pay for a college education, you can see how incredible this offer is. Please allow 2 to 4 weeks for delivery.

Woman Freezes Body For Two Years

BY JIM LEUSNER
Orlando Sentinel

ORLANDO, Fla. — A private nurse who stored an 82-year-old Osceola County, Fla., man's body in a freezer planned to keep his death secret for 10 years so she could continue collecting his $1,100 monthly pension, according to court documents.

Deborah Josh, 43, of Kissimmee, was charged this week in federal court with embezzling $19,300 from the pension of retired railroad worker Louis Mika. Mika's body was found March 20. Josh told investigators he died of Parkinson's disease in September 1990.

The money came from the Railroad Retirement Board, a federal agency that administers pensions for retired, disabled and unemployed rail workers.

After a friend of Josh discovered Mika's body in a freezer, she notified Osceola County deputies. Josh admitted to detectives that she preserved Mika's body in a freezer, according to an affidavit filed in U.S. District Court in Orlando.

The woman told detectives she "stuffed him in there like a turkey," according to the court documents. "Josh stated that she believed Mika's body would last approximately 10 years."

Josh mentioned the scheme of former roommate Annette Albain, who told investigators she found the body in November 1990. Albain anonymously contacted Kissimmee police about the death, but Josh denied any knowledge of the death and moved the freezer to a secret location, court records show.

Albain told investigators that Josh hoped to find a doctor who would verify Mika's death in 10 years.

Josh was freed on $20,000 bail Monday by U.S. Magistrate David Baker. The woman, a divorced mother of four who works as a waitress at Walt Disney World, has been charged in Osceola County with grand theft, a felony and failure to report a death, a misdemeanor.

Mika's cause of death has not been determined, but no wounds were discovered on his body. Medical examiners are awaiting results of blood and tissue tests.

Mandatory Busing Charlotte Schools End 22-Year Program

BY RICKI MORELL AND POLLY PADDOCK
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — From the first tense days of boycotts and violence to the last tired years of waning public confidence, court-ordered busing defined Mecklenburg County and its schools.

For 22 years, it was the bane and pride of a community struggling to educate students in schools that reflected the community's racial makeup.

Pride prompted the stubborn silence — the stark absence of applause — that October day in 1984 when President Reagan made a campaign stop in Charlotte and called busing "a social experiment that nobody wants."

Frustration prompted the opposite — thunderous applause — that evening in January 1988 when parent Jan Richards stood up at a community meeting and called for an end to busing.

"Busing may have been appropriate," Richards, now a school board member, said then. "But times in this community have changed."

Change came last week. An era ended on March 31 when the Charlotte-Mecklenburg school board voted unanimously to open a series of magnet schools that would steer the school system away from mandatory busing.

'Busing may have been appropriate, but times in this community have changed.'

It was an era that brought Mecklenburg national stature as the school district to pioneer busing for desegregation, and one of the few to make it work for so long.

At the beginning the community endured angry protests, white flight to private schools and occasional violence at schools. Over time most parents came to live with the plan. Compared with cities like Boston, parents accepted the burdens of busing with relative good will, fueling Charlotte's progressive image.

"Charlotte has a place in history for what we did," says retired school official Kat Crosby, a principal during the first years of busing. "We had people coming together to make it work."

Now, amid a national mood less concerned with forcing schools to integrate, Mecklenburg, under new Superintendent John Murphy's guidance, is ready to try something new.

"Busing did not fail here — it was in many ways our finest hour," says Maggie Ray, a parent and teacher who helped devise the busing plan in the 1970s. "We are now living in a new day. What we need now is another proud moment. We have another chance now to lead, to shine, to have another fine hour ... and I have every confidence that we will."

Students will still ride buses to school, and many will still ride buses to desegregate schools. But integration will largely depend on parents choosing to send their children to magnet schools.

"This is an effort to be progressive, with a commitment to keep our schools desegregated," says board Chairperson George Battle, on the board since 1978. "And I think we're gonna do it."

On the day the school board voted to approve its new magnet school plan, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in a DeKalb County, Ga., case that full desegregation was not necessary to exempt a district from court supervision.

To some the coincidence seemed prophetic.

"The idea that magnets and choice can replace mandatory busing for desegregation is an illusion," says Roslyn Mickelson, a University of North Carolina at Charlotte sociology professor who has studied Charlotte's busing plan. "Five years from now, this district will not be as desegregated as it is now."

Murphy and the school board say they won't tolerate resegregation. They say the system will go back to mandatory methods if magnets don't desegregate.

National desegregation expert Gary Orfield hopes Mecklenburg can maintain desegregation, whatever the method.

"If Charlotte goes back to segregated schools under any guise that will be very visible because Charlotte has been such an exemplar of desegregation," says Orfield, a Harvard University professor. "But if they just kind of gradually change their methods, I don't think that's going to be a big shock to anyone."

Doug Shellabarger is examined by Dr. Jonathon Crane in the Health and Wellness Center's skin cancer screening.

Skin Cancer Screening Held

BY JENNY NEAL
Staff Writer

On Wednesday Student Health and Wellness held a skin cancer screening. The clinic addressed such issues as risk factors and tanning booths.

"There is no safe way to tan," said Dr. Kathleen Jewell of the Student Health and Wellness Center.

"Tanning booths can cause eye damage, retinal burns and can cause severe or even fatal reactions in some people who are taking medicine such as tetracyclines, high blood pressure medication and tranquilizers.

A person who uses tanning beds should be aware that while the newer booths have less UVB [ultraviolet B light] burning wavelengths they still have the UV rays which are the most dangerous and cause the most damage."

Jewell said that 90 percent of skin cancer is caused by UV light.

Over half a million cases of skin cancer are diagnosed in a year in the United States. Jewell said there has been an increase in risks of skin cancer among younger people primarily because having a tan is associated with beauty today. In fact, sun exposure before age 20 is an increased risk in skin cancer. One severe blistering as a child can increase the risk.

Some preventative measures against skin cancer are avoidance of sun exposure between peak hours of 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.; wear protective clothing such as long sleeves and a hat; use a sunscreen with a sun protection factor (SPF) of 15 or higher even in the winter because the rays reflect off snow; do not work on a tan; examine skin regularly; and if a change is noticed in an existing growth on the skin, see a doctor or specialist immediately. In addition, avoid tanning booths.

"Warning signs of skin cancer are any change in a wart or mole, any sore that doesn't heal, any mole bigger than a pencil eraser or one with discoloration or irregular borders.

Jewell added that intermittent sun bathing in which a person lays out once in a while is just as damaging as the person who continuously sunbathes.

More information about skin cancer can be obtained from Student Health and Wellness at Westside Hall or by calling the center at 395-3280.

Overman Named Best Prof. Of Year

BY LAURA KEETER
Staff Writer

He gives random quizzes and only teaches 8 a.m. and 9 a.m. psychology classes, but nonetheless students elected William B. Overman as Best Faculty Member of the Year.

The Student Government Association awarded Overman a plaque and a check for $500 in the group's inauguration and awards banquet March 23.

Former special senator Ivy Chalmers sent letters to student clubs and organizations for nominations. Students voted on the 54 nominees March 18 and 19 at the general elections.

"He expects his students to perform at a certain level," said junior Lori Carter. "He kind of reminds me of my dad — you know when you've disappointed him and when you've done your best."

That makes her strive, she said, to do her best.

Overman lives in a historic part of Wilmington with his wife. "We don't have any children, but maybe that's why I like teaching so much. I have lots and lots of 18 and 19 year old children."

Stacey Thompson, a senior working on research with Overman and a former student, said he is in touch with his students.

"He's good at explaining in English what he's talking about," she said. "He's just really clear. If he doesn't think you understand it, he'll keep explaining it."

She said that Overman spends a lot of time with students; he'll take "time out" and talk with students about school or personal problems.

"He's the reason I changed my major from business to psychology," Thompson said. Overman is now her advisor.

At Wake Forest University as an undergraduate, Overman said he thought he would be a neuroscience researcher. It wasn't until he taught at Penn State as a part of the graduate program that he said he first started seeing himself as a teacher. "Seeing people have a better understanding of the world" is what Overman said he likes best about teaching. "And, of course, since I teach psychology, the world we're usually talking about is usually human behavior."

However, research remains important to Overman; he said that one of his philosophies is that you can't separate teaching from research.

Overman, now in his fourteenth year at UNCW, said his favorite students are those who try hard. "I like students who will take suggestions and study and try to be responsible in coming to class and studying for their tests."

Overman said his greatest reward as a teacher has been "helping students who are not sure of themselves gain more confidence about themselves through my teaching both in the classroom and in research, and seeing those students go on to do well in life."

Last year Overman was one of the three recipients of the College of Arts and Sciences Teaching Award, which faculty members nominate and judge. He received a teaching award from the Freshman Honor Society a few years ago.

The Best Faculty Member of the Year award is especially touching, he said. "It's one of my proudest accomplishments. It's not from the administration; it's not from the faculty. It's from people sitting in the classroom, and that's what it's all about."

This week is your last chance to apply for:

- Editor in Chief of THE SEAHAWK, the student newspaper of UNCW.
- Editor of The Atlantis, the student literary magazine of UNCW.
- General Manager of WLOZ, the student radio station of UNCW.

Applicants should have one year's experience on staff or equivalent experience. A minimum GPA of 2.5 is also required.

Mitchell Deserved To Be Exonerated

As was said in last week's editorial, we will probably never know if Joe Mitchell really broke that final campaign rule which caused his disqualification by the SGA Election Board Committee.

But that is reason enough for the Senate's decision to instate him as president. The committee certainly did not prove his guilt.

The Election Board Committee didn't have conclusive evidence that Mitchell had broken any rule, but instead took the word of one witness. It was Mitchell's word against the word of that witness.

Then, the members of the board disqualified Mitchell when they knew there was another eye witness, Mike McDonald, who had not yet testified.

When the Senate voted to overturn Mitchell's disqualification, they made it clear that shoddy work like that of the Election Board Committee would not be tolerated.

It's probably a safe bet that Shasta McAllister will not be re-appointed as chairperson of that committee. We can only hope that her replacement will remember that the committee's findings must stand up to public scrutiny and to the rules of fairness.

Executive Budget Should Be Cut

An admirable first move for President Joe Mitchell might involve the executive budget. That's the budget which funds the salaries and programs of those on the executive board (president, vice president, student services coordinator, attorney general, treasurer, and election board chairperson).

Last year Curtis Wilson set new records in SGA spending, allocating money for office equipment and furniture. This year, as many clubs and organizations are taking cuts in SGA funding, Mitchell should see that the executive budget does the same.

Letters To The Editor AIDS Is Always Worth Considering

Dear Editor,
Sex. AIDS. Sex. STDs. Sound familiar? Are you tired of getting questioned every time you go to the Health and Wellness Center for a physical ailment if you are using condoms?

Have you ever stopped and realized just why they are asking such seemingly unimportant questions. Could it be that not a day goes by there without a case of a STD (sexually transmitted disease) being discovered?

Some STDs are incurable and you will have to deal with treatment for life. Today, however there is a worse threat, AIDS, and one out of every 500 college students is HIV positive.

The condoms that you feel are being pushed on you by Health and Wellness are actually a neat little invention, that when used properly could possibly protect you from your partner's unknown and much unwanted disease(s).

Notice I said possibly protect, because condoms can fail. They are not totally "safe".

Condoms do provide the greatest protection (except for abstinence, but there aren't too many of you going for that), and they can save your life. Let me ask you, no matter how small the risk of contracting a disease is while using condoms, is any risk worth taking when you are dealing with your own existence.

You see, even in today's society you have been misinformed of the certain dangers of sex. The word "everyone knows how to do it, but a lot of you are still struggling with how many to do it with."

partner, but everyone they have slept with and so on. Feeling a little nervous? Good. I've got you thinking which is something you have needed to do for a long time.

So what are your options now that you know using a condom is not 100% failure proof against disease? The solution to preventing the spread of STDs and AIDS (by sexual transmission) is... MONAGAMY. It has been around for a long time, but these days seems quite out of practice.

Monogamy means, as Webster's defines it, having only one mate. Yes it did say one, one partner in which you know and trust. A faithful person that you have developed a loving, long-lasting relationship with, is all it takes to prevent you from catching a disease. The decisions you make now will affect the rest of your life. Practice monogamy, develop a relationship before you can develop an STD or AIDS. Your life depends on it.

Name Withheld

Dear Editor,

I am very disappointed with the "dirty" politics occurring at UNCW. It was shocking to hear that incumbent Curtis Wilson was inaugurated despite the fact that the "Joe Mitchell controversy" was still not resolved. Wilson is not the rightful president and should not have been sworn in.

I think the decision to disqualify Mitchell was foolish and absurd. How could the Election Board explore every aspect of the situation in only a few hours?

We, the students of UNCW elected Mitchell to be our SGA President and he should be able to serve his elected position.

How To Have A Corleone Wedding

As wedding season approaches, concerned young brides-to-be are constantly stopping me, sometimes by leaping in front of my car, and saying: "Dave, my family does not have a lot of money, but I want to have a nice wedding. What can I do?"

I tell these brides-to-be, even though money is tight, you can still have a wonderful wedding, if you just sit down with your family and have a heart-to-heart talk about what a wedding is really all about — things like commitment, and caring, and trust. Then you should rob a string of convenience stores.

Your goal is to obtain enough money to have a major, Godfather-style wedding, which is necessary to provide you with all the essential gifts you need to set up your new household. You'll find all of these items advertised in the 156-pound bridal magazines now collapsing the steel shelves of newsstands everywhere. These magazines contain helpful articles for brides ("Grooms: Should You Have One?") and hundreds of full-page glossy color advertisements. The message is that property equipping a modern newlywed household is comparable, in terms of total hardware requirements, to Operation Desert Storm, except of course that Desert Storm did not require both formal and casual tanks.

Consider just your kitchen and dining gift needs. I have here the April/May issue of Bride's Magazine, which has a Wedding Registry Checklist that includes, among other things, 21 categories of dinnerware, 22 categories of flatware, 17 categories of glassware (not to be confused with the 10 categories of barware), 24 categories of serving pieces/holloware and 34 categories of kitchenware.

I cannot overemphasize to you brides-to-be how essential it is for a household to have EVERY SINGLE ONE of these wares. My wife and I have been married for 17 years, and hardly a day goes by in our household when we don't have a conversation like this:

ME: Dear, where are the lemon forks?

MY WIFE: Formal or casual?

ME: Casual. I wish to probe a boil while watching "American Gladiators."

MY WIFE: They are with the demifame spoons, behind the finger bowls and the compote.

ME: What is a "compote"?

MY WIFE: I have no idea, but I cannot imagine setting up a household without one.

So you must have a large wedding. And you must quit your job immediately so you can plan it. Planning a wedding properly takes longer than medical school, because the stakes are higher. If a doctor is trained improperly, the worst he or she can do is kill people, whereas an improperly planned wedding could result in a rent disaster, such as the one that occurred at a recent wedding attended by a friend of mine named Cindy Seip, who swears this is true:

Everything went fine until it was time for the cutting of the cake. The problem was, there was no cake. A catering worker had dropped it earlier, and in Cindy's words, "It exploded." So the caterer had substituted a fake wedding cake, apparently a display model made out of a hard, plaster-like substance. The caterer's idea was that the bride and groom would just pretend to cut it, for the photos, and then the guests would be served some other cake.

When the groom found out about this, however, he became angry and started arguing with the caterer. Meanwhile the master of ceremonies, unaware of what was going on, was announcing that it was time for everybody to watch the Happy Couple cut the cake. So all the guests turned and looked just in time to see the groom pick up the fake cake, shout some bad words, and THROW THE CAKE AT THE CATERER.

Wouldn't that be a fun reception ice-breaker? Maybe the Cake Throw should become a standard wedding tradition, like throwing rice, or making the bridesmaids wear pastel yellow dresses that make them look like giant Easter-candy chickens.

Speaking of traditions: the April/May issue of Modern Bride magazine has an article titled "Wedding Superstitions," which contains, I swear, the following statement:

"An old Scottish belief for good fortune: A bride should be met at the door after the wedding by her mother, who must then break a currant bun over her daughter's head."

I believe that this tradition sums up the very essence of the modern wedding. I would add only that if the mother has no currant bun, she may, according to Miss Manners, use a compote.

Choosing Education: Public Or Private

In less than nine months, my older daughter will begin school.

For her, the prospect produces shivers of excitement. She talks constantly about turning 5, about going to "kinnyarden."

Her father and I are having much less fun.

In earlier years, I had imagined this time in a variety of ways, but there was always one constant: I would drive or walk my children to the neighborhood school and watch with pride and moist eyes (hear the violins in the background?) as they began their formal education. Always, they attended the school down the street.

As the deadline approaches, the only constant now is indecision.

I'm not a snob. I am a product of public education, both in Cleveland's Hough district and the suburbs. I learned with bright and not-so-bright kids; white kids, black kids, orphans, bullies and wimps.

I got a good education. I learned to love words and how to use them. As much as my numerically challenged brain would allow, I learned math. I was taught to find my way around a globe. In high school, research and writing were a staple. I often experienced academic deja vu in college.

So, I am positively disposed to the concept of public education. Philosophically, I believe that children need to learn early how to get along with many different kinds of people, for which public school is ideally suited.

But, as a consumer, I am losing faith in the ability of public schools to educate.

There are small points, such as foreign languages being taught only in high school, if at all. Or, realizing that my children will learn about great art and literature and music only if we take them to museums and concerts. We plan to do these things anyway; it's important to us.

But there are larger questions: In the admirable quest for order and discipline, will my daughters be taught that conformity, not curiosity, is the highest good? That independent thinking is not on the agenda?

I read about how many public school students graduate able to read and write, but not to understand complex issues or to have the intellectual tools with which to question, research, analyze and devise their own answers.

When I talk to friends whose children are in public school, I rarely get the feeling that they are excited; rather, I get a sense of grim determination, a feeling of "it's not that bad." To me, that's not that good.

When I talk to parents of students in private schools, I hear enthusiasm. The buildings and equipment are not that much better than public school (often they're not), but I hear positive mention of teachers and lessons.

What I hear along with that is the rediscovered joy of learning. What I hear is that children can be children and explore, learn and do.

This is happening despite private-school salaries being generally far below the salaries in the public schools.

But I look at the bureaucracy that has become our educational system and I wonder how much excitement is possible in an environment of external regulation, where the needs of individual children must be subordinated to class size — a mathematical formula of students divided by available teachers, and the words "minimum standard" become the sole standard.

And I remember the people from whom I learned the most and wonder: Is the love that grew between that adult and myself possible today?

Some people caution that if families such as ours don't give the public schools a chance, the schools have no chance.

I respond to that: I understand that; I want to say yes.

But we can't sacrifice these two little minds to their parents' noble experiment; we didn't create them to be a convenience for us. Rather, it's our job to do the best we can for them.

And so, the agony continues, although our decision must be made soon. As with many choices we have faced and will face, we may make a mistake.

But the questions that haunt me, since ultimately we have the means to make a choice about where our daughters go to school, are these: If this community and this nation really care about all children, what happens to the children whose parents have no choice? Are we willing to tolerate first- and second-class educations? And, where is the will to get the love of learning back into public schools, so that no one has to make this choice?

Graduates, Welcome To The Real World

This article is to acquaint those of you who are graduating this year with one of the fundamental truths of the real world! This is a truth that is essential to your future well-being and operational ability out there.

Cognito ergo sum! Recognize that? That is an ancient philosophical insight that provided the foundation for life for many in this world. "I think, therefore I am."

I, Robert W. Haywood, III, have discovered a new foundational insight destined to overthrow all preceding truths of the universe. I found it folks! I found it! Get ready for this. It will change your life because you will understand the essence at the heart of successful corporate life, university life, family life and religious life. Trust me, this is amazing. Are you ready? Think you can handle it?

The truth is: "I meet, therefore I am." That's right, meetings lie at the heart of reality. And if you don't believe it, simply look around you or, perhaps, look at your own calendar. Most people spend 75% of their time in meetings and another 15% of their time arranging meetings, cancelling meetings, re-scheduling meetings or, if you're unlucky enough, writing up the minutes of meetings!

It's an old insight that if you want to know what a person really values, look at how they spend their time and energy. I've seen people proving their worth in their jobs by listing all the meetings they have attended over a period of time.

You'd better face it, your success may very well depend on how many meetings you can attend as an underling and how many meetings you can arrange if you ever become a manager. And we're getting better at this. With all the new technology available, now we're having conference call meetings.

Soon you will be able to squeeze more meetings into your life via car telephone while you're driving. So, along with breakfast meetings and dinner meetings and luncheon meetings, we have driving meetings and I even notice that some of the people I run with at noon here at the University even manage to have running meetings.

Now, there is one area of our life on which we have to expend some thought. We are wasting a lot of good meeting time with this thing that we call sleeping. But we are making progress!

I understand from some of my colleagues that they have increased their capacity for meetings by dreaming about meetings that have passed or are coming. A few even keep a notepad by the bed so that when they wake up, they can jot down agenda items for the next day's meetings. Therefore, it seems quite plausible that we will soon discover that people can be available for hard to schedule meetings at 2:00 AM or 3:00 AM.

We're also making progress in that there are numbers of meetings scheduled to increase the efficiency of meetings and that helps a lot! So, since the worth of existence is defined by "I meet, therefore I am," I would suggest that if any of you who are preparing your resumes would make sure to list every meeting you have ever attended during your college career and as you interview prospective employers, be sure to check whether there are enough meetings to feed your hunger for those ongoing words that bring such delight to life, "I'd like to call this meeting to order..."

Susan Trausch Hooray For Free Speech

The thought police are at it again — this time setting fire to Sen. John Kerry's speech because he dared to stray from established liberal doctrine.

Bad move, John. How many times do we have to tell you that politicians are not supposed to think, particularly if they're Democrats. Look what happened to Paul Tsongas!

Sure, he's popular now because he's not running. But the minute he gets back in the race and starts thinking out loud on television about nuclear power and business again, he's dead.

The thought police demand unquestioning loyalty to the Issues. Anybody who so much as wrinkles a brow over the complexities of abortion, the environment, entitlement programs, or affirmative action, is verbally lynched.

I know. Some of the most vicious mail comes from liberals. My favorite was: "Dear Susan Trausch — I hope you never have children because I shudder to think what you would produce." That was in response to a column that supported the Persian Gulf War.

Let's hear it for free and open debate!

I understand that the thought police are driven by passion for what they see as the wrongs in society, and by compassion for the have-nots. That is a commendable foundation for a movement, and I consider myself in it. God knows, voting for every Democratic presidential candidate since Hubert Humphrey must count for some kind of commitment.

But I am just as passionate about the right of the individual to speak his or her mind, to think critically about the most sacred of cows, and to question, question, question because questions lead to answers.

I think that's what Kerry did when the Massachusetts Democrat spoke at Yale last week. Questioning the efficiency of affirmative action programs does not mean a person is questioning the morality of civil rights.

Affirmative action was an excellent structure for its time. It opened doors that were welded shut. These doors had to open. But this is 1992. We've had 25 years of quotas, and still a black man earns 77 cents to every white man's dollar. Women, black and white, earn less.

So maybe, just maybe, something isn't working. Maybe, as Tsongas said before he got dumped, it's time to stop fighting over that last sliver of pie on the plate and start working together to bake a bigger pie. For everybody.

Listening to white, male resentment in a bad economy when people are scared is not fanning the fires of hate. Quite the contrary. It's defusing the situation. Now more than ever, blacks and whites, men and women, all minorities and majorities need to sit down and talk to each other.

We must talk honestly about what works and what doesn't, what hurts us and what helps us, what we need from our companies and our government. Clinging to a boilerplate solution that may be creating more problems than it's solving is not going to get the job done.

We have to stop ganging up on each other for expressing ideas. To scream at Kerry because he wasn't in lock step with the liberal line is to squelch the very independence that makes us liberals.

It's almost McCarthy-esque. I can hear that voice in the hearing room asking the question: "Are you now or have you ever been associated with conservative thinking?"

The answer should be: "Yeah. Sometimes. It depends. Once in a while, even Republicans can come up with a good one."

Open-mindedness should be the strongest plank in the liberal platform. We should be known for vision, not for myopia, for being able to see what's wrong — not just with Them but with U.S.

The '60s were heady days, and a lot of us don't want to let them go. We marched. We changed the world, or thought we did.

Now we're middle-aged, and the battles are different. Less dramatic maybe, but deeper, wider. The goal is no longer to get across the bridge. The goal is to build bridges that will connect people with each other and connect our country with its core again.

We need to do this together, not separately.

GEORGE BUSH HAS GOT TO GO TO EARTH SUMMIT '92

Global warming. Destruction of the rain forests. Toxic waste. These aren't the legacies we wanted from the "environmental" President. Urge George Bush to attend the U.N. Earth Summit in Brazil in June. Right now, the United States is the only major industrial power refusing to do its part. Ask the President to stop America's role as leading producer of greenhouse gases. Tell him to support the global treaty for reducing carbon dioxide emissions, ban the exportation of toxic waste, and save the world's rain forests. The President is the only person who can effectively lead the struggle for our planet's future.

Get Ready For The Johnny Quest Groove

BY RAMONA HUPP

Arts & Entertainment Editor

Johnny Quest has been called everything from a clash between "Rick James and Aerosmith" to (my personal favorite, quoted from Details magazine) "Van Halen meets Fishbone as told to Dr. Seuss by George Clinton." (Huh?) These are futile attempts of creative musical association at best, for Johnny Quest has a sound so unlike anything ever heard before that there is nothing to compare them to, which is just fine with JQ.

"I don't think [comparisons] are that bad but there are musical differences," Joe Farmer, lead singer of the band, tells Boston Rock magazine. "We just try to let our music stand for itself."

To put it simply, Johnny Quest is an enigma, which is saying a lot in this era of mass-produced, camera-ready bands. What they are is a pure funk band with more metal and groove than a immobile body can stand.

"[JQ] has the ability to mesh a pulsating James Brown groove with a full-frontal Motorhead assault," according their publicist, Mike Ayers. This is hardly a band for the faint of heart, or Jesse Helms—a frequent and favorite player in JQ's live performance—for that matter.

From Boston, Mass., to Washington state, these four guys from Raleigh, are movin' their funk-groove crunch across the country and in the process are becoming quite a band to watch in the music scene. They recently finished a couple of dates opening for Red Hot Chili Peppers on the "Mother's Milk" tour. And with their upcoming full length release, 10 Million Summers, due in the stores by May, JQ might just have to become famous, or something.

According to Terri Craft, from the Mad Monk, JQ refused to play any other club in Wilmington after the Monk burnt down a few months ago. As thanks for their loyalty, Mad Monk has given them the opening spot of their grand re-opening night in the new and improved location in Marketplace Mall, this Wednesday, April 15.

Three one-act plays by Harold Pinter, will be presented in the SRO Theatre from Thursday, April 9, until Tuesday, April 14. Tickets are FREE to UNCW students. Call 791-9695 for reservations.

NEW VIDEO RELEASES

My Own Private Idaho — Rich boy, Keanu Reeves, joins River Phoenix in a life as a gay street hustler. This film now raves at the independent film makers level, but, it's not for everyone: the close-minded need not apply. Us magazine describes it as a "stunning piece of renegade cinema." Gus Van Sant (Drugstore Cowboy) directs.

Billy Bathgate — Gee, it didn't take this film long before it found its way into the video stores. This locally filmed production (Hamlet and Wilmington) centers on Dustin Hoffman as a resident mob boss. Nicole Kidman also stars.

Rambling Rose — Laura Dem and her mother, Diane Ladd were both nominated for their roles in this movie, also locally filmed. Dem's sexually awakening character shakes up Southern tradition. Beautifully filmed.

White Men Can't Jump Through Critic's Hoops

BY D. NEAL LEEPER
Entertainment Writer

What else could be funnier than Wesley Snipes (Jungle Fever) and Woody Harrelson (Cheers) hustling basketball for two hours in the new movie White Men Can't Jump? Lots of things: the charge card concept at Wendy's; a night club at Center Stage; and possibly the movie Big Top Pee Wee to name a few.

Basketball player Billy Hoyle, a "slow-white-boy-doochy-chump-Brady-Bunch-lookin' kid" played by Woody Harrelson, takes us where he first meets his hustling partner, Sidney Dean, played by Wesley Snipes. Picture this: a court of black men shooting hoops — and in comes Billy Hoyle, the "doochy-chump-white-boy." Someone on the opposite team gets hurt and they choose Hoyle as the replacement, even though everybody knows that white men can't play basketball.

After the smart-alec talk and insults rage on for an extremely long amount of time, a bet is finally made and Hoyle takes Dean for all of his money. A good hustle job. A good Harlem Globetrotter job, too.

It seems Hoyle is hustling money to pay off a debt owed to some intimidating mobster-type people in an old brown Dodge van. O-o-o-h-h-h! Sounds like a plot, doesn't it? But it isn't.

Dean makes his way over to Hoyle and makes a business proposition of sorts. They work together as a team and make even more money. Sounds good, doesn't it? And believe me, it works for a while. Here's how they do it: Hoyle and Dean travel to different neighborhoods around LA and hustle different players. They place Hoyle on the bench and after a session of wise cracks and insults, Dean's partner gets hurt. Dean makes a bet that he can still win. The opposing team laughs at the idea. Dean bets a large amount of money on the game and even gives the opposing team the opportunity to pick a player for him — any player. And who do they pick? Easy. The "doochy-chump-white-boy." The teamwork comes into play and of course they win the game and the money. It's a good premise, but after five hustling jobs it starts to get old.

Hoyle shares a shabby apartment with his girlfriend, Gloria Clemente, played by Rosie Perez. She's a quick talking, loud mouthed, Hispanic woman who gets annoying after a mere ten minutes. Throughout the movie, Gloria practices for her shot on the game show, Jeopardy. Sounds like a strange plot twist, huh? It is.

The problem with Hoyle is, besides being slow, he trusts people too much. This trust causes him to be hustled by his own partner for over $1,700. Gloria, Hoyle's girlfriend, is outraged and leaves him.

Dean and Hoyle make a deal to enter a basketball tournament with a grand prize of $5,000. I won't tell you who wins, but it's not hard to figure out.

And if that isn't enough of a climax, Dean pulls a few strings and Gloria makes it on Jeopardy — Gloria Clemente, past disco dancer, competing against a nuclear physicist and a lawyer. Do you think she'll win? Another question that's not that difficult to answer.

If you have seen the previews, you've already seen all the important and funny lines. To put it simply, this movie has a lame plot, but that's not the bad part. The plot, or lack thereof, is expanded on for over an hour too long. After a few basketball scenes, the movie begins to wear on your patience.

I recommend all my readers wait until it comes to the $1.50 theater or on home video. It will be at one of the two in less than a month. I give White Men Can't Jump a four; for four dollars too much on the ticket cost.

Mad Monk will blow its new doors open this Wednesday night with the crunchy funky-punk sounds of JOHNNY QUEST, the BUZZ JUNKIES will open. Doors open at 9:00 p.m. Cover is $5.

Mad Monk Set To Re-open Next Week

BY RAMONA HUPP
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Oh, ye, of little faith, bow to the nightclub Gods in the sky! The Mad Monk is back to guide the little lost lambs of Wilmy-wood back into the groove of some righteous vow breakin'. We can all rest easy now. No more M.W.S. (Monk Withdrawal Symptoms).

Don't be surprised to find the new club looks a lot like the old. The design is the same bi-level split that we all know and love. The stage is much wider and, of course, the pit is about the same size for the ultimate moshing experience.

The club opens to a spacious entrance with two sets of massive stairs on either side, leading to the private — members only — club, that over looks the stage and crowd. Sound familiar? The design wasn't intentional, but according to the owner Charlie Maulsby, "it's the only logical way for a large crowd to watch a band." The upstairs will be fully carpeted with a private bar and bathrooms. The new and improved club benefits from much more room than the old — and more bathrooms!

Mad Monk is located just two doors down from Club New Zoo, but the two clubs could never be farther apart. When asked how he felt about the two clubs, and the two different "crowds" being so close together, Maulsby said at first he was skeptical, but since signing the lease he's gotten nothing but positive reactions from everyone.

"If you get tired of the band, here at the Monk, you can go over to the Zoo, or go shoot some pool next door." There's even talk of the pool room expanding and a pizza parlor going in between the two clubs.

Maulsby did show some concern for parking lot safety and has arranged to hire two policemen to patrol the area. And with the extra muscle of his bouncers he doesn't feel it will be a problem.

Get there early. Terri Craft, of the Mad Monk has heard rumors of some faithful few camping out for the Wednesday night opening! The doors open at 9:00 p.m. — first come-first served — only the worthy (and the early) get in.

Another New Club Opens Downtown

BY SHANNON DAVIS
Entertainment Writer

Remember the laid-back jazz and blues pub we had downtown called Front Street News? Well, it's had a facelift. It's now called Metropolis and is a dance club that only plays progressive, alternative and industrial dance music.

With the growing popularity of new blues pubs, like The Ice House, Front Street News had no choice but to change to something new and different.

Well, they've certainly changed alright. My friend and I went Saturday night, unfortunately we had to miss the opening night which was the weekend before.

We were quite shocked (but pleased) of the remodeling results of this new club. It was pretty funky looking — black and white graffiti everywhere, with all kinds of strobe lights and smoke pouring onto the dance floor from the ceiling.

The music was really cool to dance to, but it got repetitive. The dance floor was big enough to fit the big crowd of people with plenty of elbow room to spare.

It's defiantly something different and like nothing Wilmington has seen before. It's a cool alternative if you like to dance, but don't like the other establishments Wilmington has provided us with.

So, if you are ready to cut loose and kick your heels up without getting any "cheese" on your feet, then boogie downtown to Metropolis where the progressive beat is the only beat.

"QUOTE OF THE WEEK"

Raphael Sells Hotel Where Her Daughter Was Killed

From Knight-Ridder Newspapers

Television talk-show host Sally Jessy Raphael is selling her Bucks County, Pa., bed and breakfast, and the family retreat that's next to it, where her daughter died in February. The asking price is $1.8 million for the 155-year-old Isaac Stover house and the barn that was converted into a seven-bedroom retreat for her eight unmarried children.

Neither Raphael nor her manager-husband, Karl Soderlund, has visited the property since the Feb. 2 death of her 33-year-old daughter, Allison Vladimir. But her spokeswoman, Cindy Schneider, denied the death was the reason the property was for sale. "Sally and Karl have just decided to spend some time traveling," she said. "They'd been thinking about selling long before this happened."

A coroner's report said Vladimir, who suffered from back pain, died accidentally from the combined effects of several legally prescribed drugs and non-prescribed drugs.

Filmmaker Woody Allen once said his one regret in life is that he wasn't someone else. Apparently, he was only half kidding, according to an interview in New York Newsday.

Given his druthers, Allen said, "I would rather be Marlon Brando or Louis Armstrong... a great pianist or something. I think that being funny is not anyone's first choice."

"If I could have come from a different background, I might have started off with deeper goals and maybe achieved some of them earlier in life and at this point in my life be doing a lot better than I'm doing — doing deeper work or better work," the 56-year-old comic actor and director said.

Master of horror Stephen King says he's nothing like the villains in his novels — but people expect him to be. "If I do an autographing or a personal appearance, I think they expect Dracula," the 44-year-old author said in an interview taped for Tuesday's "Good Morning America" on ABC. "Of course, I'm just a guy from Maine — just a normal guy."

Among the films based on stories penned by "normal guy" King are "The Shining," "The Dead Zone," and "The Lawnmower Man."

discovered a new chapter in the manual of political correctness while filming "Mississippi Masala" in the Delta, according to an interview with Associated Press. Washington asked the locals why blacks didn't live on the north side of town and received this explanation: "They said to me — and I actually used it in the film — 'Well, there's still a lot of tradition in the Delta.' I said, 'Is that racism?' And they said, 'There's still a lot of tradition.' So that's the new word now."

But Washington added that many of his preconceived notions about the state turned out to be wrong. Mississippi "probably had a bad rap," he said. "I think you just have to deal with individuals. You can find as much racism south of the Canadian border as you would south of the Arkansas or Alabama border."

You could call him Dr. Arsenio Hall after Wednesday when the late-night talk show host, on hiatus from his program, picks up an honorary humane letters doctorate from Central State University in Wilberforce, Ohio.

While he's in the area, Hall will visit children at a school in Xenia, Ohio, as an ambassador of Drug Abuse Resistance Education. And Thursday Hall will be in the spotlight on Capitol Hill, testifying before a House Appropriations subcommittee in support of a plan by Rep. Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, of Cleveland, Hall's home town, to create a congressional select committee on violence.

Pop star Cyndi Lauper might be politically correct, but she could use a little help when it comes to D.C. geography. On the bus traveling to the huge pro-choice march in Washington Sunday, Lauper grabbed the microphone and turned spontaneous tour guide. "That is the White House," she reportedly told the enthralled riders. "I know it from the postcards."

Unfortunately, the building to which she was pointing at the time was the Capitol.

Baseball great Joe DiMaggio, spokesman for New York's Bowers Savings Bank for 18 years, is headed for the bench. According to a report in the New York Daily News, the California parent of Bowers Savings — Home Savings of America — plans to slap its own name on the New York bank and replace the Yankee Clipper with former

Fenneman, who played straight man to Groucho in the 1950s quiz show "You Bet Your Life," has been Home Savings' spokesman for 17 years.

New York advertising maven Jerry Della Femina called the move a mistake. "George Fenneman never hit in 56 consecutive games," he said.

A Home Savings spokeswoman said DiMaggio would be used in radio and print ads during a two-month transition period and then retired.

Jessica Mitford, the author who pilloried undertakers 30 years ago for exploiting America's bereaved, seems poised over a new target — the childbirth industry.

Mitford's "The American Way of Death," published in 1962, accused undertakers of overcharging and otherwise taking advantage of people who had just lost their loved ones. Now the author, 75, has finished what she claims is her last book, "The American Way of Birth."

"My new book is very much about money and politics," she said in an interview at her home in Oakland, Calif. "It isn't about the miracle of birth and how wonderful it is. It's about money and politics and how it controls all that."

Though Mitford wouldn't divulge other details about the book, due out in the fall, papers in her office included a stack of interviews with midwives.

Mitford became a household name after the publication of "The American Way of Death," and economy burials became known as "Mitford funerals."

Ivana Trump and a crowd of bargain hunters were routed from a K mart store on Long Island Monday after a bomb scare forced an evacuation. Trump was busy signing her novel, "For Love Alone," when authorities began rushing shoppers from the store. An anonymous caller had warned of the bomb, police said. Bomb-sniffing dogs found nothing.

The Donald's former wife is becoming something of a fixture at K mart. Last September, she and the man himself were spotted at a K mart in Saratoga, Pa., buying school supplies for their son, Donald Jr., who was attending a nearby prep school.

Florida Concert Revives Spirit Of Woodstock Festival

BY JEAN LATZ GRIFFIN
Chicago Tribune

SEBASTIAN, Fla. — There are two endangered green turtles swimming in plastic pools at the doorway to the large tent. Brightly colored T-shirts urge festival goers to "Save the Manatee." Parking is free if you came with an ecologically correct number of people in your car — at least four.

On a massive stage, with stacks of speakers designed to challenge the hardest of eardrums, musicians who performed at Woodstock in 1969 — Arlo Guthrie and Richie Havens — share billing with performers who weren't born yet.

And a local group, Old Guys with New Socks, consists of men aged 58 to 77, decked out in shuffle-board-friendly resort clothes, looking for all the world like they probably spent the 1960s worrying that their offspring would follow Guthrie, Havens and the rest into perpetual hippedom.

This is the fifth annual Indian River Festival, an environmental benefit started by Guthrie in 1988 to give a gift to the area where he spends much of his time.

With its eclectic collection of musicians and causes (there is also an AIDS-awareness group here handing out condoms and safe-sex information), with blankets under the twinkling night sky, with Guthrie telling the story of the man who wrote "Amazing Grace" after turning his slave ship around to take his human cargo back home to Africa, the festival theme seems to be "The '60s Meets the '90s."

It is the first Saturday in April, and this is the Indian River

County Fairgrounds, about five miles southeast of Sebastian, a quiet town just north of Vero Beach.

The lumps under the blankets here are likely to be children snuggling against their parents. The few puffs of smoke that drift skyward come from legal, if no longer politically correct, sources. The unity of the crowd is tenuous, a distant echo of the fierce spirit of Woodstock.

But to Havens, who brings back some of the wonder of the '60s in a rousing, jumping, tilting set of folk guitar, triggering a wave of nostalgia in his pink dashiki, rings on every finger and beads encircling his graying beard, all such festivals are "siblings and children of Woodstock."

"I've been watching this develop for 20 years," Havens says, sitting backstage in a replica of a Hard Rock Cafe, where performers and stage crew are fed.

"Woodstock was not all sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll," Havens says. "The consciousness we have today about the environment grew from that group of people. Then we called it 'getting back to the natch.'"

For the several thousand festival goers, it is a long wait to see headliner Guthrie, who takes the stage near midnight, backed up by the rock band Xavier, which includes Guthrie's son.

A man with a foot-long beard and fire in his eyes locks his gaze on Arlo. A young woman whose arms and legs are twisted with deformity leans her walking stick against the fence and hums gently.

A quarter of a lifetime beyond the baby-faced lost soul of the movie, "Alice's Restaurant," the 44-year-old folk singer's long grey curls spill across his face and he slips easily from guitar to harmonica, from "Tamborine Man" to "City of New Orleans."

After reminiscing about Woodstock and about learning folk music from "hanging around old guys," Guthrie tells the crowd he suddenly realized this year, when younger musicians starting to ask him questions, that he had become "one of the old guys."

His show lasts about an hour, music interspersed with vintage Guthrie messages like, "Don't do anything that isn't you. If you don't like people, hang out with fish. Don't like fish, then help people."

And in a twist of words that will have people scratching their heads for days, Guthrie sends the crowd forth with a new song, dedicated to those friends he has lost to AIDS and cancer in the last year.

The song, he says, should help people realize that if they "walk around like they are dead, they will be less likely to fight about the things they think are important when they act like they are alive."

The title: "Wake Up Dead."

UNCW CREW SUCCESSFUL

The UNCW men's varsity four crew won in the Duke Invitational Sprints Regatta that was held this past weekend. The sprints were held on Lake Michie in Bahama, North Carolina. The boat was manned by Curt Browder, Bryan Gibson, Steve Goodwin, Matt Bartoldus and Tara Clark. The women's novice four made it to the finals in the same regatta. Bill Post, Jennifer Gala, Julie Grace, Serena Amerson and Erin Cronin made up the women's team. Duke, North Carolina State University, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, East Carolina University and William and Mary all participated in the weekend's races.

The crew team is a club sport sponsored by the UNCW Student Government Association. This year SGA allocated $8,000 to the crew team. The team also receives funds from dues, fundraisers and various donations. This year $3500 was used to purchase a new boat and there are entry fees for each race. These fees vary greatly from regatta to regatta. This past weekend, entry fees were $50 for four boats and $90 for eight boats.

CONGRATULATIONS!!!

Congratulations to the Student Government Association for conducting a very formal and unbiased hearing. Many good questions were asked in the search for the truth. Every base seemed covered and everyone gave 100%

ULTIMATE FRISBEE FLIES

The UNCW Ultimate frisbee teams played in the Ultimax frisbee tournament held in Greenville, North Carolina this past weekend. The Seamen beat East Carolina University's number two team and the Tattooed Road Trip, a club team from Washington D.C., in the first rounds of play on Saturday. The women beat the Grits, a club team from the District of Columbia, in semi-final play. The team lost to the Wilmington City club team, The Port City Slickers, in the finals, 11-10. Veteran Seaman Frank Colvin said,

"We did have a lot of rookie involvement this weekend and they showed a lot of improvement. Even though it was a fun tournament, we were able to recognize weak aspects so we can fine tune for Nationals."

The women's team defeated East Carolina University 15-1 in finals action. "The tournament this weekend wasn't a hard core tournament. ECU's like our sister team, we play them a lot. We go down there to have fun more than anything else," said women's team member Melissa Willson.

The mens and womens teams are club sports that are sponsored by the Student Government Association. Both teams were allocated $6,500 to go towards equipment, entry fees, and traveling expenses.

The mens teams have represented our school well. For the last two years they have been runner-up in the National Championship. For you people who aren't able to grasp concepts, that means they have been 2nd in the Nation for the last two years. I feel confident they will continue to prove themselves worthy of a National Title. The girls have been doing sensational also, and I, Line Dempsey, believe they have a great shot at taking home the title this year... Good Luck

The Duke Blue Devils became only the sixth team in history to be repeat champions of the NCAA post-season tournament. The other five were Oklahoma State (1945-46), Kentucky (1948-49), San Francisco (1955-56), Cincinnati (1961-62), and UCLA (1967-73). Duke beat Michigan for the title Monday, 71-61.

Jamming To A Devil's Beat

Places everybody. Places. Okay, roll call.
Laettner: "Yo."
Thomas and Grant Hill: "Which one?"
There's two? Uh, the one with the headlines.
Thomas: "Hey that's me! I'm here."
Grant Hill: "Great, taken for 'Grant-ed' again."
Curley: "That's Hurley."
Bobby Hurley: "That's Hurley."
Soory. Say could you stand up?
Hurley: "I am standing!"
Uh, sorry.
Krzyzowski: Krzyzowski. Say man, how do you say your name?
Mike Krzyzowski: "Krzyzowski (sh-chef-ski)."
Uh, right. Listen Mike, we need to do something about your name.
Krzyzowski: "Like what?"
Well, you see, we couldn't come up with anything that rhymed with Krzyzowski except maybe spaghetti. And spaghetti just don't get in rap lyrics about basketball championships.
Krzyzowski: "Well, I do like eating spaghetti."
Um, that's nice. Listen, could we just call you Coach K for this?
Krzyzowski: "(Sigh), I guess. Nobody appreciates my name."
Grant Hill: "Hey, at least they acknowledge your existence. What about me?"
Krzyzowski: "Who?"
Grant Hill: "Armmh!!!"
Okay, enough chat-chat fellows. Let's begin. Cue the music.

The Devil Dance

(Featuring the Duke Blue Wrecking Crew)

"We are the Devil Wrecking Crew,
Here to sing a rap or maybe two.
Yea, we won it all for a second straight year,
Beat Michigan's frost, who can't buy a beer."

(Laettner)
"My name is Christian. But I'm no Saint,
I'll post you up and I am in your face.
I can hit the threes and burn you at stripe,
I may step on your coach too, just for spite."

"We are the Devil Wrecking Crew,
We are the best team through and through.
Don't try to get in our way,
We already made 34 teams pay."

(Hurley)
"They call me Bart from underachiever fame,
They stop laughing when I penetrate the lane.
I thread a defense with my pinpoint passes,
I'm smart too and do well in my classes."

"We are the Devil Wrecking Crew,
We got nothing left to prove,
We've beaten Bark, Bobby, and Pinino,
Even Mr. Carolina himself, the Deano."

(Chris Webber and Jalen Rose)
"Hello world, Chris and Jalen here,
I guess we should have respected our peers.
Sorry we swaggered, and said nasty things,
Please let us touch your Championship rings."

"NO. NO. Throw those Michigan bums out."

Slump Continues, Spiders Win

BY PATRICK FOWLER
Sports Editor

To UNCW baseball coach Mark Scalf and players, close is definitely not good enough, its frustrating. The Seahawks—pending Tuesday night's outcome—have dropped eight out of their last 10 outings, five of them by two runs or less.

"It's frustrating, no doubt. We played well all week until today. Eventually it (frustration) builds up and soon the dam is going to break. You hope your guys continue to work and maybe you'll break loose soon."

On the weekend of March 28, UNCW (5-7 in the CAA, 15-23 overall) went into the ninth inning three times tied or with a lead over East Carolina. And three times the Pirates escaped defeat in the last-at-bats. ECU won 1-0 and 3-2 on Saturday in a doubleheader at Minges Field. The Pirates took win number three in a hitter's game Sunday, 8-7.

The Seahawks then split their next two contests, one at home and one on the road. UNCW bowed to Atlantic Coast member, N.C. State, 10-5, on Wednesday. UNCW rebounded Thursday with a 12-4 victory over Barton College.

UNCW entered last weekend's three-game homestand against CAA rival Richmond in third place in the conference with a 5-4 mark. They trailed two games to the Spiders and three to league leader George Mason University. Three league losses, 3-2, 2-0, and 9-3, has sent the Seahawks spiraling to fifth position, a game ahead of in-state rival ECU.

"I told my kids it would be tough to come down here to play," Richmond head coach Ron Atkins said. "We got three good pitching performances. I feel fortunate to come out here with a sweep."

Seahawk bats were hot early, as UNCW jumped out to a 2-0 lead Sunday in the first inning. The Seahawks scored on consecutive walks, a Corey Broome run-scoring single, and a double steal.

Richmond narrowed the gap to one two innings later and then starting Spider pitcher Craig Saccavino (3-1) settled down. Saccavino held the Seahawks, surrendering just five hits the rest of the way. The big right-hander scattered six hits, three runs, five walks, and recorded six strike outs in going the distance for the Spiders.

The third run came on a Mark Chamberlain inside-the-park home run that saw outfielders Kelly Erskine and Mark Foster collide in shallow right center. Chamberlain sped around the bases and just beat the left fielder's throw.

The run gave the Seahawks a short-lived 3-2 lead, but it vanished quickly. The Spiders batted in four runs on four hits, led by Mike Foster's home run in the top of the sixth. Richmond took the lead for good. Two costly errors in the inning aided the Richmond surge.

The Spiders added three more runs in the last two innings, one in the eighth, and two in the ninth. They touched the five UNCW pitchers for a season-high 17 hits.

Each team left 10 men on base.
"They had eight hits on two strikes," Scalf said. "But I thought except for two or three hits when Keith Pettis didn't hit his location, we pitched well. I thought three of the five guys we put out there threw OK."

only four innings—the Spiders collected seven hits and two runs off the right-hander. Pettis (0-4) replaced him after a lead-off single in the fifth and promptly surrendered a game-tying single to Tom Scioscia.

The lefty then gave up four runs, only two earned, in the sixth as Richmond regained the lead 6-3.

"He (Babson) got some ground balls when he had to," Scalf said. "He told us he was running out of gas."

However, the fuel problem was not so much in UNCW's defense but offensive punch, where the Seahawks are currently batting just .247 percent as a team, and .238 with runners in scoring position.

"Richmond swung the bat with men in scoring position," Scalf said. "We had a lot of baserunners, but we didn't drive in many runs."

Injuries have played a key role in the lack of power. Sunday both infielders Chris Holstad and Keith Barnhardt played with leg injuries.

Senior first baseman remains the bright spot for the Seahawks, who have a .301 percent batting average, on 40 hits in 133 at-bats. He also leads the team in runs scored (24), doubles (9), and walks (16).

"We are trying too hard at the plate," Scalf said. "We are impatient. We're swinging at a lot of pitches out of the strike zone."

UNCW travels to N.C. State on Wednesday and return home this weekend for a three-game homestand against CAA rival, James Madison.

The teams will play a doubleheader on Saturday and a single contest on Sunday. Both games start at 1 p.m.

Crew Team Rowers Post Win

From Staff Reports

The men's and women's club crew teams proved this weekend that Seahawks are equally as quick in the water as in the air.

Four- and eight-member UNCW team boats competed in the Duke University sponsor Lake Michie Invitational Regatta in Bahama, N.C.

Six crew teams attended the competition — UNCW, ECU, UNC-Chapel Hill, N.C. State, Duke, and William and Mary — over the weekend. One Seahawk vessel accomplished a feat no UNCW crew team had done before it.

They finished first in a varsity four-rower sprint race.

The five member crew of Steven Goodwin, Matt Bartolucci, Byron Gibson, and Tara Clark defeated four other competitors in a 2,000 meter sprint race.

Duke finished second in the contest followed by UNC-Chapel Hill, UNCW's B-boat, and William and Mary.

William and Mary actually finished second in the race but were disqualified after failing to stay in their racing lane.

The victory over Duke was especially sweet for the Seahawks who were badly beaten by the same team a year ago in the same tournament.

"It was very exciting for us," junior Byron Gibson said. "It was a great feeling to come in first finally."

"Seeing Duke still behind us at the half-way point was a big lift for us. It really kept me going out there."

The crew, which has been racing together for three years, practices six days and 15 hours a week.

Workouts usually run twice a day in the morning and the afternoon, with members meeting at the Cape Fear Rowing Club Boat — bundled in warm clothing — as early as 6:30 a.m.

Time is also devoted in the weight room to strength muscles in both the upper and lower parts of the bodies for maximum performance in the water.

"It's surprising how much you have to practice for this sport," Gibson said. "Crew is the ultimate in team sports for every person counts."

"You can't practice if two or three guys show up for a four-man boat. It takes a lot of dedication and hard work."

The Seahawks competed in five boats for the first time. The team purchased their third vessel this season and are currently raising additional funds through a 24-hour pledge rowing challenge on a stroke machine.

The money made from the event will go towards race fees and buying additional rowing equipment.

UNCW competed in the men's and women's novice four-man event, the men's varsity four competition, and the women's eight-man contest at the Lake Michie Invitational.

The Lady Seahawks also had a good weekend performance.

The women's novice squad of Bill Post, Jennifer Gail, Julie Grace, Serenica Amerson, and Erin Cronin, reached the finals of the four-rower boat competition before placing out of the medals.

Medals go to the top three finishers in each rowing race.

"I think, as a club, we were pleased with our showing," Gibson said.

The Seahawks travel to Clemson, S.C. this weekend for the Clemson Invitational Sprints.

Another Tough Loss

The UNCW men's baseball dropped their fourth straight game Tuesday night in a 5-3 loss to UNC-Chapel Hill at Brooks Field. The Seahawks (15-24) lead 3-2 entering the ninth inning but the Tar Heels (19-14) rallied for two runs.

Sports Briefs...Seaweed Wins Tourney

The UNCW women's and men's ultimate teams finished first and second at the Ultimix Frisbee Tournament held on the campus of East Carolina University in Greenville, N.C.

The women's team, the Seaweed, defeated Grits, a District of Columbia based team, in the semifinals before destroying their host, the Pirates, 15-1, later in the Sunday afternoon finals.

The men's team meanwhile, beat ECU and Tattooed Road Trip (Washington, D.C.) in the opening rounds but fell in the tournament finals to The Port City Stickers in a hard fought 11-10 battle.

Water-Skiers Soar

The newly formed UNCW water-ski team placed sixth out of 13 competitors in the UNC-Chapel Hill and UNC-Charlotte Water-ski Tournament over the weekend. UNC-Charlotte won the competition.

The Seahawks participated in individual events as well as combined team and individual scores.

Freshman Dennis Smith topped all UNCW competitors finishing 11 overall out of 57 participants. Greg Austin was 14 and Michael Pittman was 16.

Individual event results are as follows: Slalom (55 skiers)—7, Dennis Smith. 33, Tyson Warren. Jump (47 skiers)—7, Greg Austin.

12, Dennis Smith. 14-Mike Pittman. Trick (44 skiers)—4, Mike Pittman. 9, Greg Austin.

Booters Fall

The women's club soccer team lost to the Raleigh club 3-0 in Raleigh. The loss drops the Seahawks record to 2-2-1 on the season.

UNCW faces Jacksonville at home on Brooks Field in its final outing of the '92 season. Game time for the contest is 2 p.m.

Lacrosse Loss

The UNCW lacrosse club team lost 8-4 to Elou College Saturday in home action on Brooks Field. Trevor Hughes (2) and Mark Selvaggi scored goals for the Seahawks. The squad is home for its last three remaining contests facing George Washington, Virginia Commonwealth, and UNC-Greensboro of consecutive Saturday afternoons.

The George Washington contest starts at 2:30 p.m. The other two match-ups begin at 3 p.m.

Netters Sweep

The women's tennis team dropped just one set in a 9-0 sweep of High Point College in High Point, N.C. Sunday. Final results were as follows:

Singles: Sandy Williford (UNCW) def. Kim Bryant, 7-5, 6-1; Adri Davis (UNCW) def. Amy Dillingham, 6-0, 6-2; Cary Kinney (UNCW) def. Stephanie Batten, 6-2, 6-1; Sasha Doran (UNCW) def. Connie Blakes, 6-1, 4-6, 6-2; Gary Symons (UNCW) def. Jennifer Terp, 6-1, 6-2; Clare McKullen (UNCW) def. Delia Stanton, 6-0, 6-0.

Doubles: Williford-Doran (UNCW) def. Bryant-Batten, 6-1, 6-1; Kinney-Symons (UNCW) def. Terp-Dillingham, 6-4, 6-2; Kristel-Pauz (UNCW) def. Anderson-Bates, 6-0, 6-1.

Alpha Delta Pi Sorority Eliminates Pledge Period

BY CAROLE MEHLE
News Editor

Alpha Delta Pi pledges all over the nation won't have to wait a semester to become full members of the sorority. The Greek organization has adopted a national program at a national level that means that the period of pledgship will be eliminated.

Because pledgship is eliminated, those who rush the sorority will be initiated within six to eight weeks.

The UNCW chapter adopted the new program last fall.

The Total Membership Education Program means that the pledges have the same privileges as the sisters, the initiated members. "The pledge is more on the level of the sister. It does not separate the pledge from the sister," said Jenny Watson, Alpha Delta Pi president.

The sorority once had pledge meetings and sister meetings, which the pledges could not attend before their initiation into the sorority.

Hazing was a concern of the grand national chapter and under the new policy, hazing, initiation by forcing pledges to do ridiculous or humiliating things, is greatly reduced. Watson said that the local chapter does not have and they do not have a problem with it. She said she did not think that was related to the decision to eliminate pledgship at a national level.

Watson said that the change was "kind of" a big change at first for the sorority, but now it is no big problem.

As well as implementing elimination of pledgship, the sorority is beginning a new academic enhancement program

Salinger To Speak At U. Center

From the office of University Relations

Pierre Salinger, former press secretary to President John F. Kennedy and now ABC Television's chief foreign correspondent and European Senior Editor, will speak at UNCW on Monday, April 27.

Salinger, who is in the United States to receive the Ellis Island Medal of Honor awarded by Congress, will speak to students, faculty and staff in an informal question and answer session at 4 p.m., Monday in the University Center Ballroom. Seating for the public during the "Hour With Pierre Salinger" will be on a space available basis.

That evening, Salinger will speak to an invitation-only audience. During this evening, he is expected to comment on international issues of the day.

While he has a corporate appearance on this visit to the United States, Salinger's only university speech will be the one he gives at UNCW.

Salinger began his career in news as a copy boy for the San Francisco Chronicle before he enlisted in the navy during World War II. After the war, he returned to the Chronicle and became a prize winning reporter and night city editor.

In 1955, he was appointed West Coast editor and later contributing editor of Collier's Magazine. After Collier's magazine ceased publication in 1956, he became chief investigator for the U.S. Senate Labor racket Committee where he continued investigating James Hoffa.

President John Kennedy named Salinger his press secretary, a position he held from January 1961 to November 1963, and then served as press secretary to Lyndon B. Johnson until March 1964.

He first joined ABC news as a continuing correspondent in Paris in December 1977, and in 1979 he became ABC News Paris Bureau Chief.

He has broken a number of major international stories for ABC News and has covered the Reagan-Gorbachev summits in Geneva, Washington and Moscow, the Gorbachev-Mikhailom summit in Paris, and the economic summits of the leaders of the seven major industrialized nations.

He has served as chief correspondent on a number of ABC news documentary specials, including "On Borrowed Time," an ABC News "Closeup" documentary on the international banking crisis. He was also the correspondent for "America Held Hostages: The Secret Negotiations," a three-hour exclusive report on America's behind-the-scenes efforts to free the American hostages held in Iran. This report won the George Peabody Award, the Gold Hugo Award, the Cornelius Ryan Award from the Overseas Press club among many other distinctions.

Candidates' Views On Abortion Opposed

BY RENEE LOTH
Boston Globe

A constellation of political and social factors has aligned in recent weeks to elevate the abortion issue to a fever peak of interest, perhaps higher than at any time in two decades. Activists on both sides of the volatile question are gearing for a battle they believe will thrust abortion politics heavily into the presidential realm for the first time.

Both sides are working to shift the prism through which the issue is viewed in order to show their position — and their candidates — in the best possible light.

Chief among the developments placing abortion on the front burner is the Supreme Court's planned consideration Wednesday of a restrictive Pennsylvania abortion law. Coincidentally, that state holds its presidential primary six days later, and the timing is expected to politicize the issue and create a media glare on abortion there.

The increasingly conservative high court's eventual decision in the Pennsylvania case could erode or even overturn Roe vs. Wade, the 1973 case that legalized abortion nationally. The court is expected to rule by July, thus providing a potentially pivotal issue in the November election.

Perhaps more than any other issue, voters have a clear choice on abortion this presidential year between the Democrats and Republicans. Both Gov. Bill Clinton of Arkansas and former Gov. Jerry Brown of California support abortion rights and have said they would sign a Freedom of Choice Act pending in Congress.

Supporters say the act would codify the protections of Roe v. Wade into federal legislation, bypassing the courts if necessary, but opponents say it goes too far by prohibiting individual states from imposing any restrictions on abortion during the first three months of a woman's pregnancy.

Clinton has signed legislation in his state placing some restrictions on minors' rights to abortion, requiring them to receive the consent of their parents or a judge. Brown has spoken out against abortion as a private citizen but supports Roe v. Wade as public policy.

President Bush, by contrast, was a supporter of Planned Parenthood before 1980 but now hews to his party's platform, which calls for a human life amendment to the U.S. Constitution outlawing most abortions, a ban on public funding for abortion, and the appointment of federal judges "who respect the sanctity of innocent human life."

Michigan College Racial Tension Rocks College

BY BRENDA J. GILCHRIST AND DAVID MCKAY
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

OLIVET, Mich. — Sophomore Idris Fountain, who is black, says that when he got to the small-town, predominantly white campus of Olivet College, "the word 'bigger' was an active part of the student vocabulary."

Fountain is among many people, on and off the campus, who think the racial protests that have rocked the campus in recent weeks were the result of a longstanding undercurrent of racial tension.

Some say the hostilities could have been predicted and perhaps avoided if college administrators had paid more attention to race relations on the campus where 57 of the 704 students are black.

William Donohue, a Michigan State University communications professor hired last week by the college to begin conflict resolution sessions, said Olivet College officials ignored the signs, and even some warnings.

They never "aggressively tried to promote race relations," he said in an interview last week, and "it sort of blew up in their faces."

In an age of racial separatism, Donohue and others added, the geographically isolated liberal arts school should have seen a conflict coming long before the April 2 fight at a dormitory degenerated into racial slurs and a brawl that injured two young men. Most of the black students later left campus for the rest of the school year, saying they did not feel safe.

The nastiness of the brawl was embarrassing for a school that has taken pride in its openness to minorities since its founding in 1844.

Donald Morris, the college's president for 15 years, said in an interview last week he saw no signs "that there was an eruption coming."

Neither did Henry Henderson, a senior from Southfield, Mich., who wasn't involved in the fight but quickly became the leader of a group of black students protesting conditions at the school.

Before the incident, "I had no idea that ... the larger part of the student body felt this way," Henderson said last week, referring to racial slurs and a perceived animosity toward blacks.

But Olivet Mayor John Homer, an associate professor of business administration and economics at the college, said, "It's obvious as all get-out" that there was racial tension before the fight. And Police Chief Richard Howe said a less serious fight last fall was race-related.

In fact, Howe said he warned college officials six months ago that there was a racial tension problem on campus.

Morris responded: "If he warned somebody, he sure as hell didn't warn me."

Things the college administration should have given more thought to, Donohue and others said, include:

—Black students mostly from urban areas were placed among white students mostly from small towns where they had little or no contact with black people.

—The college has no blacks on its full-time faculty. Thus it is difficult to develop and maintain a support and mentor system for minority students.

Some black student leaders, past and present, say the administration ignored their requests for a diverse faculty and multicultural programs.

All along, Donohue said, "The faculty was bringing to the attention of the administration that these kinds of racial issues should be dealt with systematically."

In an interview last week, Morris said, "There is a great deal of growing racial intolerance in the United States. I was naive to think that those kinds of issues did not affect our students. ... I thought we were doing a good job of avoiding it here, and I guess we weren't."

In the days after the fight, the college took steps to deal with the problem. Those included better security; an agreement to do a better job of teaching students, faculty and administrators about other cultures; creation of a minority affairs office, and a commitment to hire minority faculty members.

Morris said some of those moves were planned prior to the brawl. Some black student leaders remain skeptical. But some others, white and black, believe he is committed to improving the racial climate at Olivet.

Donohue said that if the administration was waiting for the students to come together naturally, it was a faulty plan. These students are far removed from the era in which blacks and whites joined for common causes like the Vietnam war and the civil rights movement, he said.

"They're children of a new mood in the country," said Donohue.

He said he believes the nation's leadership over the last decade has fostered an environment of hate and disgust, making the students "children of a divided America."

Morris said the blowup forced him to acknowledge that the atmosphere at Olivet was not as tolerant as its history had made him think it was.

"We really are not isolated from the racial tensions that befall the rest of the nation," he said.

Court, many analysts believe that abortion-rights supporters now may turn to the voting booth as a way to try to ensure support for their position.

"We will be voting on this issue in numbers that are unprecedented," said Kate Michelman, director of the National Abortion Rights Action League. "When the reality of the loss of this freedom to choose really hits people, George Bush will pay at the polls, I think, in some significant ways."

The Family Business Could Be A Nightmare

BY ROBERT MCCABE
Fort Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — A founder and owner of a small business in Boca Raton talked recently about his father's death.

The man, who asked to remain anonymous, began his career decades ago working for his father. He decided to strike out on his own after his father refused to enter into a three-way partnership with him and his brother.

When his father died some time after he left the business, the man took his wife and children to visit his grieving mother.

During the visit, his mother asked to speak with him alone. She then told him that while she appreciated his bringing the children to see her, she never wanted to see him or them again.

"We died when we left, as far as she was concerned," the man said.

The Boca Raton businessman, neither of whose children has opted to follow in his footsteps at his firm, offers some advice to anybody contemplating getting into a family business.

"The thing that people who get into it should be aware of is that it can work out beautifully or it can work out horribly. It's seldom in between," he said.

Those who work closely with family businesses say that shared business concerns can serve to bring some families closer together than ever.

And some experts say growing numbers of young people are opting to move away from big corporate life to explore ways in which they can merge family and business.

Yet statistics show that family businesses are hard to keep in the family. Only one in three make it to the second generation. Even fewer — about 16 percent — survive into a third generation.

High estate taxes as well as a mix of psychological and emotional issues make keeping a family business going a tough proposition.

But lawyers, college business professors, family-business consultants and family-business members themselves all say it can be done, as long as participants are willing to plan and to be honest.

John L. Ward, a business professor at Loyola University of Chicago and nationally recognized authority on family businesses, says defining a family business can be tricky.

Counting them is even more tricky, because no one keeps such statistics, he says.

Cutting out all but the largest publicly traded companies, somewhere between 95 percent and 99 percent of all U.S. firms could be considered family businesses.

But if one defines a family business as a firm either employing two or more generations of a family or that has two or more family members as owners, only about a quarter of all U.S. companies qualify, Ward said.

Of those family businesses that get off the ground and achieve some success, only one out of three is passed successfully to the next generation, Ward said. About half of those — about 16 percent of once-successful family businesses — are passed onto a third generation.

"The first critical question is whether the owner has capable and interested offspring," he said.

Increasingly, children of family-business owners do seem to be interested, he said.

"The days of running off to big corporations are over," he said. "It seems like between two-thirds and three-quarters of family-owned businesses attract one or more of their children before their children reach 30 years of age."

"The next bridge is whether the parent generation is able to let go of the authority or control gracefully," Ward said. To hand over to one's children what one has spent a lifetime building is "very difficult and courageous, a very substantial obstacle," he said.

Then, the business has to survive estate taxes after the owner's death. "Once a business becomes worth a million dollars or more, the U.S. gets $500,000 or so. (The United States has) one of the most punitive generational taxes in the world."

Kathleen Coty Raskin, a Boca Raton-based therapist specializing in family business counseling, coaches families through the transition process.

"You have to look at the legal issues, the tax issues. But families are not motivated primarily by those things," she said.

"Business problems are often personal problems," she said.

Maureen Healey Kennon, a Boca Raton lawyer, agrees.

"One thing about estate planning. I can devise lots of plans to save people money on their taxes. But if they can't live with them for personal or psychological reasons, then so what?" she said.

Reflecting on 18 years of experience in estate planning, Kennon said she is still amazed at how difficult it is to get the founder of a family business to let go of it.

"Successful men don't want to give up control. You can show them the numbers. You can show them the tax savings and they won't give up control. Not as long as they're competent," she said.

Tom Petersen, manager of business counseling at the Small Business Development Center at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, says that passing on a family business is an ongoing process.

"Expect for it to take time. As long as you're in business," he said.

"Role definition in succession is crucial," says Joan Gillman, director of the University of Wisconsin's Small Business Development Center and executive director of the U.S. Association of Small Business and Entrepreneurship.

Fathers dealing with sons must be clear when they're speaking as leaders of the business and when they're speaking as fathers, she said.

Sometimes, fathers aren't the problem at all.

Paul Holt, 30, is vice president of the Waltham, Mass.-based Holt Co., which his father began 12 years ago.

"It's unusual. My father is very, very laid back. My mother is the hard-driving money person. She controls the money. . . . My father is the opposite," Holt said.

While 49 percent of the ownership of the Holt Co. has been transferred to Paul Holt and one of his sisters, details of the rest of the plan are yet to be worked out, he said.

Many family businesses are slow to prepare for a transition of ownership.

Ward said that two recent studies by economic development groups in Seattle and Chicago arrived at virtually identical conclusions: "Of all the businesses in the community, where the owner is 55 years of age or older, only one-third of them have a reasonable succession plan in mind. . . . Two-thirds of those businesses are at some kind of continuity risk."

Assuming that a business is even modestly successful, the death of a founder who does not have a transfer plan in place can mean the end of the business.

Currently, the Internal Revenue Service allows a parent to give $600,000 to his or her children tax-free. With a married couple, the amount is doubled — $1.2 million.

Anything more than those amounts is taxed, from 37 percent to 55 percent.

Moss Named As New UNCW Provost

CAROLE MEHLE
News Editor

The search is over for a new Provost. When present Provost Charles Cahill leaves the position as the highest academic officer of the university, Dr. Marvin K. Moss will fill it effective July 1.

Moss comes to UNCW from the University of California, San Diego where he was associate vice chancellor and deputy director of the Scripps Institution of Oceanography at La Jolla.

Moss was selected from a nationwide search that involved over 200 applications, recently narrowed to a field of six.

Chancellor James R. Leutze said, "I am thrilled that a scholar and administrator of Dr. Moss's caliber accepted UNCW's offer to assume academic leadership of this university."

"He has extensive experience in developing and revitalizing academic curricula; he has a phenomenal track record with federal science funding agencies as well as in fundraising for the marine sciences at Scripps; and his reputation in the marine science and oceanographic community is superb."

Leutze also said, "It speaks well for the university and our young but nationally ranked marine science program for UNCW to attract such a distinguished professional."

In an earlier memo to the university faculty and staff, Leutze called the selection of the new provost the most important decision of the year and one of the most important he would make as chancellor.

As provost Moss will oversee all of the academic and professional programs of the university, including the College of Arts and Sciences, the Cameron School of Business, the schools of nursing and education and the Center of Marine Science Research. Moss will also oversee faculty recruitment and tenure as well as intercollegiate athletics.

FRIENDS DON'T LET FRIENDS DRIVE DRUNK

Alternatives! leaves you with these tips:

For a safe and happy summer,

Before making any decision, it helps to get all of the facts. Here are some important ones about alcohol that may help you make wiser decisions about drinking.

First, it's okay to choose not to drink. Your reasons for not drinking are your own and require no explanation and no apologies.

Second, if you do drink or are trying to decide whether you will or will not drink, here's some information that will help.

ALCOHOL BASICS

Approximate alcohol content of typical beverages in North Carolina:

Malt Beverages

- "Lite" beer 2.3-4.3%
- "Regular" beer 3.5-5%
- Imports and malt liquors 6%

Wines and Wine Products

- Wine coolers 4-6%
- Red, white, rose, champagne (all unfortified) 12%
- Vermouth (fortified wine) 18%
- Sherry (fortified wine) 20%

Liquors or Whiskies

- (also called spirituous liquors)
- Amaretto, Kahlua 28%
- Tequila, cognac, brandy 40%
- Bourbon, whiskey, scotch, vodka, rum, gin, brandy 43%
- Brandy 45%

THE INSIDE STORY: ALCOHOL'S EFFECTS

✖ Alcohol is a central nervous system depressant. It is a drug included in the same category as Valium, Xanax, and other tranquilizers. They all slow down normal body functions such as heart rate and respiration. Use of alcohol, like other depressants, can result in intoxication, sedation, possible unconsciousness and even death, depending on dosage.

✖ The body can break down about 1/2 ounce of pure alcohol per hour. This is approximately equal to:

(Source: National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism)

✖ Women are more seriously affected (i.e. impaired) more quickly by alcohol than are men. This is due to enzyme deficiencies, body fat percentages and many other factors.

WHAT NORTH CAROLINA LAW SAYS ABOUT DRINKING

Drinking Age

✖ It is unlawful for a person under 21 years of age to purchase, to attempt to purchase, to possess, or to consume malt beverages, fortified or unfortified wine, spirituous liquor or mixed beverages.

✖ It is unlawful for any person to sell or give malt beverages, fortified or unfortified wine, spirituous liquor or mixed beverages to anyone under 21 years of age.

Fake I.D.'s

✖ The Division of Motor Vehicles will automatically suspend driving privileges for one year for possession of an altered or fictitious driver's license. In addition, a maximum penalty of 6 months in jail or $500 may be imposed.

✖ If you purchase or attempt to purchase an alcoholic beverage with an invalid or altered I.D. and are convicted, the court may impose a maximum fine of $2000 or 2 years in jail and the Division of Motor Vehicles shall revoke your license for one year.

Alcohol and Autos

✖ It is unlawful to transport fortified wine or spirituous liquor in the passenger area of a motor vehicle in anything other than the manufacturer's unopened original container.

✖ It is unlawful for the driver of a motor vehicle to consume any alcoholic beverage while driving.

✖ It is lawful for a person who is at least 21 years of age and who is a passenger in a vehicle to possess and consume an open container of beer or unfortified wine (any wine containing not more than 17% alcohol).

"Proof" - term used to indicate the percentage of alcohol in spirituous liquors. It equals 2 times the alcohol content, so an 80-proof bottle of Jim Beam is 40% alcohol.

Editorials

Thanks For Allowing Us To Serve You

For the past year, the editors of The Seahawk have sat in judgment.

We have decided what SGA should be doing, where the university administration has gone wrong, and, occasionally, what the federal government should be up to. Those judgements have shown up on this opinion and editorial page.

But, more importantly, we as editors have been judges of you, the readers. We have decided what you would be interested in reading, and what you needed to know about the events on this campus and around the nation.

We decided by choosing what stories to run in this paper.

It is important that you, the readers, understand that we realize what that responsibility means. It gives us considerable power, and we have honestly tried to use it to serve you in the best way possible.

But more than once (sometimes more than once per day) our news judgements have conflicted with some of yours.

So, if your organization didn't get the coverage it wanted sometime this year, we hope we can get you in next time. If you didn't think a story gave you a fair shake, we hope you made that view known to us, both verbally and by a letter to the editor.

And most importantly, please let us know what your views are in the future. Without your input, we as editors can only guess what issues you feel are important, and what topics you see in the paper and couldn't care less about!

If we have your views, we can certainly try to accommodate you. However, sometimes we are restrained by the rules of journalism or standards of integrity necessary for the paper. In those cases, you can demand an explanation. Please do. You might not always agree, but we can at least understand each other.

Anyway, thanks for the chance to bring you a year's worth of news. We've had a blast, and we hope you've had a good time reading our work.

The face of The Seahawk will change some next year, as it does every year. You'll see new bylines, and new names in the box on the top of this page. If you are interested in seeing your name in one of those places, stop by the office next fall and see what we are all about. You might like us!

Thanks again for all of your support, suggestions and criticisms. Keep them coming. Have a safe summer, and we'll see you next fall.

Thanks to the Seahawk staff for a great year!

Dave Barry Working At Home Has Its Benefits

TODAY'S CAREER QUESTION IS: Should You Work At Home?

Working at home is an idea that is appealing to more and more people, such as George Bush. One day he got sick and tired of constant foreign travel and said, "Barbara, I'm going to put a desk and a phone in the Oval Office and just stay home and veto legislation." Other famous people who work at home are Queen Elizabeth II and the American farmer.

Of course the home is not the ideal place to do certain types of jobs, such as coal mining. But many modern employers are willing to be flexible. The Ford Motor Company, for example, recently started a pilot program under which employees who don't want to leave their preschool children may elect to build Taurus station wagons in their homes. Oh, there have been problems.

Some cars wouldn't start because of what was later diagnosed as Play-Doh in the cylinders. But most employers are willing to overlook such drawbacks, because studies show that the average corporation actually saves money when employee stays home, inasmuch as when they come to work, they spend the bulk of the time stealing office supplies and faxing jokes to international subsidiaries.

But the real beneficiaries of the work-at-home trend are the employees themselves. I work at home, and I have found that this arrangement has a tremendous potential for personal growth, because nobody will notice if you eat as many as 20 lunches per day. Plus you have no incentive to take showers, which results in personal growths in your armpits, which tends to limit your social life. If you have dogs, which I do, you find yourself talking to them a lot, not in a condescending manner, but as equals. Eventually you abandon personal hygiene altogether and degenerate into a primitive life form, living in your underwear and licking Cheez Whiz directly out of the jar. When delivery people come, you bark and try to sniff their privates.

But you can get a lot done at home. The key for me, in terms of productivity, has been my personal computer, which can be linked electronically via telephone lines to the newspaper. This means that, when I have a column due, I merely press a few keys, and within seconds, thanks to the miracle of modern microchip technology, I am playing "F117A Stealth Fighter." This is a computer game wherein you're the pilot of an extremely advanced Air Force jet flying dangerous missions over enemy territory while enemy fighters attack you and enemy bases shoot missiles at you and enemy editors call you up demanding to know where your column is. I am extremely good at "F117A Stealth Fighter." This would not be possible if I did not work at home.

Of course there are drawbacks. The one that has probably already occurred to you is that if you work at home, you could be killed by a large lump of bread dough falling from the sky. This danger was made chillingly clear to me recently when several alert readers modeled me an Associated Press report from Bellingham, Wash., stating that "20 pounds of white-bread dough somehow fell from the sky and crashed onto the roof of Doug and Paula Ward."

I am not making this report up. The dough landed on the Wards' home on St. Patrick's Day, with what Doug Ward described as "a horrendous crash, like a sonic boom."

I spoke with Paula Ward by phone a couple of weeks after the incident, and she said it remains a mystery.

"An astronomer took a sample, and he said it was just regular bread dough," she said. "The religious people think it was a sign from God, because you know, in the Bible, God dropped manna. But it doesn't look like religious dough to me. We still have it, and it hasn't risen yet. It's looking kind of slimy."

One possible explanation is that "in beings from the Planet of Bad Nutrition are flying over in F117A Stealth Saucers and dropping unhealthy foods on people's homes, starting with white bread and gradually escalating to Ring Dings, Slim Jims and — if they are truly evil — Lucky Charms breakfast cereal. But Paula Ward has a more chilling theory involving another alien life form, one that is even more menacing to human civilization.

"I think it's college students," she said. "We live right near a campus (Western Washington University). I think they figured out a way to launch dough."

And people have the gall to say that our educational system is not getting the job done.

Anyway, it appears that this is an isolated case, which should not be blown out of proportion. The truth is that if you work at home, the chances are less than one in two that you will ever be killed by any form of high-speed baking ingredient. The worst that's likely to happen is that, being alone all day, you might find yourself riding weird trains of thought. Believe me when I tell you this.

Phillip Loughlin Semester End Brings Passages For All

The semester almost got away from me. What a tragedy it would have been had I not been able to get in my final words of wisdom before you all parted for futures (or heads) unknown.

So what can I say? Another class of seniors pack up and head out, leaving the ivory towers far behind. Another group of juniors look forward eagerly to a final year (or two) of college. And a handful of freshmen step up to the plate of real college studies as the rest of their buddies wash out on a tide of beer studs, unfinished Eng 102 essays, and all-nighters. It gives me a lump in my throat.

I'd like to supply each of the aforementioned groups with a nugget of golden sagacity as they prepare for whatever the summer and the following months have to offer. I'd like to supply that, but you'll have to be happy with what little I actually have to offer.

For the seniors, I salute you. There, but for the grace of 21 hours, go I. Most of you have probably earned whatever you are about to get. You worked hard, struggled, and found daylight at the end of the academic tunnel. The past four plus years have been a flurry of last-minute assignments, exams passed without comprehension, and an occasional, shining epiphany when some professor finally made sense.

You probably wrote papers on people or topics that you could care less about, and will never think of again. Or you solved equations through some complex web of formulae that you will never remember—nor will you likely ever have to.

I salute those of you who loafed and coasted through as well. You, too, earned whatever you are about to get. It takes a special kind of skill to buzz into class after an extended orgy and, by some miracle of optics or sheer luck, pass quiz after quiz. Only a special person could, for four years straight, con professors into extending deadlines and dropping grades. It is likely that you will actually be more prepared for the "real" world than those of your counterparts who actually worked for their degrees.

In this same boat are those freshmen who washed out after their first two semesters of university life. It's no dishonor, for you have gained a priceless degree in the ways of the world. Experience, that is your sheepskin.

You know now, for instance, all the rules to quarters, spit, and other socially important rituals. You now know the difference between a hangover from cheap draft beer, and that of hard liquor. You are fully aware of the importance of personal happiness, as opposed to trying to satisfy someone else (like, I don't know, parents?).

Don't be too concerned about this situation though. You are getting a three year head start on your fellow freshmen who managed to eek out an acceptable GPA and move into the land of the sophomore. You'll have three years experience in the work force when they will just be graduating. Of course, you probably won't be vying for the same jobs anyway.

Ah, and you freshmen are moving up, how does it feel? You pulled through what many people call the hardest year of college.

Well, many people also call the sophomore year the hardest, but we'll just ignore them right now. Then there is the junior year, when many otherwise promising students suddenly develop burnout and decide they need to get out. At least they usually come back... in ten or fifteen years. But, other than that, you have a lot to look forward to. You are through the initiation now, it's time to start your college career in earnest.

Moving back up the scale to the juniors, congratulations on entering what is sure to be the most interesting and rewarding two years of your lives. Oh yes, I said two years. No one finishes their senior year on time any more. If you think you are going to be the exception, just wait. They'll find some way to require an extra 15 hours for your major. Or else you'll suddenly decide that this major is not for you.

At any rate, three semesters as a senior is good, four is to be expected, and don't be surprised if you have to throw in some summer school too.

But all this is okay. You are going to be seniors now. You are at the top of the totem pole (except for those grad students, but who counts them anyway?). You can pre-register while there are still classes left. You know the professors by their first names. All you have left are "zip" courses, electives you never thought about until the last minute.

Life is going to be pretty good. You might even get a new suit so you can start interviewing for a future career. Yep, life in the short runs.

Speaking of short shift, I did not forget about you sophomores rising to become juniors. It's just that you are still stuck in the middle. It's no big deal. Next year, at this time, you might be the juniors about to become seniors. Until then, just be happy to be here. Okay?

And I'm happy to have been here. Who knows, you may hear this drowsy voice again next fall. My friend will be back. Perhaps I'll join him.

Later!
Phillip Loughlin, at least in regard to the freshman year stuff, knows of what he speaks. At least the parts he can remember.

Stillpoint With Bob Haywood Take Time To Finish Up Your Business

As the school year comes to a close, I find one of those "life principles" that I value coming to mind. My principle is that, "We should do all that we can to leave as little unfinished business as possible."

It was in my study of Gestalt Therapy that I discovered the notion of Unfinished Business. It seems that we have an innate tendency to want things finished. If there are events that happened in our past that we find ourselves still thinking about or worrying about or feeling guilty about, then we are experiencing Unfinished Business.

The problem is that Unfinished Business remains a part of the present context of our lives and uses up energy that would be available to us if we could bring some kind of closure to these events.

There is an apocryphal story about the great composer Bach that tells how one evening after he had gone to bed, a guest was playing his piano down stairs and played through a beautiful piece all the way up to the end, but for some reason stopped before the conclusion. Bach tossed and turned in his bed and finally, got up, marched down stairs to his home, went back and went to bed. That's Unfinished Business.

This school year is coming to a conclusion for you. Some of you will be graduating and moving on to a whole new dimension of your lives. Some of you have significant friendships that may be coming to an end or, at least, facing some change.

Others can look back to some very significant experiences during this year that have shaped you and your development. There have been people that have been important to you.

One of the things that you can do for yourself is to give yourself some time before your leave to think about the events and the people that have been a part of your life during your time here at UNCW.

If you are graduating, you may simply want to walk around to the various buildings and remember the various things that have gone on in them as a way of bringing them to a close. If there are people in your life that were important, you may want to push yourself to find a way to say "Thank you" or "I appreciate you."

The issue is not insignificant, for it really can be an important life issue to move throughout our life seeking feelings of being finished and working to bring about appropriate kinds of closure to the various dimensions of our life.

In my work with Hospice, I have discovered how important it is to help people move to and through the experiences of their death or the death of a loved one leaving as little Unfinished Business as possible.

How good it is when people can finish their life and not have a feeling like, "Oh, I wish I had done so and so," or "I wish I had told him how much I loved him."

Take some time. Make sure you have a sense of being finished, a sense of completeness, about all the various dimensions of your life as you leave this place to move on into whatever your future may hold for you.

Here Is The Year In Review

I overheard (eavesdropped) a conversation the other day that brought to my attention the ever-growing levels of cluelessness that can be found lurking the halls of UNCW.

The conversation was between two surly/skater/red-neck looking guys in the hardbound journals section of Randall Library. Normally I would not be found anywhere near the hardbound journals section of Randall library, for fear that someone would think I was actually doing some sort of research, but of course this is almost the last week of class.

Anyhow, one of the woolly creatures said to the other, "Hey man, have you been to the new Mad Monk?"

"Dude, what do you mean 'New Mad Monk'? Why did they close the old one?"

"Aw Dude. It burned down last semester in a big fire, dude. Dude, you should like read The Seahawk or something; you're clueless, dude."

The conversation then became more perverted and had absolutely nothing to do with the topic at hand. And speaking of the topic at hand, I would like to present for your reading enjoyment, my Ten Most Important Earth Shattering Events of The Past School Year.

#1) September 5, 1991 -- NoBull Prize winning columnist Phil Smith writes his first column in The Seahawk in which he lambasted the UNCW Student Bookstore and the Campus Police, receiving acclaim from students across the nation (or at least from a few of his friends).

#2) October 5, 1991 -- UNCW officials announce that there will be minors at UNCW within the next few years. Several confused students go to the administration to find out what exactly we were going to mine and if they could get a job application. In an unrelated story, NoBull Prize winning columnist Phil Smith informs students on how to avoid the upcoming UNCW Parent's Weekend. The next week, he receives a letter from his parents' lawyer, informing him that he has been disowned.

#3) October 17, 1991 -- Millions of Americans, as well as a few UNCW students, become so fed up with watching how after hour of the Clarence Thomas confirmation hearings that there is a rush on the video rental stores. Things become so bad that titles such as Ishtar are selling out. As usual, NoBull Prize winning columnist Phil Smith gives his interpretation and analysis of the proceedings. Something he says (I believe it was a crack on South Carolina) infuriates a previously loyal reader (Mr. Russell, I DID GET TIE LAST WORD) so much that he writes a nasty letter to The Seahawk and cancels his subscription.

#4) November 20, 1991 -- The Mad Monk, a popular Wilmington nightclub which had been at its Market Street location for eight years, was destroyed by an alleged arsonist. Thousands of UNCW students, dressed in black "Raised By Cows" tee-shirts, line Market street for days, partly in mourning but mostly because they had nowhere else to go.

#5) December 5, 1991 -- The last issue of The Seahawk for the year. Armed guards (off-duty UNCW rental cops) are posted at newspaper racks to ensure that students only take one copy of The Seahawk. Violent riots and massive protests are held because, as supplies run out, some students are unable to get a copy of NoBull Prize winning columnist Phil Smith's Twins the Night Before Finals. In other news, SCHOOL IS OVER!!! Thousands of UNCW students depart for home, eager for a break, but weary of the coming report cards.

#6) January 16, 1992 -- Due to a deepening recession, steadily increasing textbook prices, and a nasty letter from the Dean, many students are unable to return to UNCW to continue their educations. Many transfer to the James Sprunt Community College where they take "Swine Management Technology" (I kid you not) and go on to be successful pig farmers. Those who are fortunate enough to return to UNCW will most likely earn some sort of Bachelor's degree and, due to the deepening recession, spend the rest of their lives looking for jobs.

#7) February 20, 1992 -- A disgruntled reader, whose name shall remain "Lisa Kellogg," writes a letter to the editor of The Seahawk because she has been offended by the lewd and insensitive comments about Campus cops, made by (who else) NoBull Prize winning columnist Phil Smith in a column the previous week. Smith, distraught over the grief he had caused, immediately went to UNCW Campus Police Headquarters to turn himself in. But all he found there was a note on the door which read, "Gone to Krispy Kreme. Will be back in a minute."

#8) March, 1992 -- This is the month for underdogs. Jerry Brown actually wins a state primary (Connecticut, complete with 0.4 delegates). In a related story, Joe Mitchell is voted in as president of the UNCW Student Government Association, but is disqualified after it was alleged that he was wearing illegal underwear in the SGA office while the election was still in progress.

#9) April, 1992 -- The University of New Jersey at Duke somehow manages to win its second national basketball championship, but was soon disqualified based on allegations that senior center Christian Laettner was wearing illegal underwear when they met in secret and disqualified Mitchell.

#10) May, 1992 -- NoBull Prize winning columnist Phil Smith is relaxing on the beach after enduring his second year of school. He is apprehended by a group of vigilante Campus Police officers and beaten over the head with a stack of newspapers. The police turn him over to the UNCW bookstore manager, who beats him over the head with overpriced textbooks. He is then handed over to various other campus organizations and individuals who just couldn't take a joke. But don't worry... because in August, 1992 -- NoBull prize winning columnist Phil Smith returns.

Have a great summer fellow students and esteemed professors (last chance to brown-nose). And congratulations to all of the graduates. Until next time... keep your mind out of the gutter and your head out of the toilet. Phil Smith is quite a macho man -- he fights fires for fun. Look for him under "October" in the 1993 edition of the "Men of the VFD Calendar."

WLOZ Should Be Saved

Hello there Wilmington! For the past five years the university and the community of Wilmington have been bombarded by the hideous sounds of many shotguns and an equally subversive deluge of alternative music.

But the times are changing, and as the Cheesques, Berlin Wall, the Iron Curtain and numerous other landmarks of social decay and censorship are destroyed, WLOZ, UNCW's campus radio station, will be removed from our sights.

No, this isn't a joke -- but rather a slightly sentimental Hallmark notation sent to a disenfranchised supporter of the arts by a tight-lipped patron.

In this case the supposed patron would be the SGA, UNCW's local branch of the House of Representatives, a disinterested, apathetic, group of young Buchanans and gerrymanders who have taken it upon themselves to decide how to best allocate the student body's money.

What might I be talking about? News, folks. News that has conveniently been made in the last week of classes.

Around 4:30 p.m., on Monday, April 20th, the Student Government Association of UNCW (an organization of only some fifty odd people), decided to cut funding of the Student Media Board by 32 percent.

So how will this effect the Media Board and the UNCW's students? One word -- drastically.

The Media Board includes the news paper, The Seahawk, the only literary journal published for and by UNCW students, The Atlantis; and what appears to be the university's only daily link with the Wilmington community, WLOZ, the campus radio station.

The funding cut, which amounts roughly to $20,000, means that one of the three organizations mentioned above will have to be eliminated from this campus.

It won't be The Seahawk. Chancellor Leutze and the rest of the UNCW administration would hopefully find that a bit... heavy handed.

The Atlantis, the organization with the smallest budget ($9,000) will probably be allowed a grace period of a year to ride out the current funding cut, until another comes along. But WLOZ, that's quite another story.

Currently, as of this year's spread sheet, WLOZ needs roughly $19,000 to operate effectively. Not a hell of a lot when you consider that's less than three dollars per student a year.

So what's the problem, right? Well, thanks to the SGA meeting on Monday, WLOZ has become the focus for a much larger issue concerning the allocation of student funds and an even uglier issue: the biased representation of the student body by a few power-hungry students.

The Student Government should, hypothetically, more or less represent the diversified interests of this state institution. Therefore I find it hard to understand why the SGA meeting, attended by ample representatives of the radio station, denied the privilege of organization members to state and defend their case against the proposed funding cuts.

And how a group of some fifty people, who were voted into office by only 600 students, systematically ignored the petitions that WLOZ supporters had painstakingly gotten signed by over 1,700 students and community members (during a week that saw many students leave for home or vacation, with the three day Easter hiatus).

And how in all its appointed eminence and with the greatest of ease, the SGA voted the campus radio station, WLOZ, out of existence.

The irony of the situation is clear. A group of people voted in by 600, ignored the prompts of 1700 -- A number that invariably would have been larger had not the SGA waited till the final two weeks of school to move on their proposal.

The denial of money to the Media Board by the SGA does not surprise me. After all, student government is made of students playing politicians, and what motivates politicians? Money.

Now where is that extra $20,000 or so going if not to The Seahawk, Atlantis, and WLOZ? Most likely into the coffers of the SGA, where it will be used to support various clubs and organizations. Is not the campus radio station a legitimate organization? Should not the students themselves be able to decide that?

What is the hidden agenda, the motivation, behind the SGA's move to deny the Media board enough money to run the three major vehicles of freedom of expression on this campus?

Could they be that narrow-minded to believe that simply because the majority of their members don't utilize the campus radio station, it does not properly facilitate the needs of other members of the student body?

I've always understood the student government's role pertaining to protecting the interests of the minorities as well as the majorities cause; to represent all students.

Obviously, as a Mr. Robert Zimmerman related to us over twenty years ago, "the times are a changing".

Let us just hope we can take things into our own hands and do something about it. Let's face it, if we as students can't make government work for us, especially at the university level, how can we ever hope to effect change once we are out of school and truly on our own?

We don't have to be idle while politicians of any sort decide how our money or free time will be spent. Or do we?

Two Days Before Exams
Don't Screw "Em Up

"YEAH... RIGHT"

By RaMona Hupp
Arts & Entertainment Editor

If Cleanliness Is Next To Godliness, I'll Do Fine On My Exams

It never ceases to amaze me the lengths I go to in the name of procrastination. It's been a process refining itself in my life since high school. Over the years it has so subtly fine-tuned itself that I'm not even aware that I'm doing it.

It suddenly sneaks up during exam periods — one day I'll be writing detailed memos reminding myself of the impending tests and papers, and the next thing I know, I'm giving my bathroom a spit shine an Army sergeant would cry over. It's inevitable and inexplicable: come exam time, my place is spotless.

I start out in earnest, with books in hand and ample caffeine. But then a strange phenomenon occurs. The desk seems distractingly messy, and the atmosphere is all but filled with diversions.

After disconnecting the cable from my television, my attention turns to the light above my desk, which under normal circumstances shines adequately enough, but now seems disgustingly filthy. And suddenly I'm vigorously cleaning the dust and kamikaze bugs that have accumulated since the last exam period.

This wouldn't be so time consuming except for the fact that the light then becomes so bright that it must be redirected over the text in such a way so that its gleam doesn't bounce off the page and unduly strain my eyes — which, of course, means that I have to rearrange my entire studying area — which, of course, means the whole desk must be practically reassembled and the whole room rearranged. O-o-h-h, the perils of studying.

After the desk has been reassembled, cleaned, dusted, moved to a new location (and waxed, if need be — depending on the severity of the exam) then, and only then can I truly begin to effectively study. But, of course, one cannot study in dirty clothes (actually I can, but I'm trying to behave the point). After cleaning every item I own, separating them by seasons, and making a sizable donation to Goodwill, I feel ready to spend the remaining time (about two hours) doing what I should have been doing all along — studying — right after I wash and wax all the floors.

Perhaps my true calling was to be a maid. Yeah... right.

The Musical Sanctuary Is Within Walking Distance

BY SHANNON DAVIS
Entertainment Writer

The Mad Monk is back! Our wonderful musical sanctuary is finally back, and it's stronger and better than before. The Monk's new location is in the Marketplace Mall, a few doors from Club New Zoo.

The severe sufferers of M.W.S. (Monk Withdrawal Syndrome) were very skeptical of how the Monk would feel about living so close to a zoo. But I think the Monk will still have its followers crawling out of the woodwork despite its location.

The Monk opened Wednesday, April 15 with JOHNNY QUEST and THE BUZZ JUNKIES. Each band gave a performance that did the Monk justice. JOHNNY QUEST even shot some film footage for an MTV video.

Inside the new, but familiar bar are the same surroundings we were all used to. It looks just like the old one (same wood look and lay out), just bigger and nicer. The stage is a little bigger and the mosh pit a little smaller, but that didn't stop the happy-go-lucky moshers from claiming their lost territory.

The only major drawback was that the new Monk doesn't have the patio area like the old location. There's nowhere to walk around outside, except the parking lot.

This summer the Monk will be an enjoyable hangout, especially for those of us who live in the area, and can walk there on hot summer nights.

This has been a great year. Thanks for reading my column, and I'll see you this summer at the Monk.

After a four year absence, Shannon Wyatt Smith will be performing original material on the piano and guitar at the Center Stage Cafe, on Thursday, April 30, from noon until 1 p.m. The event is free.

Take A Piece Of Europa, Europa Home With, Rent It Today

BY ZACHARY BISACKY
Movie Reviewer

Whenever a movie about one of the World Wars is made these days, it's typically met with scoffing, repugnant looks. Not because a lot of violence is expected, but because a dull, three-hour summary of the war's highlights, narrated by someone with the charisma of Paul Tsongas, is expected. It's assumed that it will be presented in documentary format, incorporating none of the imaginative ingredients that a narrative style can offer.

Well, in most cases these assumptions would be perfectly correct; except in the case of Europa, Europa, the wonderful film by Polish director Agnieszka Holland.

The movie is an incredible survival story based on the memoirs of Solomon Perel, a German Jew who spent much of WW II passing for Aryan in an elite Hitler youth academy.

It's fast paced, moving from one powerful scene to the next, never pausing to evaluate its hero's instinctive decisions of survival; furthermore, it allows the ironies of his situation to unfold around him in a light, often humorous manner.

In one scene, Solly (played by a brilliant young actor, Marco Hofschneider) privately begins practicing his "Sig Heils" in front of a mirror. After militantly knocking his heels together, while thrusting his arm out, he breaks into a playful, rhythmic waltz. By eliminating that isolated, somber feeling most war movies have, and incorporating instead Solly's boyish intuition, Europa, Europa makes us feel passionate and involved.

The movie begins with his family's flight from the Nazis in 1938, the same night as Solly's Bur Mitvah. They flee to Poland, but his father, fearing the Germans will invade there too, sends Solly and his brother, Isaac, further east. The two are separated and Solly ends up in the Soviet Union, where he's taken into a Communist school.

Two years later, when the Wehrmacht invades Russia and take him captive, he tells them his name is Joseph Peters, a "pure" German — an Aryan who has lost his parents in the war and was taken in by a Russian orphanage. Believing his story, the Nazis admit him into their ranks as soldier and translator.

Tension builds from there on, as he now must be constantly aware of the one thing that could reveal his Jewish heritage — his circumsized penis (which he painfully discovers is irreversible).

Concealing this physical evidence becomes even more difficult when a heroic deed at the front lands him in the elite Hitler academy. At the school, the Nazis are training students how to recognize Jews by their physical and emotional differences. Yet, ironically enough, Solly is sitting right under their noses.

In one humorous scene, a Nazi instructor measures Solly's skull and checks his eyes in front of the classroom only to conclude that, "although his race has mixed in the past, he's not the Nordic type, one can clearly see that he is of Aryan descent."

Unlike other films that approach war from the impassioned outside, forcing us to guess what life was like, Europa, Europa brings us into it on a personal, more human level. This is the reason it's one of the best films of the year — it makes us feel.

TV Trivia Been Getting The Best Of You?

BY BETTELOU PETERSON
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

Q. What has become of Edward James Olmos? I liked his strength of character in "Miami Vice." It's a shame he isn't seen anymore. — G.S., Zephyrhills, Fla.

A. Olmos has moved onward and upward into feature films. The latest, "American Me," is now in theaters.

Q. Give me some information on Dick Clark. He was on "American Bandstand" and "$25,000 Pyramid." Is he doing anything now? Is he married and does he have children? Where does he live? — D.M., Grand Forks, N.D.

A. Clark, 63, is a very busy man. He heads a multi-million dollar production company (movies/TV/stage shows), Dick Clark Productions Inc., as well as doing an occasional hosting job. On May 13, he'll be host, as well as executive producer, of the "American Bandstand 40th Anniversary Special" on ABC. It'll be a gathering of pop stars, many of whom had their first TV outing on "Bandstand." Clark has been married three times and has three children from his first two marriages.

Q. I'm visiting California this summer and would like to visit the Cabot Cove location of "Murder, She Wrote." Where in California is it? — C.H., West Bloomfield, Mich.

A. Mendocino, north of San Francisco, has doubled for Cabot Cove, Maine. But although CBS has talked Angela Lansbury into a ninth season of the show next year, don't expect to see any filming in the town. Most of "Murder" is filmed on the Universal studios lot. Mendocino is a pretty town and artists' colony worth visiting without any TV connection.

Q. Help resolve a dispute: In the final round of "Jeopardy," when Alex Trebek announces the final category, do the contestants enter their wagers then or after the answer is given? — T.O., West Berlin, N.J.

A. Listen and watch carefully. Trebek makes it plain that the wagers are placed after the category is announced, before the final Jeopardy answer is revealed. (For the uninitiated: In "Jeopardy," the answers are given and contestants must come up with the question.)

Q. "Dr. Who" didn't end in 1985. In 1986, it went on hiatus for a year, then returned in 1987 with a new, seventh doctor, Sylvester McCoy. The show did end in 1989 when the BBC shut down its drama department. Since then, we "Who" fans have been hanging on the hope it will be revived. But, personally, I don't hold out much hope. — M.A., Salem, Ore.

A. Thanks for the "Who" update.

Q. Where can I write to the cast of "Saturday Night Live"? — D.K., Romeo, Mich.

A. NBC-TV, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York, N.Y.

Q. What can you tell me about Mark DeCarlo, host of "Studs"? Where is he from? Marital status, age, how did he get his start? — L.C., North Hollywood, Calif.

A. DeCarlo is 29, Chicago-born and single. He graduated from UCLA and made his TV debut in 1985 as a contestant on "Sale of the Century," where he picked up $115,000. He was part of a comedy group, then was an interviewer on a cable movie channel before landing on the eyebrow-lifting syndicated game show.

Q. What ever became of Jim Hutton of "Ellery Queen," "Jon Provost of 'Lassie' and Billy Mumy of 'Lost in Space'" — F.F.B., Tucson, Ariz.

A. Hutton died in 1979. Provost, now 43, has dropped out of show business and has been selling real estate in California. Mumy, now 38, has continued acting, plays with a rock band and writes for Marvel Comics.

AIDS Ad Stirs Up Emotions

BY CHERYL CURRY
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

Like most proud parents, Bill and Kay Kirby are only too glad to show a few snapshots of their son, David.

Gathered in the living room of their modest home in Stafford, Ohio — a small town south of Columbus — the Kirbys go through their albums, passing around the best of their collection.

David as a baby grinning in his car seat. David as a young boy holding a string of catfish caught one warm summer day years ago.

Then they share the photo that brings them the most pain yet — the picture of David moments before his death at the age of 32.

You may have seen it. David is frozen in time in the moment last May when his family knows he has lost his four-year battle with AIDS. He lies in bed in the agonized embrace of his father, Bill. At his bedside is his sister, Susan, and niece, Sarah.

"I'm not really comfortable with the photo," said Bill Kirby, a 56-year-old quality control clerk at United Parcel Service in Akron, Ohio. "When I look at that picture, it brings back all that heartache. Until this winter, I couldn't even look at it without crying."

Despite the pain, Kirby and his wife, Kay, agreed to let Italian clothing giant Benetton use the photo in its advertisements in magazines around the world. In the bottom right corner of this stark photograph are the words: United Colors of Benetton.

Since Benetton began its campaign last month, some AIDS activists and even advertising critics have condemned what they saw as a large company's gratuitous commercial use of a tragic image.

To the Kirbys, the startling photo illustrates how they came to know their son as an adult and how they want the world to remember him — as a man who tried to educate people by sharing the horrors AIDS inflicts on its victims.

The Kirbys say the photo graphically informs people about how powerful a supportive family can be for AIDS sufferers.

"It's what David would have wanted," said Kay Kirby, 54, who works as a housekeeper at a church in Columbus. "You can see the family anguish, and people need to know this is reality."

She quickly adds the message she wants people to get: "It's a great dream."

In the final years of his life, David took up the cause of educating people about AIDS. He spoke to health care workers, civic groups and schoolteachers about how the disease is spread and how to avoid getting it.

"David wanted to put a face on AIDS," said Barb Cordle, a volunteer nurse who cared for David until his death at the Pater-Noster House, an AIDS hospice in Columbus. "He wanted to eliminate deep-seated fears against people with AIDS and against homosexuals."

In a letter to Interview magazine, Cordle wrote: "The picture (in the ad) has done more to soften people's hearts on the AIDS issue than any other I have ever seen. You can't look at that picture and hate a person with AIDS. You just can't."

David's parents are reluctant to say whether their son was gay, stressing it doesn't matter.

"What's important is he was a person and people who are dying need to feel loved," said Kay Kirby. "Nobody should have to die alone."

David's story is unusual, Cordle said, because while many parents abandon children who get AIDS, the Kirbys developed a special bond and pulled closer together as a family.

"They were not the Brady Bunch; they were just a regular family that had their problems," Cordle said. "But you can see in the photo how strong-willed and supportive they became."

It was not always that way. Before David contracted AIDS, Bill and Kay Kirby had fallen out of touch with their son, who had left home at 18 and didn't return until he came home to die.

Like many teen-agers, David had been eager to break away and move out on his own. In his last year of high school, the young boy who loved to fish and spend time outdoors suddenly dropped out of school just weeks before graduation.

"We had some good and bad times," said Bill Kirby. "We went through a period where he just needed to get away."

For a few years, David lived with a relative in Marion, Ohio, before packing up one day in 1980 and moving to California.

The Kirbys knew little of their son's life there, only what they picked up from occasional phone conversations with him.

They knew he worked various odd jobs as a salesman and security guard and lived somewhere near Los Angeles.

Then, one snowy winter day in early 1986, the 29-year-old man phoned his mother.

"It was David," he asked if he could come home," said Kay.

David was nervous and apprehensive. He said he was scared because his best friend had just died of AIDS.

The Kirbys welcomed their son into their home in Stafford, a tiny town that boasts one general store, two churches, a post office and a cemetery.

It was in the town of 94 residents that David learned the painful lesson of how scornful and ignorant people can mistreat victims of AIDS.

When David first got sick — and people learned he had AIDS — the emergency crew who had rushed him to the hospital later burned all the ambulance's contents. Soon after, a rumor quickly spread among area schoolchildren that an AIDS monster was in town.

"It was humiliating and degrading, like he was a leper and nobody wanted to be near him," Kay said. "We just tried to let him know we were here for him."

The town became more tolerant largely because David made an effort to talk to people about AIDS — sometimes walking door-to-door trying to calm their fears.

It was David who wanted his boat with AIDS told through pictures.

He noticed a graduate student from Ohio University taking photos of other patients in the hospice where he stayed during his final months of life. He asked her to take photos of him.

"I felt honored to be able to do this for him and his family," said Therese Frare, who now works as a free-lance photographer in Seattle.

After the photo appeared in Life magazine, Frare was contacted by Benetton about using the photo in its ad campaign.

Frare, in turn, contacted the Kirbys, who agreed that David would have enthusiastically supported the idea of reaching thousands of people with his AIDS message.

"It's a sad image, but it's very moving. It really conveys the Kirbys' belief that you can't turn away your kids — you have to accept them no matter what," Frare said.

The message was conveyed — not by Life magazine but by the ads.

"When it ran in Life, we didn't hear from anyone," said Kay Kirby. Since the ad ran, they've heard from hundreds of people, by phone and by letter.

Benetton executives say they hope the ad will eventually be viewed by 1 billion people worldwide.

People in the News...

BY CHERYL LEVENBROWN
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

Remember that refreshingly candid bottom-line line from Marilyn Quayle about why she wrote "Embrace the Serpent"? New York Post gossip columnist Cindy Adams quoted the vice president's wife last week as saying: "For money. We need money. ... We have a whole pack of kids who will need college. ... I'd make six figures as a lawyer if I hadn't had to give up my career. For now it's the only way I know to make money."

Now, according to the Washington Post, Quayle is heavy into denial about the quote.

"It was more fiction than 'Embrace the Serpent,'" the second lady's spokeswoman said. "Besides, everyone in Washington knows a six-figure salary is too low."

The gossip scribe, however, stands firm: "I think that I have been a writer longer than Mrs. Quayle," Adams says. "And I do not make mistakes. ... The substance is exact. ... (Besides) it's nice to know she's almost human. Everybody needs money."

Dan Quayle, meanwhile, whose pressing duties of office this week included blowing the whistle at the annual White House Easter Egg Roll, turned down a recent request from the National Kidney Foundation's New York-New Jersey chapter to contribute a doodle for a charity auction. Instead, People magazine says, the vice president's office sent out an autographed photo, with a note regretfully explaining that "due to his hectic schedule the Vice President cannot afford you a doodle."

Comedy Central, a cable TV network, isn't joking about its salute to Johnny Carson. When Carson bows out May 22 after 30 years on NBC's "Tonight," he won't have any competition from Comedy Central during his farewell show. "We're going dark," a network spokesman said Tuesday. "We're probably going to put up a slate that says something like, 'We're watching Johnny Carson's last show and so should you.'"

CBS sportscaster Pat Summerall, 61, who has admitted to being "the last guy out of the bar" one too many times, has taken a leave of absence and checked into the Betty Ford Clinic in Rancho Mirage, Calif., reportedly for alcoholism. Agent Bob Rosen would say only that it was "purely a personal problem."

ABC News President Rooney Arledge, 60, will undergo surgery today for prostate cancer. The network exec "expects to be in close touch involved in the day-to-day operations" during his medical leave, an ABC News spokeswoman says.

QUOTE-UNQUOTE

— "There is green shag carpet on the ceiling and walls as well as on the floor — a decorating touch inspired, perhaps, by the interiors of vans." — a description of the Jungle Room of Elvis Presley's home and final resting place, Graceland, which is on the National Register of Historic Places, in an essay in the May-June issue of Historic Preservation magazine.

— "The crazy boss can have five faces: the vicious bully, the sniveling paranoid, the self-obsessed narcissist, the alternating fascist/wimp/bureaucracy and the chronic disaster hunter. Very often bullies have wimps just above them. One has only to contemplate the role of John Sununu in the original Bush White House. Publicly tender-minded folks like George Bush don't necessarily want to be the ones to get slamming over people with bulldozers. Sununu's function was to kick butt and take names. Ronald Reagan is another example of the wimp. If you think of Harry Truman's adage 'The buck stops here,' Reagan's version would be: 'The buck? I never even saw the buck. Let me know when it comes into the room.' " — "Crazy Bosses" author Stanley Bing, in Newsweek.

— "First time in my life I was happy there was a zero next to my name in the box score." — Rep. Tom McMillen, D-Md., a former pro basketball player, asked on New York's WFAN sports radio about the House bank scandal.

Game Over

Well, it's over. This is it. The end. The ball game. The last call. The final curtain. The whole ball of wax. All she wrote. The whole shebang. The....

Uh, sorry. I couldn't help myself. I was trying to squeeze every sports cliché I could in this column. You see it's my final, last, close-out, never to repeat again....

Shoot! There I go again. You'll have to excuse me. I'm suffering from a major reality check. Has it really been four years already?

Four years of parrying. Four years of bar hopping. Four years of beer swilling, concert jamming, Frisbee playing, and oh, yes, studying too.

I'm not too sure of that last one though. Me graduating. Being responsible for my actions. Actually being offered money for my writing!!!!

Nah, someone made a mistake. Of course, that's what my parents have been telling me for the last 21 years.

Four years? Jeppers! Has it been that long? Wow. When I entered this university in 1988 George Bush was president, the Twins had captured the World Series in October, and the Redskins were the Super Bowl champions. Now as I leave George Bush is president, the Twins are defending Series champs, and the Redskins are....

Hey, wait a minute this is too weird. Speaking of strange happenings. Nothing was as nutty how I landed this job. I walked in the office.

Well, no, it wasn't that easy but I was asked only one question by, then sports editor, Chris Wright. "Did I know anything about soccer."

I said yes and I was hired on the spot. Of course, hired here is relative term, since you aren't paid or offered a company car, any medical insurance, or free membership to a health club. But that didn't stop me. Lucky you, right?

I recall too, the first story I wrote. It was five notebook pages long and full of biased pro-Seahawk opinions. It was reduced to two paragraphs for the publication.

Humbling wasn't the word for it, but I learned from the attempt as I did after every publication of The Seahawk over the last four years.

Four years. Hey, I'll be the first to admit that my work still could use improvement. I've made my share of mistakes over the last four years from misspelled names to factual errors. This job wasn't always easy. Yet, I wouldn't trade the experience or the comradeship shared between staff members for Ed McMahon and all his Publishing Clearing House Millions.

Well, not for Ed anyway. The agonizing primal screams from frustrated enraged editors and reporters will be hard to erase from my mind. The exhausting, glue sniffing hours spent laying out and pasting stories to a dummy page will be cherished also.

I'll miss the sports and the athletes here as well. Seahawk teams have captured conference titles, fallen apart, and taken first steps over the last four years.

The cross-country and track teams made their debuts in '88 and are continuing to run strong. The women's swim team, who finally fielded a full squad, posted their best record ever, a beautiful 9-2 season.

New club teams lacrosse and water-skiing posted similar successes in their inaugural season.

Other sports here have remained consistently strong. The women's volleyball posted four 20 win seasons. The baseball squad is usually battling for the conference title come early May. And what more can I say about Ultimate Frisbee teams.

Both the men's and women's squads, the Seamen and Seaweed, have remain ranked in the top five nationally in their sport.

But I think I miss the athletes here most of all. You could always talk to the—a fact one couldn't say about sports personalities at other institutions. Seahawk athletes, for the most part, were down-to-earth and sociable.

Yes, I'll miss both the sports and the athletes here.

I hope that you, the readers, never have to. As I charge the sports reporting duties to my assistant editor, a person I feel has enormous writing potential, I sincerely wish that you never stop being happy, angry, sad, or curious about a piece of writing from this office.

If a writer can make you feel or think something, anything, he or she has done their job.

I hope you sensed something from my writing every week, for it was my only goal. Whether you agree with what I said or not is of little consequence. The point is that you read what was there and react to it. And that's all any writer can ask.

A newspaper, especially a college newspaper, is a place where ideas are freely exchanged. I'm happy that in four years of writing here at The Seahawk, I was able to exchange one or two ideas with you.

Well, that's the sporting news. And I am out of here.

Spartans Spear Seahawks, Twice

BY PATRICK FOWLER
Sports Editor

When opportunity knocks at your door, you have to take advantage of it.

The UNCW Seahawks baseball team didn't. The UNC-Greensboro Spartans club did. The result was two home losses, 7-3 and 7-6, and more headaches for UNCW head coach Mark Scalf.

"We have yet to learn how to close a game," Scalf said. "We missed some signs on the bases. Our pitchers are having trouble hitting their location and our hitting is not consistent. We have only four out of nine guys hitting well."

UNCW (18-30) with the two losses has dropped four of its last five contests. The Seahawks left 13 men on base over the weekend and are hitting just .253 as a team, .252 with runners in scoring position.

UNCW fielders and pitchers had an equally rough two days. The two combined for three errors and four wild pitches.

Saturday the Spartans (17-21) tagged UNCW starter Brian Smith (3-7) for six runs on seven hits. First baseman Joey DeAngelis and leftfielder Keith Glauber each had two hits and one r.b.i.

The Spartans struck for three runs in the third on three singles by DeAngelis, catcher Dan Schneider and Glauber two batters later. An error by UNCW third baseman Eric Oglesby allowed the third run to cross the plate.

The Seahawks cut the lead to one in the fifth on rightfielder Corey Broome's lead-off triple and singles by Jason Wilkes and Kevin Hooker.

However, that would be as close as UNCW would get. The Spartans added insurance runs in the sixth, seventh, and eighth. The back-breaking runs came in the seventh on three straight hits and a wild pitch.

UNCW sophomore pitcher Andy Dvorch (2-1) took the win giving up only two runs in seven hits with one strikeout. Smith took the loss.

"We didn't do a good job pitching today," Scalf said. "We also left too many men on base."

On Sunday The Seahawks beat themselves. UNCW blew a one-run lead in the ninth when Glauber singled to lead-off the inning and first baseman Chris McBride failed to tag Spartan runner Steve Mayczyk after misplaying a routine grounder.

The miscue proved costly as two outs later UNCW freshman Scott Young ripped a triple down the right foul line. Both Spartan runners scored on the hit. Rightfielder Touka Maynor then singled in Young and later scored as DeAngelis' doubled to left.

When the Seahawks finally got the third out, four Spartans' runs had crossed the plate. The Seahawks added two runs in the ninth to close the gap to one but still lost 7-6.

McBride's miscue may have proved less deadly if the UNCW had been able to capitalize on a bases loaded opportunity in the bottom of the seventh.

And again it was McBride who came out on the short end.

UNCW pitcher Scott Danna faced a sure run-scoring situation in the seventh when McBride stepped to the plate with no outs showing and all three bases occupied.

However, Danna spoiled the potential run rally by staring the Seahawk's blast up the middle and fired the ball back to the plate for the forced out. Spartan catcher Schneider completed the double play by throwing out McBride at first. Danna then struck out Holsaid to end the threat.

"You tell your players to hit it up the middle," Scalf said. "Chris (McBride) hit it hard but unfortunately to the one area where it could hurt. If we hit it anywhere else we score. On the play at first I think Chris just froze."

Close Win

UNCW defeated Campbell University Tuesday night at Brooks Field 6-5. The Seahawks rallied from three runs (6-3) down in the fifth inning to take a one-run lead. Sophomore Brian Baucum pitched four innings of shut-out relief giving up only three hits and striking out five, including the final out with Camel runners on first and third.

SportsBriefs.... Softball Team Loses

The UNCW women's softball team dropped all six of its games at the Frost-Cutler Invitational Tournament last weekend in Chattanooga, Tenn.

The team played the tournament without the services of senior captain Sheri Jernigan. Jernigan suffered a recent back injury and is out for the season. The senior still leads the country in stolen bases with 45 thefts in 46 attempts. Jernigan is also listed ninth nationally in batting percentage with a .478 average.

Active players Luellyn Piver and Missy Whaley are also ranked in the top 20 in softball categories. Whaley holds the 17th batting spot (.446) and Piver is 18th overall in runs batted in with 34 r.b.i's.

UNCW, competing for the first time in the tournament, fell to Furman (2-1), Louisiana Tech (5-1), Georgia Tech (3-1), Southeastern Louisiana (4-2), and South Florida (10-4) in a six-team pool play. The Seahawks' sixth loss came to Sanford (9-0) in the elimination round.

Golfers Excel

UNCW golfer Hugh Harrell finished 11th individually as the Seahawk team tied for seventh in the NCAA District III Golf Tournament in Charlotte.

The Seahawks placed second in the Colonial Athletic Association Championships held April 10-12.

UNCW golfers, led by Harrell's three-round 220 stroke total, posted their best round in the NCAA tournament moving up from ninth place to seventh on the final day.

East Carolina (880) won the tournament. East Tennessee State was second (885) and Old Dominion (898) placed third. Other UNCW golfers finished as follows: Greg Cuthill (75-78-73=226), Scott Croker (75-78-75=228), Lee Watson (78-78-78=234), and J.D. Mann (80-83-82=245).

Trekkers Are First

UNCW track members Doug Liming and Molly Messer captured first place finishes in the South Carolina's Gamecock Invitational Track and Field Meet over the weekend in Columbia, S.C.

Liming, a sophomore, won the men's 800 meter race in a time of 1:57.47. Messer, a senior, took the women's discus event with a throw of 100-11 3/4.

Ultimate Easter Tournament The Seamen Win

BY DAVID BARNHARDT
Staff Writer

The UNCW men's and women's nationally ranked Ultimate Frisbee teams, the Seamen and Seaweed, hosted and one half of their annual Easter Egg Ultimate Tournament this weekend on Brooks Field.

The tournament was open to any Ultimate teams unlike the collegiate Easterns Ultimate Championships held on Brooks two weeks ago.

The result for the men's squad, however was the same. The Seamen captured their first Easter Egg title with a 15-13 win over a split-squad Raleigh-based squad Ring of Fire on Sunday.

The Seamen actually defeated the Ring of Fire twice. UNCW defeated the second squad in the semi-finals also held on Sunday.

The Seaweed had an equally impressive tournament run as well but were unable to play for the tournament title because their Raleigh-based opponent, the Grits, left the tournament a day early.

The Grits defeated the Seaweed, 15-10, on Saturday in round robin play.

"We're peaking at the right time," Seamen senior player Chris Boring said. "We on pace to have a good team come Nationals."

The Nationals Ultimate Frisbee Championships will be held on Memorial Day in Fort Collins, Colorado.

Both Ultimate teams will take part in sectional and regional actions with the top teams qualifying for the national tournament.

Sectionals are being held at East Carolina University in Greenville, Princeton University will host the Regional tournament action.

The Seamen's swarming defense was the key to their victory. The squad held their opponents to seven goals or less through the quarterfinal rounds.

The team began their title march quickly with two quick 15-7 wins. A third straight 15-7 victory over Electric Pig, a semi-professional Washington, D.C.-based team put the Seamen into Sunday semi-finals.

In the semi, the Seamen's swarming defense proved again to be the difference as UNCW won 15-9.

The finals were another story. The Ring of Fire Team added talent players from their first split-squad and pushed the Seamen hard on the field.

However, experience won out as the Seamen won the title, 15-13.

"We have a lot of athletes on this team that are extreme fast and agile," Boring said.

The women's team dominated their early matches on Saturday posting victories over ECU's Helios (15-2), The Discontents (15-1).

It was then the Lady Seahawks suffered their only setback, losing to the Grits club.

The Seaweed defeated Discontents (15-6) and the Helios (15-8) on Sunday after learning the Grits club had departed Saturday evening.

Other UNCW finishers were as follows: Tony Ritchie (2:01.37) finished seventh in the men's 800 meters and Heather Fenton placed sixth in the women's 800 (5:06.20) and seventh in the 1,500 meters (2:27.30).

Netters Are Fifth

The men's and women's tennis teams each finished fifth at the CAA Tournament in Williamsburg, Va.

The Seahawks (14-10, 4-6) lost to William and Mary 5-4 in the opening round in five matches went to three sets. UNCW then defeated James Madison and George Mason by identical 5-3 scores to move up fifth place.

The Lady Seahawks competed in a flight tournament format winning two matches. Adri Darys defeated America's Karen Rodley, 6-3, 6-4. Karly Simmons upset Old Dominion fourth-seed Emily Brandt, 6-2, and 6-2. Both wins came in the first rounds.

Richmond won the men's tournament. William and Mary took the women's crown.

Students celebrate receiving their degrees in nursing. Approximately 824 students graduated May 16 in UNCW's 43rd commencement ceremonies.

824 Graduate In May Commencement

From the office of University Relations.

UNCW graduated approximately 824 men and women on Saturday, May 16, at Trask Coliseum. Of the 824 graduates, 60 received graduate degrees.

Commencement speaker for the 43rd graduation program was Graham Allison, Jr., native of Charlotte, NC and now Douglas Dillon Professor of Government at the John F. Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University. As dean of John F. Kennedy School from 1977-89, Allison led the effort to create a major professional school of government. His teaching and research currently focus on American foreign policy, defense, political economy of transitions to economic and political democracy, and relations between the U.S. and the former Soviet Union.

He is a co-director of the School's Project on Avoiding Nuclear War and his most recent work is a joint effort with economist Gregory Yavlinsky entitled Window of Opportunity: The Great Bargain for Democracy in the Soviet Union. His major work, Essence of Decision, is his attempt to structure an analytic approach to the intricacies of organizations and politics as they affect governmental choices.

Allison has a doctorate in political science from Harvard University and bachelor's and master's degrees from Hertford College, Oxford University. Allison also attended Davidson College. He has served as special advisor to Secretary of Defense Weinberger, director of the Council on Foreign Relations, and is consultant to various departments of government.

Each department held a reception for graduates and their guests following the diploma presentation.

Commencement was a convocation of all graduates, faculty, participants, and guests followed by smaller departmental ceremonies where graduates were personally recognized and presented with their diplomas.

Graham Allison, Jr. acted as commencement speaker.

Cuts, Crowding Force Small Freshman Class

BY JIM CLARK
Editor-in-Chief

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington's 1992 Freshman class had to be limited to between 1200 and 1225 students because of budget cuts, limited classroom space, and the large number of returning students. Also affected by these limitations was the number of transfer students accepted for the Fall session.

"We had to quit accepting applications (for the Fall) on April 30, 1992, because we have too many students," Dr. David Miller, Associate Vice Chancellor/Enrollment Manager for UNCW explained. "At that point, we had received 6,500 applications. Of that 6,500 we have accepted 2,955. Last year, we had received 6,000 applications and were able to accept 2953. We also had to cut the number of accepted transfer students from 950 last year to 575."

The total number of students on campus has also had to be cut, from 8,100 to 7,800, so the university could operate within its budget.

Chancellor James R. Leutze has put in a request to the state to allocate more funds to accommodate the demand.

Each university in the UNC system must not exceed its number of students, as deemed by the Full-Time Equivalency Plan. Last year, UNCW operated 12% over its budget.

Charlie Maimone, Director of Housing and Food Services, says on-campus housing is not a problem. "Only 900 freshmen have signed up for housing, and there is still space available."

He went on to say that available housing is subject to much change by August.

UNCW has also increased its minority enrollment from last year's 196 freshman to this year's 233 accepted minorities.

Smith Named New Greek Advisor

BY HOLLY PRICE
News Editor

After several months of searching, a new Greek advisor has been selected. Robert Smith will fill the position of Assistant Dean of Students July 15. The Greek advisory position is one of Smith's new job descriptions.

Three candidates were interviewed for the position of assistant dean of students. Being Greek advisor was recently added to the assistant dean of students' job title.

In past years, the Greek advisor position has been held by the director of the office of student activities. The decision to make this change was made in February of last year by the UNCW administration.

When the decision to move the Greeks to the dean of students office was made by the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, Dr. William Bryan, many Greeks were upset.

"Dr. Bryan just came in and told us what was going to happen," said Steve Peace, President of Delta Sigma Phi fraternity. "Everybody was upset because we weren't consulted about the change."

GREEK LIFE

As a result of the controversy, administrators asked the Greek system to help in the search for a new assistant dean of students.

The decision to hire Robert Smith was made after the search committee interviewed all three candidates said Ivey Graham, a member of the search committee.

Robert Smith has been the assistant dean of students at DePauw University in Greencastle, Indiana for the last three years.

His primary function there is in Greek Affairs. He directs 13 fraternities and 10 sororities.

Lanita Hanson, the current Greek advisor and director for the student activities office will vacate her advisor position in July, but will continue to work in a transition state through Panhellenic rush in the Fall.

"I will continue to work and help everything change smoothly," she said.

Letter From The Chancellor

Dear Seahawk:

If you are returning or, especially, if you are here for the first time, welcome to campus! UNCW is a very friendly, enlightening, and exciting place. I urge you to take full advantage of the opportunities you have while you live and learn at this excellent institution of higher education.

Classes are demanding and clearly should be your number one priority. Your investment in your courses largely will determine the return that you receive. At the same time, many other worthwhile activities, such as those affiliated with Oceanside ArtsFest, occur on campus throughout the summer and should fit into your schedule.

I look forward to meeting as many of you as I can. Please know that students are welcome to stop by my office anytime and especially during student hours. There is also a Chancellor's Suggestion Box for your use, located in the University Center. Let me know what you think and have a great summer!

With all best wishes,
James R. Leutze

Farmer Attacked By Cows

BY WES SMITH
Chicago Tribune

GRAYMONT, Ill. — To city people, the attack on 77-year-old farmer Martin Duffy might seem like something out of "The Far Side," a comic strip in which animals are often invested with the darker human qualities.

But to livestock farmers who truly know the dark side of barnyard beasts, it was simply a particularly brutal episode in what is a fairly common occurrence.

Cows can be dangerous. Mother cows, in particular. "I've been around cattle all of my life, and it's true, they are just like people, you have to watch them sometimes," said farmer James Garretson.

Garretson and his son Mark were among those who came to the aid of Duffy on Thursday morning after he had been attacked, butted about and knocked unconscious by his own herd of cattle on his farm just outside Graymont in Livingston County, about 110 miles southwest of Chicago.

The lifelong farmer suffered a concussion, broken ribs and numerous cuts and bruises. He was in serious condition Tuesday in the intensive care unit of St. Francis Hospital Medical Center in Peoria, Ill.

Duffy, an elder in a large and prominent central Illinois farm family, had gone into his cow pasture to check on a cow due to deliver a calf when the attack occurred, according to his rescuers.

"Apparently, Martin wanted the cow to move into the barn so she could have the calf in an enclosed area, but she did not want to move, and when he approached her, she kicked him and he must have fallen down," said Mary Jo McSherry, 39, one of the first on the scene.

"At one point, I believe the cow was sort of kneeling on top of him," she added. "These are normally very docile cows. Some of them have been shown in 4-H, I think. But apparently the one that was calving got excited and then the others did too."

McSherry, who, coincidentally — and fortunately — is an operating room nurse at St. Francis in Peoria, lives a few miles from Duffy's farm. She was on her way to take her two young sons and a friend fishing in nearby Rooks Creek when she witnessed the herd of about eight white and brown Simmental cattle attacking Duffy and came to his rescue.

Whose To Blame For The Past 12 Years? We Are.

A three-candidate presidential race, the Earth Summit, abortion, gun-control, race relations, censorship, and education. These topics are not only hotly debated right now, they are also vital to you as a voting citizen.

We at The Seahawk will do our best to provide you with information that will make you a more informed person and an educated voter.

Our main goal will be to provide the best coverage of campus events, as well as events that affect us as college students and the future leaders of this country. Whatever is left of it.

Over the last twelve years, we have watched our government abuse its power, and we have done nothing. Absolutely nothing.

Incumbent politicians are re-elected at too high a rate to justify the complaints we have. Do all incumbents need to be removed from office? No, only the abusive and/or ineffective ones.

How will we know, come November, which politicians are only using their office as a status symbol and which are doing the job they have been elected to perform? By becoming more knowledgeable of their performance.

While the country debates the gun-control, abortion, environment, and cost of medical care issues, politicians don't do a thing.

By making a stand on an issue, a politician will alienate a certain segment of the community and lose votes. Instead, he will "press flesh," kiss babies, and say cute little one-liners that mean absolutely nothing.

We need politicians to debate, discuss, and work toward a common, national goal. We have lost our focus as a country and the only way we can redirect our course is to get involved.

By not relying on the 30-second paid political ads or relying solely on one-minute blurbs given to a story on the news on television for our political information, we stand a better chance of electing politicians who will work for the betterment of our country's future.

It is time for our generation to assume the reigns of control of our future. We have seen what people who won't be around to suffer the consequences of their actions have in mind for us.

The time to assume those reigns is now. How much longer can we wait?

Letter From The President Get Involved With UNCW Activities

Dear Incoming Students,

Welcome to UNCW! Congratulations on your acceptance and decision to come to UNCW. Wonderful! My name is Joe Mitchell and I'm your Student Body President. This campus has many opportunities and goodies for you. I urge you to get involved on campus when you return in the Fall. I cannot emphasize enough that involvement makes your college career more rewarding. UNCW has over 80 clubs and organizations, national fraternities and sororities, the Association for Campus Entertainment, an EMERGE program for budding freshman leaders, an active ambassador program, and various other leadership and volunteer programs out of the Leadership Center. In addition, UNCW has a very active and well motivated Student Government Association (SGA).

Now a word about myself. I am a senior majoring in History. In the Spring of my freshman year I was elected a Representative-at-Large, a senate position in the SGA. The following Spring I was elected to the Executive position of Student Services Coordinator. And finally, during the Spring of my junior year, I was elected Student Body President. In addition to being in the SGA, I have been involved with FOCUS, the Emerging Leader program, and am a UNCW Ambassador. Also I'm a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity.

If you ever need anything, please don't hesitate to stop by the SGA office, room 200 of the University Union. I have regular office hours and am always available to chat, so please stop by.

Now let me tell you about Student Government. The SGA has a budget of over a quarter million dollars. With this money, the SGA funds student organizations and programs services for the student body. SGA services include, but are not limited to, campus.

Some of the services provided are recycling, a legal services program, the SGA Consignment Bookstore (pay less for books), and the "Be A Faculty Member For A Day."

This coming year we plan to expand our services and publish "Faculty Evaluation" results, expand campus recycling to include paper, and establish a "Little Seahawk" program. The "Little Seahawk" program will be a Big Buddy/Mentor program between incoming freshmen students and upperclassmen. In addition, we want to sponsor fun campus events whose proceeds will go to philanthropies.

You ask yourself, "How can I get involved with this buzz of activity?"

The answer comes this Fall. We are having elections for Freshman Class Officers (president, vice-president, and two senators) and seven representatives-at-large. As Freshman, you are available for all these positions. If you are transferring from another school and are not a freshman, you are still eligible for the rep-at-large positions. Also, there are plenty of committees for you. So please get involved with SGA and be active with "Students Serving Students."

If I can be of any assistance to you or you just want to talk, please stop by SGA or call me at 395-3554. I look forward to seeing you.

Sincerely,

Joe Mitchell
Student Body President

Phil Smith Beware Of Killer Toxic Soft Drinks

This week's topic was brought to my attention in an intelligent, semi-coherent letter sent in by Lawrence B. Nonad, an intelligent, semi-coherent reader. It reads, "Warning, Warning! Caution, Beware! Don't drink the Sun Drop, don't you dare!" The letter went on to explain, in terms not befitting this column, the new-found hazards associated with drinking beverages with "FD&C Yellow #5" dye in them.

In case you haven't heard about the most devastating event to hit the soft drink industry since Michael Jackson's hair burned up, I'll try to fill you in so you don't end up with the same problem as Mr. Nonad. According to the Major Side Effects Division of the United States Department of Soft Drink Dye Testing, something in the FD&C Yellow #5 dye prevents the human reproductive system from, I believe they said, "achieving its fullest potential."

I understand the issue was brought to light on a recent episode of ABC NEWS' 20/20, or Geraldo or something like that. According to Mr. Nonad, who watched the show because he has been a lifelong Mountain Dew drinker, the study was done at a major Women's University with a long history of doing such studies. The research team concluded, after years of sampling, analyzing, and measuring, that the dye in yellow soft drinks does in fact retard the development of the male reproductive system.

To follow Mountain Dew, Sun Drop, and Mellow Yellow drinkers this news could be devastating. To the companies that make the drinks, it could be even more devastating in lost sales as well as personal injury lawsuits.

In order to get a better idea about how the public was reacting to this developing situation, I pulled some strings and got responses from authorities familiar with the subject matter.

The owner of Ruby's Adult Video and Gifts said, "It's been great for business. I can hardly keep the synthetic hormones and creams on the shelves."

Pee Wee Herman replied, "Well, now you know where the name came from. . . I have nothing to hide."

W.S. Senator Ted Kennedy called for a Congressional hearing to determine if recent Supreme Court Nominee Clarence Thomas did in fact drink Mellow Yellow to "keep from incriminating himself" just before his testimony in the confirmation hearings last year. Also, former Arkansas Governor and Presidential hopeful Bill Clinton announced that he once experimented with Sun Drop back in the 1960's but that the public shouldn't hold that against him thirty years later. So you understand that this is an issue that's sure to be in the news for awhile.

In a related story, former heavyweight boxing champion Mike Tyson was sentenced to a six year active jail term after being found guilty on rape charges. When asked what he thought about going to prison he replied that he wasn't that worried about it; as long as they have a boxing ring, weights to work out with, and plenty of Mountain Dew to drink.

Until next time . . . keep your mind out of the gutter, and your head out of the toilet.

Chicago Tribune Secessionist Attitudes Leave The South

The following editorial appeared Tuesday, June 9, in the Chicago Tribune:

Since separatist passions have fomented war in Yugoslavia, national disintegration in the Soviet Union and a constitutional crisis in Canada, alarmists may find cause for concern in a recent poll that finds even here at home, the secessionist cause is not completely dead in the states of the old Confederacy.

A news account reported grimly last week that pollsters at the University of North Carolina surveyed 819 adults in 13 Southern states and asked if they would like to see their region become a separate nation if it could be done without war — and one out of 12 of the Southerners said they would. One out of six endorsed the view that the South would be better off today if the rebels had won the Civil War.

Just one Southerner out of every 12? These are states where the Confederate flag is still a fixture, where Robert E. Lee has near-divine status, where every other high school calls its sports teams the Rebels — and they can't muster any more secessionist sentiment than this?

What would Jefferson Davis and Stonewall Jackson say if they knew that 65 percent of their descendants say they're happy they lost? Or that 87 percent wouldn't want their independence even if they didn't have to dodge a single bullet to achieve it?

Heck, you could probably find a lot more New Yorkers than that who'd like to kiss the rest of the country goodbye and strike out on their own. Or Texans. Or Californians. Or Alaskans.

Not to mention Gothamites who just want to secede from New York State, northern Californians who'd like a divorce from Southern California and Chicagoans who could do without the rest of Illinois. And then there are the South Siders in Chicago who'd like to be rid of the North Side . . .

Of course, the real passion for secession may come in a different form than the pollsters suspected. Remember that two out of five Americans once voted for a presidential candidate (Barry Goldwater) who proposed saving off the Eastern seaboard and letting it float out into the Atlantic Ocean.

The pollsters should frame the issue differently — asking New Englanders if they'd like to see the South secede, or Southerners if they'd be better off without New York in the Union, or Seattle residents if they favor an independent California.

On second thought, it's probably best that they don't ask the question at all. One Civil War was enough.

Dave Barry Here's The Federal Budget Solution

Being an ordinary citizen, you are, no offense, way too stupid to understand the complex problems involved in trying to balance the federal budget. This is why you are very fortunate that you have the U.S. Congress (motto: "We Can't Agree On A Motto, So We're Going To Hold Hearings") gnawing away on the deficit problem for you, like a colony of busy beavers who have somehow obtained blue suits, red ties and checking accounts.

The federal deficit is creating a monstrous, crushing burden of debt that will be placed on the shoulders of future generations. This has a certain appeal. It could be seen as revenge for all the times that our future generations failed to pick their possessions up off the floor even after we asked them 62,000 times. If you walked into the future generation's room in my house, you'd think a 15-megaton Garment Bomb had exploded in there. And I still occasionally get a ringing in my ears from the time, several years ago, when I fell in the bathtub after stepping on a missile from a Volttron robot left there by the same future generation, who denied any responsibility, as though Volttron suddenly got a case of robot b.o. and decided to take a shower on his own.

So it's tempting to pass along a crushing burden of debt. It's tempting to make the deficit even WORSE by dreaming up deliberately wasteful federal programs such as establishing Deaf Queens in space. But this would be wrong. We need to eliminate the deficit, which is why we're so lucky that we have Congress.

One member of Congress working on the problem is Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., who by the way was a member of the "Keating Five" group of lawmakers who did so much to resolve what could have been a serious savings-and-loan problem at a cost to the taxpayers of only 973 bazillion stonpillion dollars, not that there is any need to dredge that up here. Sen. DeConcini recently held a press conference on the deficit, during which he said — I am not making this up — "We're going to finally wrestle to the ground this gigantic organism that is just out of control."

So we see that the root cause of the deficit, like the cause of so many other national problems, is: sex. This is also true in the case of urban unrest, as was pointed out last month by Vice President In Training Dan Quayle, who observed that the Los Angeles riots were caused by Murphy Brown's having a baby. The vice president took a lot of heat from the bleeding-heart-liberal-Democratic-communist-lesbian-pervert-pro-death-a-nit-fam-ity-Satan-worshipping media for saying this, but the evidence backs him up. Consider the sequence of events:

April 30 — Los Angeles had riots.

May 18 — Murphy Brown had a baby.

As we can see, this sequence clearly proves that Murphy Brown caused the Los . . . Wait a minute! Upon further review, we see that this sequence proves that the Los Angeles riots caused Murphy Brown to have a baby. Quick, somebody inform the vice president! Better use the Emergency Putter Phone!

But getting back to the deficit: If there is one lesson that history teaches us, it is that a nation that has high federal officials promising to wrestle gigantic organisms to the ground is a nation that needs to take the cold shower of budgetary restraint while wearing the condom of fiscal responsibility. This is where Congress comes in.

Let's play a little game: Let's pretend that you readers are the Congress, and you wish to do something about the deficit. Bear in mind that:

1. You have the power to balance the budget.
2. You have ALWAYS had the power to balance the budget.
3. So any time you want, you can balance the budget.

4. Legally, nobody can stop you from balancing the budget.

OK! So what would you do? Did you answer: "Balance the budget?" You did? Ha! This is why you are lowlife working scum, as opposed to a member of Congress.

Congress is not balancing the budget. What Congress is doing, amid much fanfare, is talking about passing a Constitutional amendment requiring itself to balance the budget. Really. This amendment will become effective in a few years, if three-fourths of the states ratify it. Meanwhile, this year Congress will produce the largest deficit ever.

Everybody got that? Congress is like a doctor who finds a knife victim lying in the street, bleeding to death, so the doctor opens his medical bag, takes out a scalpel, stabs the victim a few hundred more times, then writes himself a stern note that says: "DO SOMETHING ABOUT THIS BLEEDING! BY 1997 AT THE LATEST!" Then he goes and builds a Deiny Queen in space.

But I'm not worried. I'm confident that three-fourths of the states will ratify the balanced-budget amendment.

And the really smart states will too.

Rose Cancels Concert For A Breather

BY CHERYL

Knight-Ridder Newspapers

An exhausted Axl Rose scrubbed a sold-out Guns N' Roses concert Tuesday in Manchester, England. Back in the States, meanwhile, the long arm of the law is still itching to get its hands on the rocker and deliver him to authorities in St. Louis, where Rose faces charges over a concert melee in July that injured 40 fans and 20 police officers. In South Carolina, Solicitor Dick Harpootlian vows he'll slap the 30-year-old rocker with a warrant as a fugitive from justice "the minute he sets foot in South Carolina." Last week, a Geffen Records spokeswoman said Rose was weary of being on the lam and planned to surrender sometime.

LUNDEN MUST PAY $18,000 A MONTH IN ALIMONY

"Good Morning America" co-host Joan Lunden is steaming over the latest development in her divorce. Last week, a judge ordered Lunden, 41, to pay $18,000 a month in temporary alimony to her estranged husband, TV producer Michael Krauss, 52, along with covering half of his unreimbursed medical expenses. Lunden, whose annual ABC salary reportedly is in the $2 million range, filed for divorce in January after nearly 14 years of marriage.

"This decision is a deplorable and shameful statement on how working women are treated today when we've supported our families and been totally responsible for our children," she said in a statement. "Why the courts don't tell a husband, who has been flying off his wife, to go out and get a job is beyond my comprehension." Lunden and Krauss share custody of their three daughters.

After the judge's ruling, Krauss' lawyer, Norman Sheresky, expressed hopes for a semblance of a happily-ever-after ending in the divorce. "Maybe things will get better. They should divide what they have and get on with their lives."

Court Protects Grants To Artists

BY BLAIR KAMIN
Chicago Tribune

A federal judge on Tuesday struck down a decency clause restricting government grants to artists, but while the ruling was hailed by artists as a victory for freedom of expression, some predicted it would not stem a conservative tide affecting federal funding for the arts.

In a lawsuit brought by four performance artists denied grants by the National Endowment for the Arts in 1990, U.S. District Judge A. Wallace Tashima in Los Angeles ruled that the decency clause violated the 1st Amendment because it was too vague.

"The right of artists to challenge conventional wisdom and values is a cornerstone of artistic and academic freedom," the judge said.

Known as "the NEA Four," the artists are Karen Finley, who has smeared her body with chocolate to represent the debasement of women; John Fleck, who has simulated masturbation; Holly Hughes, who focuses on lesbian issues; and Tim Miller, whose work concentrates on AIDS and his identity as a gay person.

"It's certainly encouraging that there's still a federal judge who cares about the Bill of Rights," Miller said in a telephone interview from Los Angeles. But he added, "At this point, artists don't have any illusion that there's cultural freedom coming out of Washington any more."

The ruling came nearly one month after acting endowment chairman Anne-Irma Radice denied government funding for two college art exhibitions with sexual themes on the ground that the exhibitions lacked artistic merit. In turn, artists around the country accused Radice of caving in to conservatives who charged the endowment with funding "pornographic and blasphemous art."

An endowment spokeswoman said Tuesday that the agency was reviewing Tashima's decision. "Grant awards from the National Endowment for the Arts always have been made, are made today and will continue to be made on the basis on artistic excellence," an endowment statement said.

Grants to the four performance artists were denied by Radice's predecessor, John Frohnmayer.

Their lawsuit was filed in 1990 after Congress prohibited the endowment from funding projects deemed to be obscene, sadomasochistic or homophobic. The ban, urged by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., came in response to government funding of controversial art exhibitions, including one with the homoerotic photographs of the late Robert Mapplethorpe.

Last year, Congress adopted new restrictions decreeing that grant applications to the endowment should be judged on "general standards of decency." At that time, the four performance artists altered their lawsuit to cover the new language.

The artists were aided in their suit by the New York-based Center for Constitutional Rights, the Washington, D.C.-based National Campaign for Freedom of Expression and the Southern California chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union.

David Cole, a lawyer with the Center for Constitutional Rights, said, "This decision means that from now on, the NEA must concern itself with art, not politics or decency."

However, liberal arts lobbyists predicted that the ruling would have little impact on the endowment's grant-making process.

"It's wonderful to have a moral vindication," said Alene Valkanas, executive director of the Chicago-based Illinois Arts Alliance Foundation. "But I don't know to what extent (the ruling) will actually change the climate" that produced Radice's recent rejection of the two grants. "The chilling effect has succeeded."

Seaweeds Win Ultimate

BY JIM CLARK
Editor-in-Chief

"Fantastic! Wonderful!" Those are the words woman's Ultimate captain Susan Turner used to describe her team's winning of the national championship in Fort Collins, Colorado, last month. The Seaweeds, as the team is known, beat first-time finalist University of Oregon 21-10 to clinch UNCW's first-ever national championship.

The Seaweeds reversed last year's disappointing showing in the finals by being fifth seeded and winning it all. Last year the Seaweeds were the top seed, but finished fifth.

"Last year we were new to the finals and teams used their experience on us," Turner said. "This year we were ready."

"We were mentally there (this year). Last year we were more physically fit. This team played as one."

First-year player Janice Robbie said the team went to Colorado prepared to win. "We knew it was going to be competitive. We didn't go in cocky, with our noses in the air. We just wanted to play."

The Seaweeds opened up the event by destroying Brown University 17-3; the University of Kansas 17-4; the University of California-Berkeley 17-12, avenging a loss in last year's tournament; and Columbia University 17-10.

In the quarter-final match, the University of Pennsylvania offered no resistance to the Seaweeds' title march. UPenn lost 17-4.

Next was a rematch of the final first round game with Columbia in the semi-finals. Again, it was no contest, the Seaweeds won 19-8, sending UNCW to the national championship game.

Experience played a big role in the final match, as the Seaweeds cruised to an easy win, 21-10. The game was not as close as the score would indicate. At the half, it was 11-1.

Robbie is looking forward to next year's tournament. "We know what to expect. We have played against some really competitive teams." And won!

"When asked what it feels like to be a national champion, Robbie smiled. "It really hasn't hit me yet."

Turner expects the team to repeat as national champs. "We have a very strong team and we are only losing five players next year," she said.

Turner is looking for a big turnout of new faces for the fall season. In the fall, the team competes in an open league that features teams of all ages. This is the time for the women to hone their skills and prepare for the spring season. In the spring, the Seaweeds compete solely against college teams.

Anyone interested in playing in the summer or fall leagues should contact Susan Turner after July 4 at 799-5706.

Seamen Finish Fourth

BY JIM CLARK
Editor-in-Chief

The Seamen, UNCW's men's Ultimate Frisbee team, are finishing in the footsteps of the Duke Blue Devil basketball team. The Seamen have reached the "final four" in each of the last three years, but have only two seconds and a fourth to show for their efforts. This year's fourth was more disappointing than the previous runner-up finishes.

"The loss was a great disappointment for everybody on the team. We were expecting to do a lot better," said captain Nick Myers. "We were a little complacent and lacked a little hunger."

The losses in the finals were tough to accept because the Seamen had defeated two of the teams who finished ahead of them during the regular season. The University of Oregon won the championship, followed by Cornell University and the University of California-Berkeley. The Seamen had defeated Cornell in the finals of the Eastern Seaboard Championships held here at UNCW 19-7, and had triumphed over Berkeley in California 15-8.

Myers added the team will be losing four or five players to graduation and will need a transfusion of new blood to help them reach their goal.

"During the Open (Fall) season, we hope to teach new players the game and have the team come together," Myers said. "A good Fall turnout means a good Spring showing."

The Open season is played amongst teams of all ages and sponsorship. The Spring season is only open to college students and only the Spring season counts toward the national championship. Any men interested in playing in a Summer or Fall league need to call Nick Myers at 392-6198 after July 4.

"We expect to reach the nationals again," Myers said.

How far they go remains to be seen, but they believe they will capture that elusive national championship soon, like the Blue Devils.

USAir To Sponsor B-Ball Tourney

BY JIM CLARK
Editor-in-Chief

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington's men's basketball program has taken another step toward national recognition. On May 6, 1992, UNCW Athletic Director Paul Miller announced that USAir, one of the nation's leading carriers, will be the chief sponsor of a two-day NCAA Division I tournament to be held at Trask Coliseum.

The USAir East Coast Basketball Classic will be held December 18-19 with tip-off of the first game each night being 7 pm.

Joining the host Seahawks will be the Auburn Tigers, the Louisiana Tech Bulldogs, and the Alabama State Hornets. Auburn and Louisiana Tech will kick off the proceedings Friday, Dec. 18, with the 7pm game. Following that game, UNCW will take on Alabama State. The consolation and championship games will be played Saturday night.

The Seahawks, in their third year under head coach Kevin Eastman, hope to continue their drive toward the top of the Colonial Athletic Association. Despite a fifth place finish in the conference last season, the Seahawks were named the conference's most improved team.

Auburn, from the Southeastern Conference, will be one of the top teams in the SEC next year. Wesley Person, younger brother of Indiana Pacer Chuck Person, will lead a strong, young attack. Person averaged 19.9 points and 6.8 rebounds a game last season. Person will be joined by two returning starters and five top recruits.

Louisiana Tech has been to either the NCAA or National Invitational Tournament (NIT) post-season events for the past nine years. Bulldog head coach Jerry Loyd has led his team to nine straight 20-win seasons.

Alabama State, from the Southwest Athletic Conference, is coached by James Oliver. Oliver has amassed a 316-172 record during his 17 year coaching career.

The price for a ticket to all four games is expected to be $20. Because the men's schedule has not been finalized, tickets will not be available until September.

Fish May Be NBA-Bound

BY JIM CLARK
Editor-in-Chief

Former Seahawk basketball star Matt Fish may be playing himself into the National Basketball Association's draft. Fish, the 6-10 center from Washington, Iowa, has been playing impressive ball for the Philadelphia Spirit of the United States Basketball League. So impressive a couple of teams have expressed interest in drafting him in the second round.

Fish completed in an NBA combine last weekend in Chicago and was told by representatives from the Detroit Pistons and the Philadelphia 76ers that they are considering him from their second pick.

Since May, Fish has been playing in Philadelphia for the northern conference leaders, the Spirit (10-4). In ten games, through Monday night's 129-117 loss to the southern conference leading Miami Tropics, Fish is averaging 15.1 minutes per game, 4.8 points, and 3.3 rebounds. Fish has also dished out five assists, made seven steals, and blocked two shots.

Fish was named UNCW's top male athlete for the school-year 1991-92, receiving the Thomas V. Moseley Outstanding Athletic trophy, and the Pizza Hut Basketball Player of the Year. He averaged 17.6 points and 9.4 rebounds per game last year with the Seahawks.

Two 'Hawks Named All-America

UNC Wilmington swimmer Laura Doepp has been named to the GTE Academic All-America At-Large District III Team by the College Sports Information Directors of America from North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, and Virginia.

Doepp, a chemistry major from Miramar, Florida, finished her four-year career for Coach Dave Allen's team by captaining the team to a 9-2 record. She holds school records in five events, including the 500, 1,000, and 1,650 meter individual freestyle events.

Doepp was presented the Chancellor's Cup Award as UNCW's top female student-athlete for the school-year 1991-92.

UNCW To Play Host

UNCW will host a conference-high five Colonial Athletic Association championships during the 1992-93 school year.

The Men's and Women's Swimming and Diving Championships will be held in the Seahawk Natatorium February 17-20, 1993.

The Men's and Women's Outdoor Track finals will be held April 10.

Brooks Field will serve as the site for the CAA Baseball tournament May 11-15. The winner of the event will receive an automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament.

UNCW's cross country/track and field coach Bill Cason has stepped down to pursue other career interests.

Cason joined the Seahawks in 1988 as the cross country coach and assumed the track and field duties when the school added the program three years ago.

The cross country team won the 1990 North Carolina state collegiate title, and the men's and women's teams each finished third in the Colonial Athletic Association this past year.

Athletic Director Paul Miller said a search for Cason's replacement will begin soon.

UNCW Adopts New Seahawk Logo

BY HOLLY PRICE
News Editor

A new Seahawk logo, featuring a more contemporary look, has been adopted by the University of North Carolina at Wilmington's athletic department. In addition to the new logo the color navy blue has been added to the established green and gold. The new logo replaces the barrel chested, cartoon-looking seahawk that first made its appearance in 1986. A large wave and the number one have also been incorporated into the design.

The reason behind the change was to promote a new image for UNCW's athletics, said Chancellor James Leutze. "We have developed a new look which we think captures the more sophisticated and aggressive style of our athletic program," said Mr.

The Evolution of the Seahawk...

Leutze. "We are very excited about the new bird and the sports future ahead of us."

Local artist, Gary Longordo was contacted last May by Athletic Director, Paul Miller to design the Seahawk's new symbol. "I sat down with the chancellor and Paul Miller," said Mr. Longordo, "and we incorporated all kinds of ideas from a new look to some added school colors."

Mr. Longordo is owner of Apple Annie's bake shop here in Wilmington. He also does forensic drawings for the Wilmington Police Department and the F.B.I.

He donated all of his time and efforts. "I wanted to be able to give something to the students at UNCW," he said.

Recently Mr. Longordo painted the new logo on the floor of Trask coliseum. It features the seahawk in the middle of the floor and the state of North Carolina to either side of the center.

Through the years, the Seahawk logo has been portrayed in various poses, with many birds in flight. It has been revamped five times during the course of the school's athletic history.

Davis said. "A student ID number is more difficult to track."

Students and faculty must have their bikes registered by September 6. After that date the police may impound the bike, either by removing the bike or placing a lock on it. The owner will then have to pay a $5 fine and register his bike. The registration will still be free.

Davis also wanted owners to know that this is not a yearly event. "Once the bike is registered, it is valid for as long as you own the bike," he said.

If the bike is sold or the sticker is removed, the owner must come in and re-register the bike.

If you have any questions, contact the Campus Police at 395-3184.

Students and faculty must have their bikes registered by September 6.

Police reported, "There was over $25,000 worth of bikes were stolen from UNCW last year."

This registration drive is geared toward making all bikes on campus less likely to be stolen.

In conjunction with the registration drive, "Operation ID" will also be in effect. "Operation ID" will allow an owner to engrave his state driver's license number on the frame.

"We recommend engraving the state driver's license number because we can access that information in sixty seconds,"

Police Require Bike Registration

BY JIM CLARK

Beginning September 6, 1992, all bicycles on campus must be registered with the Campus Police Department. After that date, unregistered bikes will be impounded and a $5 fine will be assessed.

The UNCW Campus Police will have registration table set up in the University Union today and tomorrow (Aug. 20 and 21) from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. and in the University Center Monday through Wednesday (Aug. 24-26) from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Bikes can also be registered at the Campus Police station 24 hours a day.

Though the registration is mandatory, it is free. Officer Hunter Davis of the Campus

A Letter From Chancellor Leutze

Dear Seahawk:

If you are returning or, especially, if you are here for the first time, welcome to campus! UNCW is a very friendly, enlightening, and exciting place. I urge you to take full advantage of the opportunities you have while you live and learn at this excellent institution of higher education.

Classes are demanding and clearly should be your number one priority. Your investment in your courses largely will determine the return that you receive. At the same time, many other worthwhile activities occur on campus throughout the year.

I look forward to meeting as many of you as I can. Please know that students are welcome to stop by my office anytime and especially during student hours. There is also a Chancellor's Suggestion Box for your use, located in the University Center. Let me know what you think and have a great year!

With all best wishes,

James R. Leutze

Greek Housing?

BY HOLLY PRICE
News Editor

Once again, the Greeks at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington may be one step closer to having housing.

On July 15 the UNCW Board of Trustees passed a resolution supporting housing for Greek organizations. The resolution also states that the university will not build any housing for Greeks on campus.

"With this resolution, we hope that developers will be more interested, knowing that no housing is to be on campus," said Mark Lanier, special assistant to the chancellor.

The purpose of the resolution was to strengthen the opportunity for the Greeks to gain a developer for Olympus Park, the proposed Greek housing sight. "We now have the formal support of the university in mind," said Assistant Dean of Students and new Greek Advisor, Robert Smith.

The real estate development consulting firm of McKay and Associates, Inc. has been contracted to help the Greeks in their search. "The students need some professional guidance," said Tom McKay, president of the firm. "This resolution won't make funding difficult, but it will make it more probable."

Parking Increases

BY CAROLE MEHLE
Staff Writer

"The parking stickers are $80 this year and I can't even find a space!"

That is a common cry from students that commute—and even those that don't. But don't complain to Towana Moore.

As for the space "problem," Moore, coordinator of Auxiliary Services, said, "The space is available. It's just inconvenient. All of the parking is not in personal proximity for all the students. There is usually parking available in the outer lots by Trask. A student cannot expect to come at 8:55 for a 9:00 class at Cameron and expect to park right at the building."

Last year, 100 new spaces were put in behind Wagner Hall and 300 more are slated to be added by Spring 1993.

The increase for stickers from $60 to $80 is due to more parking being put in. Moore said because Chancellor James R. Leutze rescinded an increase last year to keep the price at that of the

New ID Plus System Now In Place

BY CAROLE MEHLE
Staff Writer

"Just swipe it."

That is what Charlie Maimone, director of Auxiliary Services, is hoping students will be doing with their new ID cards, which are part of the new system, the ID Plus.

The new ID Plus card system is costing the school $200,000 to get in place and approximately $5000 to replace the old cards, which are being given away in place of the old ID cards. "We are committed to this system for the security and the convenience it offers," Maimone said.

ID Plus works on a debit system, rather than a credit system, that will allow students to use their card at the Bookstore for books, t-shirts and other supplies; Campus Food Services; and vending machines. The cost will be automatically deducted from their account, which must be opened with Auxiliary Services before using the card.

The card operates basically on the same rules that the declining balance program does, but the "flexible spending" offered by the ID Plus program is not the same as the declining balance. The flexible cash can be used at places that the declining balance cannot be used, but declining balance cannot substitute for the flexible cash offered by the new program.

Maimone said there will not be price increases to cover the new program. "The school has saved money over the years and there is no cost back to the student. Planning has done that. Also, all involved and using the system are helping to pay for the system."

Students wait patiently in line for IDs while the computers are down.

With this system, if a card is lost, Maimone said "We can suspend it [funds in the student account] immediately." By suspending the funds, there is no access even if the card is found and used. By doing this, no funds are lost. If the card is not reported and is used, the funds are lost. "If we don't know it's missing or that the cardholder doesn't want it stopped, we can't do anything."

Maimone said that if the card is found later, the student can call his office and have the card reactivated. If a new card is made, the cardholder's account is simply transferred to the new account.

The new system also offers security for the on-campus residents. The card is being used for door access at Galloway Hall. "There is a card reader that knows who lives in the building. All the residents have to do to get in the building after hours is swipe the card's magnetic stripe through the reader," Maimone said.

The card can also be used for check cashing, paying parking tickets and voting in on-campus

Towana Moore, coordinator of Auxiliary Services, said that she expects an increase in sales from vending machines due to the convenience of using the card without having change.

UNCW To Flood Classroom

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

UNCW's newest classroom is on the Florida coast. The Aquarius, an undersea research laboratory, is owned by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and managed by the National Undersea Research Center of UNCW.

The refurbished and redesigned laboratory, the world's most sophisticated undersea research laboratory, provides living quarters for six aquanaut-scientists. From this vehicle, scientists can conduct extensive research for up to 30 days at a time.

Aquarius is a key element of a $2 million-a-year Florida environmental research effort aimed at understanding and preserving the endangered Florida Keys, the United States' only continental coral reef ecosystem. Scientists will try to determine how to save the reef from the human and other factors that are killing it.

Aquarius arrived in Wilmington in December 1990 from the U.S. Virgin Islands where it was doing research until Hurricane Hugo interrupted the missions.

After a year-long rebuilding and re-engineering overhaul, Aquarius transformed from a shore-based, shore-supported system to a self-sustaining, self-supporting sea-based laboratory. Aquarius is 43 feet long, 20 feet wide, and 16.5 feet high.

UNCW was chosen to manage the craft by the NOAA based on the strength of its marine science program.

"The university is next to something crucial to the study of marine sciences--the Atlantic Ocean..."

Aquarius was dedicated by North Carolina's Seventh District Congressman Charlie Rose June 23 at the docks of the North Carolina State Ports Authority in Wilmington.

There was some debate as to which North Carolina school should manage the vessel. UNC Chapel Hill and North Carolina State University also wanted to maintain Aquarius.

Congressman Rose said at the ceremony, "The university is next door to something crucial to the study of marine sciences--the Atlantic Ocean--and it makes sense to locate the lab at a coastal campus."

Also speaking at the ceremony was University of North Carolina Vice President for Research Jasper D. Memory.

"With the acquisition of the Aquarius, UNCW is ideally positioned to continue the work it has been doing for some years on undersea research in areas of great importance to the state of North Carolina, the United States, and the world," Memory said.

Aquarius is having its basic plate installed now off Key Largo, FL. After two saturation shake down missions in the spring, Aquarius is expected to resume scientific missions in April.

UNCW Gets Largest Grant

From the UNCW News Bureau

The Odyssey Project of the Gaston County Schools, working in partnership with the UNCW School of Education, has been selected as one of 11 projects nationwide to be used as a model to boldly reinvent schools for the next generation of American children. UNCW was chosen from a pool of 686 schools across the country.

The announcement was made in Washington, D.C., July 9, 1992, by the New American Schools Development Corporation, a private, non-profit, non-partisan organization formed in July 1991 by leaders of American businesses and foundations which pledged $50 million to fund the first phase of the reform initiative.

Specific funding allocations have not yet been announced, but the initial Odyssey Project budget requests were in the $8-10 million range over a five-year period.

"NASDC's revolutionary initiative is really intended to reinvent the wheel," said UNCW Chancellor James R. Leutze. "Many of us in education feel the wheel isn't working, and just fixing a spoke or wheel cover won't do it."

"Our School of Education worked closely with Gaston County Schools to develop this project, and its selection is a real feather in our cap. We are determined that UNCW is going to be the best school of education in North Carolina. This is a quantum leap forward, both as an indication of the quality that already exists here and of the trust and promise shown by the rigorous selection process."

UNCW is a leader in education reform efforts, including being part of Vision Carolina, Southern Bell's pilot distance-learning, two-way interactive video project linking public schools, community colleges, hospitals, and universities.

The Odyssey Project, when fully implemented, is expected to be a model of what world class schools must be if students are to graduate prepared to live and work in a global society.

previous year, the increase had to be put into effect this year to pay for new parking and costs on existing parking lots. Moore also emphasized that the faculty and staff must pay the same as students to park--$80.

"The existing parking fees are debt service that totals up to $110,000," Moore said. Because the Parking Office receives no money from the state, unlike other departments, fees from stickers must cover all costs.

The new spaces that will be ready in the Spring will cost $637,000. Some of the increased fees will cover the loan taken out to put in the new spaces. These new spaces are to be located at the back of campus in a wooded area between the Suites and Campus Police, Moore said. When the new spaces are in, the residents will be restricted from Parking Lots S and T, the lots in front of Wagoner Hall. Those lots will be reserved

Moore added that there are no new rules or changes from last year other than the increase in the sticker fee. She anticipates no problems in parking, except those of "personal proximity to classroom buildings."

Chancellor Leutze Has UNCW Headed In Right Direction

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

Dr. James R. Leutze became the Chancellor of UNCW on July 15, 1990. He is the fifth chief administrator of the institution since its founding in 1947.

Dr. Leutze is a native of Charleston, South Carolina, and grew up in Salisbury, Maryland. He earned his doctorate in history from Duke University in 1968, his master's in English from the University of Miami in 1959, and the bachelor's degree from the University of Maryland in 1957.

He served as Senator Hubert H. Humphrey's legislative assistant during the years 1963-64.

Dr. Leutze began his academic career in 1968 as a professor of history at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. His excellence in undergraduate teaching was recognized with the Standard Oil and Tanner awards.

In 1979, he was named chair of the curriculum in peace, war and defense, and in 1986 was appointed the first Dowd Professor of War and Peace.

Dr. Leutze has also holds numerous scholarly awards, among them the Bernhart Prize for distinguished publication in the area of American foreign policy and the John Lyman Book Award in U.S. Naval History.

He is also the creator, producer, and host of Globe Watch, an international affairs series which airs Sundays at 5 p.m. on public television (WUNJ channel 39 or VisionCable channel 13 in Wilmington). The show is now in its eighth year. He is married to the former Kathleen Erskine and has three children.

The Seahawk: Heading into your third year as Chancellor, do you feel the school is now headed in the direction you want?

Chancellor Leutze: I'm really very pleased with the signs and indications of the way things seem to be going. I'm pleased with the numbers that we're looking at this year. That is, we were able to plan and predict a little bit more accurately than we were last year; and therefore, I think we're going to be able to accommodate the students better this year than we did last.

I'm very happy to have Marvin Moss, the new Provost, on board. He seems to be working very smoothly with the various other aspects of the university community.

I think we are moving on our planning, that we need to get straight as far as our long range view of the university and where we're going.

I am pleased with the other new personnel that we have on board. Bill Anyan has been very successful, I think, as the Advancement Officer we've got in the campaign. He gets the campaign up and going. We are looking at some new management techniques on campus that we hope will be customer oriented, oriented toward seeing students as customers and trying to be as accommodating as we possibly can; and dealing with student needs as well as dealing with other inner-university functions.

So, I feel pretty good about things. (laughs) I wish we had more money.

TS: I think we're all in that boat.

CL: Yeah.

TS: You mentioned when you took office that enrollment retention and community involvement were your top priorities. Is that still the same.

CL: Yeah, I think I would say so. Jane Patterson (Director of Division for Public Service) has been very successful in the public service area, particularly working on our fiber-optic program. They've done several things. I guess everyone's familiar with the fiber-optic hook-up we have with the community college, the public schools, and the hospital, so that we interactive video. Which means not just television, but people can react to the television and talk (with) the instructor back and forth.

That program has been very successful and apparently we are in the forefront of the education institutions that are working in that area. So I think that has been a star in our public service activities and community outreach activities.

In addition, we have established a Southeastern North Carolina economic development council, a group working and looking at Southeastern North Carolina as an economic region and looking at development in this region.

TS: With BMW moving to South Carolina and a lot of businesses finding it more advantageous to come down from the North, do you see UNCW playing a role in the attraction of large companies (to this area)?

CL: We know that one of the things corporate leaders look at when they are going to settle in an area is the availability of more education for their work force as well as an atmosphere in the community that makes it an attractive community.

Certainly the university is interested in being a resource by providing the types of classes that people might need—either for advanced training through the business school—or just for courses people would be interested in taking, or offering things in the arts and entertainment area that people in the community would find enriching to the general area. We are eager to serve that role.

TS: Recently, Jim Shumacher of The Charlotte Observer wrote a satirical editorial praising you and UNCW for emphasizing teaching the undergraduates. It must be satisfying to be recognized for your teaching the undergraduates in a city with its own UNC-system school.

CL: I'm glad you saw that (laughs).

TS: Praising you for your undergraduate program.

CL: Praising the university's undergraduate program. I was pleased to see that.

TS: You recently started stipends for undergraduate teachers.

CL: Right. $5000 a year for three years to four teachers (recognized for excellence in undergraduate teaching).

TS: At the same time, the graduate program is making news of its own. UNCW just received its first patent.

CL: I was really excited about that. I knew we had the patent, but had not looked into what the process was until I heard the announcement. The test is done hundreds of times a day (in every hospital across the country). So, if we can market that, we can make some money (laughs). And, thereby, bring in some more technology and upgrade our programs.

TS: On top of that program we've also got the marine science program that received a big boost with the Aquarius (see page 2), an underwater laboratory, that brought disparaging words from the head of Chapel Hill's marine science program, Dr. Dirk Frankenberg. He said that making UNCW the leader in marine research would "end marine science in the state as we know it." He also later added that we was misinterpreted. How do you feel about that?

CL: I'm sure he was misinterpreted (laughs) because that obviously is not a cooperative or collegial comment for someone in one of our sister institutions to say. It is also a foolish thing to say because our undergraduate program is all ready recognized as the seventh best in the country. And the only one in the state.

We continue to get large federal grants from various agencies utilizing our scientists and our facilities. So, obviously, we are well thought of by the federal government and marine science establishments.

It is also of some note, our new Provost was deputy director of the marine science program at the Scripps Institute (of Oceanography at La Jolla, California). He is one of the leading marine scientists in the country. I don't think he would plan on coming to an institution that was about to end marine science in this state.

TS: Do you think there is a lack of respect for UNCW in the UNC-system?

CL: I would certainly hope not. Of course, as a young university there is a tendency to overlook us, I don't think necessarily not respect us.

I think there is a tendency in the state to focus on what's going on in the Research Triangle, the Triad, and Charlotte, and to forget there is a huge section of eastern North Carolina that is an important and vital part of the state. So what we need to do, I don't think it's a Rodney Dangerfield kind of thing, is continually remind people that we are doing important things.

We just got a huge grant, the total size has not been established, but the largest in the university's history, for our school of education. You begin ticking off this kind of thing and you recognize we're worthy of a lot of respect. We have people on our staff doing some very exciting things that are being recognized highly in the technical, educational, and marine science areas.

TS: With enrollment near an all-time high and limited classroom space, do you see a need for mandatory classes at an appointed time. For instance, Duke University will have mandatory 8 a.m. composition for all 1,500 freshmen this year. Is that a possibility for UNCW as it continues to grow?

CL: Our problem, our big space problem, deals with our laboratories. We had a request in, and have for the past couple of years, for a new science laboratory building. That was on the bond issue and the bond did not get approved by the legislature. It will come up again in the spring.

What this means in practical terms is we will not have the new laboratory building for four years, even if it's passed in a special election. So we are looking for ways to maximize the use of our lab space, which is our real problem. We are going to look at all kinds of options.

TS: When you started here, non-white students made up only 6% of the enrollment. Now that figure is expected to be 8%, the highest ever. Has Assistant Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs and enrollment manager David Miller met your expectations for increasing minority enrollment?

CL: Well, I'm very pleased with Dr. Miller. I don't think you can really be satisfied, in a sense. We have to continue paying attention to this area and continue to grow in the area of minority students.

There are, I think if we look at the percentage of minorities in this region, of southeastern North Carolina, nearly 25%. 8% is up from 6%, but it is not truly reflective of the composition of the community. We have to continue working in that area.

Students will come here if they feel it is a comfortable environment and they are going to get a good education and also have a good life here.

TS: In the April 4, 1991, issue of The Seahawk, you said you planned to spend your career at UNCW. Do you still feel that way?

CL: Certainly. That's the answer. I'm having a lot of fun. As I said, if we had more money, it would be more fun. I can't imagine how much more fun it would be. This is a neat area and this is a very satisfying institution to work in.

Goodbye To An Old Friend

August 18, 1992. A Tuesday like no other Tuesday I've ever known. First, I realized that my staff and I had to get going if we were going to get this paper to print on time. Then I heard the news that one of my heroes, Larry Bird, was calling it quits.

The Skeleton Crew, sorry Stephen King, we now call a staff has done an outstanding job with only two days of working together. Only one person is in the same position as last year, A&E editor Mona Hupp.

We will be implementing new features to The Seahawk as the weeks go by. Look for them in the next few issues.

My goal as editor will be to cover UNCW. We will be looking at state, national, and international issues, but featuring the views of university personnel, be it faculty, students, or staff. We aim to be UNCW's newspaper.

We encourage you to recognize the merchants that advertise in The Seahawk and tell them you saw their ad in the paper. By doing that, they will know the money they spent was well spent.

As you can see by our lead story, we have a new mascot. I firmly believe the last one we had was better suited to work in a Chuck E. Cheese's than represent a growing university.

The new mascot has a fierce, determined look that commands respect, much like this school. As you read the paper, you will, like me, see features on aspects of the school you had no idea were going on.

The Odyssey Project grant is the first at one the school has ever received, the marine science department is one of the most respected in the country, and the school of business will play an integral role in the growth of Wilmington.

There were a couple of stories we were not able to bring you, but will soon, because the people we needed to interview were busy getting ready for classes.

My staff and I are determined on making The Seahawk the authority on UNCW. The input we receive from the university's populace is essential to our seeing our goal through. So please, don't hesitate to drop us a line or come by University Union room 205.

People who know me know I would have to mention Larry's retirement in my first editorial. I grew up on Larry Bird basketball. I was a Celtic fan when John Havlicek, Dave Cowens, and Jolo White were leading the team to championships.

There were a couple of decades after these wins, but then along came some "kick from French Lick." His pure talent, coupled with the brilliance of "Magic" Johnson, took the Celtics and the NBA to heights never before known.

Larry's hustle, desire, and determination are worth admiring, and applying to life. If we all worked as hard at our job as he did at his, the world would be a better place.

So, as an era comes to an end, I look back and remember my favorite Larry memory.

The time he and Dominique Wilkins put on a scoring exhibition in the play-offs? No.

The time he raised his hand in victory, before the ball went through the net, during an All-Star three-point contest? No.

My favorite was said best by gravel-voiced Celtic announcer Johnny Most, "Bird steals the ball... underneath to D.J.... lays it in."

Thanks Larry!

Let The Winds Of Destiny Catch Your Unfurled Sails

Longing For The Sea and Yet Afraid

I have studied many times

The marble which was chiseled for me--

A boat with a furled sail at rest in a harbor.

In truth it pictures not my destination

But my life.

For love was offered me and I shrunk from its disillusionment.

Sorrow knocked at my door, but I was afraid;

And now I know that we must lift the sail

And catch the winds of destiny

Wherever they drive the boat.

To put meaning in one's life may end in madness,

But life without meaning is the torture

Of reasonlessness and vague desire--

It is a boat for the sea and yet afraid.

—Edgar Lee Masters

Given the incredible variety and opportunities that come with the new beginning of the fall semester here at UNCW, I hope that you will let yourself be aware that one of the most incredible opportunities before you is to "lift the sail and catch the winds of destiny."

This may sound grandiose, but there is truly a critical choice you will be making either consciously or unconsciously. Too many students keep their sails furled and shrink from the opportunities that are offered at every level of our student experience. You are surrounded by opportunities to learn rather than just go to class, to experience diversity in people different from you rather than simply hanging onto your small group of friends, to develop relationship skills by working through issues with a new roommate rather than just wanting to move out. Too many students avoid the discomfort of being in new settings by going home to familiar friends and places.

I would invite you to become very intentional as you begin this semester in terms of being clear about your goals for this year. What do you want to accomplish both in the classroom and outside of it? What do you need to accomplish these goals? What kind of support do you want and how are you going to find out how to get it? The University is loaded with resources that relate to every aspect of your life as a college student but you are the only one that must reach out and make the connections.

Anyone that is getting ready to set sail on a long voyage deals with fears and thinks, at times, about forgetting the whole trip; but with careful planning, prayer, and support, most voyages turn into high adventure. This year at UNCW can be high adventure as well. I hope that you will make it just that!

I also hope and pray that you will not wind up the year feeling like "a boat longing for the sea and yet afraid."

Mitchell Raps With Homies

Dear Fellow Students:

Welcome, or welcome back, to UNCW! I hope you all had a good summer, and I wish you the best of luck for this coming school year. With the beginning of school comes many exciting events, such as Welcome Week, Fraternity/Sorority Rush, SGA elections, and opportunities to join one or more of our 80 registered student organizations. I hope you will take advantage of these opportunities.

Many Student Government members have been very busy this summer. We now have a new flyer entitled "Discover What SGA Has to Offer," which tells you about our services and programs. In addition, an "SGA Update" was mailed to all students who were pre-registered for the fall semester, and two "SGA Update's" have been printed in The Seahawk, one in the Summer issue and one on page 8). Through these publications we hope to keep you informed on what's going on within your Student Government.

Sept. 9-10, SGA Elections

On September 9 and 10, we are having our fall elections. These elections are for Freshman Class President, Freshman Class Vice-President, and two Freshman Class Senators. Also there are seven At-Large positions available, which all students are eligible for.

We will also have a special election for Attorney General and Senior Class Vice-President. To run, all you have to do is register in the SGA office (University Union 200) between August 24 and September 1. Then all registered candidates must go to the mandatory candidates meeting on Sep. 2 in UU 201.

The elections will be held in the University Cafeteria and the University Center. I encourage all interested students to run for office and for all students to vote.

Student Government has a lot of plans for the coming school year. We hope to expand our campus recycling program to include paper. We also want to complete the "Little Seahawk Program," (a type of Big Buddy/mentor program for incoming students), and start a "Senior Class Project," and a "Senior Class Gift to the University" programs.

These are just some of the many plans we have concocted. I hope one or more of these interest you.

Student Government's role on campus is as a student service group. It is our job to take the student fee money you pay ($35 a year) to SGA and program events, programs, and services which are beneficial to the student body.

We also fund many student organizations on campus. In order to fulfill our role we need your input. So please contact me, or any other SGA member, in the SGA office for information or to provide input into what kinds of activities Student Government should be performing. You can also call us at 395-3553.

I look forward to seeing you. Sincerely,

Joe Mitchell

I'm Baaaaaacccckkk!!!!

Welcome back Seahawks, at least I think we are still Seahawks. I should have known something was fishy when the Campus Rip-Off shop (that's the Bookstore, for the economically illiterate) sold all of this Seahawk paraphernalia last semester at almost reasonable prices.

Anyhow, in case you haven't heard, the folks that run dear old Seahawk High decided that our Seahawk mascot was not up to speed with how they feel our university should appear to others.

It seems that the old Seahawk was not tough enough and, at the same time, not regal enough to adequately represent the school's mission.

At a time when (soon not to be) President Bush has called for "kinder, gentler" mascots, I find it ironic that the new UNCW mascot was designed to be more fearsome and less friendly than the old "beachy" looking mascot.

All told, I guess I really do like the new Seahawk; perhaps I'm just a bit slighted that the post office somehow lost my invitation to be on the "Out with the old, in with the new Seahawk mascot" committee.

Well, I trust everyone had a good summer. I know I did, even though I spent the whole three weeks working. Be sure to tune in next time for the "How I Spent My Summer" issue.

The highlight of the summer

"I'm just common folk, even though I'm a schizophrenic billionaire."

was my job testing drugs (yes legal ones) at a local analytical lab. I'll never look at Sudafed in quite the same light.

I also spent a week working at a camp where high school students learn how their government doesn't work.

Actually, it turned out to be a stumping ground for local politicians to explain how they planned to end the welfare cycle, control crime and prison populations, and guarantee every man, woman, and child a good job at the local hog processing plant.

Speaking of politicians, I trust everyone is following the Daytime Soap Opera known as the 1992 Presidential Election. It began months ago with thousands of nobodies with no money and no clue of what they were getting into.

Now we are down to the two candidates who have had the least number of affairs, smoked the least amount of marijuana, and have done the least amount of damage in their current administrations.

For a while there was a third candidate, we'll call him "Ross," who ran on the "I'm just common folk even though I am a schizophrenic billionaire" platform.

Amazingly enough, he captured the hearts of more Americans than even E. T. did.

He may well have been on the way to victory when he saw both his stocks and popularity fall and decided to "do the right thing and pull out." That sounds more like a public service announcement for birth control than a serious presidential candidate.

I read in the Wilmington Morning Star that Bill Clinton still has a commanding lead over our present Commando in Chief.

I was recently fortunate enough to get a phone interview with former President Reagan from his Ranch/Rest Home in California, and I asked him who he thought would win. I couldn't understand most of what he said, but he did say he didn't think Dukakis had much of a chance.

I have already determined who I'm voting for but, in my longstanding commitment to the high journalistic standards I aspire to, I'll wait until a later issue, "Why I'm Not Voting For George," to get into that.

I guess that about wraps it up for this week. To all my loyal readers I say "Welcome back" and I hope you have a great year.

If you are new to the school, then I say "Welcome" and I hope you survive the year and get a return ticket for three (or perhaps four or five) more.

I look forward to providing you with a minutely intelligent, minusculely humorous, and semi-coherent piece of my mind about every other week here in The Seahawk.

I am not a staff writer for The Seahawk, rather, I'm an independent columnist. What I have to say doesn't necessarily reflect my or anyone else's particular views.

I try to question everything while answering nothing, and I love to take shots at various public disservice agencies (i.e. bookstore, campus police, county commissioners, and the like) on campus and around town.

Reader comments, cards, and monetary gifts are always welcome. Just send them to: NoBull Prize Winning Columnist Phil Smith, care of The Seahawk.

Until next time... keep your mind out of the gutter, and your head out of the toilet.

"YEAH ... RIGHT"

By RaMona Hupp
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Okay, firstly, and more importantly, I need professional psychiatric help for actually volunteering to do this job once again. Secondly, it is painfully obvious that I need help in order to screw this page up to its full potential. Over the past few decades of working for this newspaper, I've seen a rather cynical, albeit somewhat humorous, slant take shape on this page.

As Elvis (or was it John Stamos?) used to say, "Have mercy!" Of course, I hardly think Elvis was thinking fluff journalism (there's an oxymoron) when they uttered these words, but I'm stressing out so let me have my fantasy.

So, have mercy on me (I'll also take pity), and help create a new and interesting A & E page this year. Come by and see us in room 205E in the Union. I'll be the one lighting a candle for Elvis, and for me. Yeah ... right.

Not What He Expected

BY GREG RUSS
Photographer & Writer
Extraordinaire

Lollapalooza, the traveling festival of sorts, hit Raleigh's Walnut Creek Amphitheater Tuesday. It was hardly what I expected.

An interesting array of musicians, organizations, and side shows greeted thousands of people. This show, like so many, was full of young people who dressed to "fit in." Of course, you have original people who make fashion statements, but this was ridiculous. One had to almost feel sorry for these people who wore leggings and long skirts with big black boots just to be trendy. It was kind of funny actually: I mean these chicks just looked so unnatural and unhappy.

Anyway, getting back to the concert, I was disappointed by it. We had lawn seats, so the bands were just tiny specs in one's binoculars. And this reserved seating...well, that just does not work. You couldn't go down to the stage unless you paid out the butt for reserved seating. So no one was really slamming or anything fun like that. Instead you had to play cards or sleep to pass the time.

And of course there were plenty of organizations inside the information tent. Canabis Action Network (CAN) was set up with information and a museum on hemp and hemp products. The Libertarians were set up with a survey that would rate you on a political chart. This was interesting because it would rate you via personal freedoms and economic freedoms as liberal, centrist, conservative, authoritarian, or libertarian. They seemed disappointed that I was a little left of center.

Anyway, Refuse and Resist.

Rock the Vote, Greenpeace, People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals(PETA), and the ACLU were also present.

Probably the biggest highlight of the day; other than seeing, or should I say hearing LUSH, PEARL JAM, and the JESUS AND MARY CHAIN; was the side stage. Even though I did not see them, I was almost proud that Wilmington's own BILLY CLUB FEST played early in the day.

But the main attraction, for me, was Jim Rose's Circus Side Show. I had seen these freaks earlier on the Sally Jessy ("Because she cares") Raphael show but this was really a treat. These guys did everything from swallowing swords, fly swatters, and crickets, to putting needles and pins in one's flesh, played human darts, self stomach pumping through the nose, and weight lifting with a hook through one's tongue. People were dropping like flies from this stuff, paramedics were on hand for those fainters.

Even though this festival had its high points, it just did not compare to the HFS-Uval I saw earlier in Washington, D.C. Compare seeing LUSH, PEARL JAM, JESUS AND MARY CHAIN, SOUND GARDEN, ICE-CUBE, MINISTRY, and the RED HOT CHILI PEPPERS for $25 to seeing MANIFESTO, WOLFGANG PRESS, TOO MUCH JOY, CHATHARINE WHEEL, GRAHAM PARKER, THEY MIGHT BE GIANTS, OCEAN BLUE, CHARLATANS UK, and the SOUP DRAGONS for $6. I guess after seeing that show nothing could really live up to what I expected of festivals. Anyway, it was an interesting experience that is a part of my ever so exciting life.

NEW VIDEO RELEASES

WHITE MEN CAN'T JUMP— Well of course they can, but I don't want to be the one to ruin the ending for you. Wesley Snipes (Jungle Fever) and Woody Harrelson (Cheers) make this movie come alive with their funny, not to mention inventive ad-libbing.

Finally a film that has figured out what to do with the obligatory, hollow, make the male star look good—girlfriend: give her a burning desire to be a Jeopardy! contestant. And how many foods start with the letter "q"? Rent the movie and find out. (I just get misty-eyed when I think how far Hollywood scriptwriters have come.)

FRIED GREEN TOMATOES— Jessica Tandy (Driving Miss Daisy) spins one hell of a yarn to Kathy Bates, and Bates (Misery) doesn't even try to break her legs, or anything. By the way, was I the only one who figured out Tandy was telling the story about younger self? Oops, there I go again, giving away the ending.

WILD ORCHID 2: TWO SHADES OF BLUE— Maybe they should have titled this two shades of flesh. I can't ruin the ending of this one for you because (a) I haven't seen it, and (b) I have sneaking suspicion this film doesn't have much of a plot.

If this one is any hotter than the first, your VCR just might blow up, unless Jesse Helms gets to it first.

Wild Willy Parsons welcomed over four hundred new and returning students last Monday night. Wild Willy was one of three comedians brought to the campus for Welcoming Week '92.

An Impressive UNCW Welcoming

If you came to campus with barely enough time to get to classes, then you've missed out on a lot of events taking place this past week, because it's Welcoming Week on UNCW's campus, and it's had an impressive start.

The activities began this past weekend with a dinner, food fair and a dance featuring the VOLTAGE BROTHERS. The momentum gained on Monday with the performance of three comedians, and hit a feverish pace as Wednesday's "Be a Sport Day" took place.

Wednesday's activities included volleyball tournaments, a BBQ, an outdoor concert by MR. POTATO HEAD, and my personal favorite, a Vetro wall jump known as the Venus Fly Trap!

Today's events include a non-traditional student reception, plus your chance to win some dinero in the Blizzard of Bucks game show which will take place at Center Stage Cafe at 8:00 pm.

Here's an empty space.
Pause and reflect.

Late Night at Center Stage will take place on Friday night. The game room and cafe will be open until 2:00 am. Organized tournaments, karaoke, and a midnight movie (Lethal Weapon II) will keep you busy.

The week's festivities will wind down on Saturday night with a campus dance, also to be held in the University Center.

UNCW's first Welcoming Week was a collaborative effort of ACE, SGA, SA Office and the University Center. A committee was formed at the end of last semester to bring you Welcoming Week in order to ease the transformation of freshmen into campus life.

ACE (Association of Campus Entertainment) has a lot more events coming to campus. Upcoming comedian Carrot Top and hot movies such as Basic Instinct, The Last Boy Scout and Final Analysis, all in the coming months.

So You Want To Be A Star?

General auditions for the UNCW Theatre's fall productions have been set from 4:00 to 6:00 p.m. today (Thursday, Aug. 20) and from 7:00 to 10:00 p.m., Friday, Aug. 21. The auditions will be held in the SRO Theatre in Kenan Hall. Casts for the first two productions of the season will be selected during this general audition.

The presentation of Arthur Miller's Creation of the World and Other Business will be directed by Donald R. Hawley, theatre lecturer and manager of Kenan Auditorium.

Although the play is not a musical, the production needs musicians to play bassoon, acoustic guitar, banjo, harmonica, percussion and the ever popular dulcimer. There's also an opportunity for thespians who aren't musically inclined. If you always wanted to play Adam, Eve or the big guys—God or Lucifer, well here's your chance. (No typecasting please.)

The second production will be Rumors by Neil Simon. Directed by Gerald Honaker, visiting professor of theatre, Rumors will be performed during the month of November. This play is a fast-paced comedy and will need a cast of five men and five women.

A lot of campus rapes start here.

Whenever there's drinking or drugs, things can get out of hand. So it's no surprise that many campus rapes involve alcohol. But you should know that under any circumstances, sex without the other person's consent is considered rape. A felony, punishable by prison. And drinking is no excuse. That's why, when you party, it's good to know what your limits are. You see, a little sobering thought now can save you from a big problem later.

War is Declared

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor.

The office of Recreation and intramurals has added new weapons to wage their campus-wide war against apathy. Over the last couple of semesters, the office has mounted a massive offensive, that is crippling the evil apathy. The causality reports against student apathy is among one of the highest on campus. Soon this battle by the sea should reach cataclysmic numbers enticing most of the campus into their gym.

But to insure a swift victory, General Elaine Penn has called upon special forces to inflict the final offensive. With the addition of special training facilities which include the aerobics room and the awesome metamorphosis of the weight room, the office now relies on the existing cracker jack staff and new tactical experts.

Brian Cooper, is the intramural tactician, his mission is to make the entire campus more aware of the opportunities that the office is planning and is developing. I had the chance to interact with Brian, not on covert operations but on less secret taco bell spy missions. One could actually see his enthusiasm toward getting the students involved. His main offensive is to interact with as many students, faculty and groups as possible. Well a least this is the plan.

Elaine will be commanding the recreation and club sports area of this offensive. This dichotomy of tasks between General Penn and Colonel Cooper will allow the two to maximize their efforts toward getting students, faculty and other campus group involve. The evil empire of apathy is destined to fall this fall.

Back To The Basics For 'Hawks

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

This soccer season the Seahawks need to replace seven: fullback Carlos Davis, midfielders Greg Diamond, who led the team in scoring and Peter Clay, forwards Gerard Schwenk, Alex Sibinovic and Adrian Pearson added to the loss of goalie Tom Redmond who played all but fifty-three minutes in goal last season.

Coach Jackie Blackmore had a tough task in front of him during this week's tryouts. With half of last year's team returning, the coach still had eleven spots to fill.

"The CAA, in soccer is arguably the second toughest conference in the nation. It was formed on the commonality of basketball, but it turns out to be one of the soccer powerhouses in NCAA Division One," explained Coach Blackmore.

The CAA has five of its eight teams nationally ranked in the top twenty teams in the nation. William & Mary, Richmond, Old Dominion, American and James Madison are the CAA's Top twenty Standouts. Last season UNCW only defeated East Carolina, and American on their way to a two and six conference record.

This year's schedule includes North Carolina State, NCAA quarterfinalists last season. Coach Blackmore feels that this schedule will challenge and build the skills of this year's young team.

Senior fullback Paul Cairney, the team's second leading scoring last season, is highly optimistic about the upcoming season. "We lost seven (starters) from last season, but the addition of this year's new players, will be a positive impact on our team," commented Paul on the final day of tryouts.

Commenting on the difficulty of the upcoming schedule Paul asserts that, "We have beaten Carolina, in scrimages before, and they were nationally ranked."

Todd Pascarella a Junior midfielder feels, "that this team this year can pull off some upsets, maybe even starting with N.C. State."

Coach Blackmore feels that defense will be the team strength, since there are so many defensive players back this season.

Blackmore said, "Offensively last season, we had problems getting the ball into the goal. Unlike basketball, offense here is not as spontaneous."

Attacking will be the focus of the Hawks offensive practices, while getting in gear for their home game against the Citadel September 5 at Legion Stadium

Sprecher, 29, earned his bachelor's degree from Ball State in physical education and health science. He completed his masters in sports management at Baylor University. Coach Sprecher will be replacing Bill Canon, after his resignation in May.

Basketball assistant coach Frank Haith has left the Seahawks to be an assistant coach at Texas A&M. Haith is very excited about this chance to help out second-year Coach Tony Barone at A&M. Haith also said it would be difficult to leave our growing program.

Eighth year coach Kathy McDaniel is conditioning the women's volleyball team for a season debut on September 4 at the UNC's tournament which is held in Charlotte. There the team will play UNC Asheville, UNC Charlotte and UNC Chapel Hill.

Playing a thirty plus game season, the Seahawks will face five top-one hundred teams. The University of Connecticut, Georgia Tech, UNC Charlotte, UNC Chapel Hill and William And Mary.

"Of the five top teams we face this year, I think Georgia Tech, will definitely be the toughest", said McDaniel. The Seahawks play GT, in Georgia on Oct. 10.

Last season the Seahawks were deadly on the road posting a 17-4 record. The ability to win on the road will be helpful in the nine tournaments the team will in this fall.

Coming off a 23-10 season, the Seahawks were ranked eighty-fourth in the nation.

Increasing their ranking will not be an easy task. The team lost two key starters from last season.

Two-time all CAA, midhitter Kim Cavanaugh, the team leader in kills, and setter Julie Shouse, will be noticeably absent from the Seahawks line up this season.

The good news is that Coach McDaniel has four returning starters. Assist leader, senior Sheldon Plentovich, senior Jennifer Jameison, senior Leslie Knauss and junior Amy Chlaskausky will be the core of the Seahawks attack this season.

"They are a smart team, they learn skills quickly, which allows us to cover alot of ground in our preseason practices", is how McDaniel summarizes these players. The Seahawks first match is Eastman said that this is a great opportunity for Haith and a good reflection on UNCW's Program.

UNCW mens basketball team has three players sitting out for the upcoming season. 6-foot-2 guard Gannon Baker from Duquesne and six foot seven forward Corey Stewart from Virginia are transfer students and are forced by NCAA rules to redshirt next season. Freshman Preston McGriff will also be redshirted due to proposition 48.

The 1995 NCAA Division I women's golf championship will be at Landfall. This will mark the first time UNCW has hosted an NCAA championship.

"We are extremely pleased to be the host school for the 1995 championship," said A.D. Paul Miller.

The Lady Seahawks have lost two basketball players for next season. Joanna Chandler is out due to an off-season knee injury. Chandler will redshirt next season while recovering from knee surgery. Guard Lorraine Cordway, the leading scorer and rebounder, has been declared academically ineligible for the upcoming season.

The men basketball team lost Greg Cave. Cave, a freshman center last year on the men's Basketball team, will not be playing for UNCW next season.

UNCW golfers were honored for academic excellence. LinValera and Stephanie Poulin were selected to the 1992 East Coast Athletic Conference All-Academic Team. Valera, a junior pre-med student was also selected in 1991. Poulin, a sophomore business major, received her first honor.

Undergraduate Program Pays Off UNCW Professor Receives Patent For Stain Process

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

Unlike most universities, UNCW places major emphasis on its undergraduate program, and that paid off in a potentially big way over the summer.

U. S. Patent No. 5,137,810 was issued to the university effective August 11, 1992, for a safe, easy-to-interpret, one-step gram staining technique for identifying bacterial types invented by Dr. Ronald K. Sizemore, chair of the Biological Sciences Department, and Jerra Caldwell in 1986 here at UNCW.

Caldwell, a medical technologist at Annie Penn Memorial Hospital in Reidville, NC, developed the process in 1986 as an undergraduate student.

"The program was not central to research we were doing at the time," Dr. Sizemore said. "A mentor had claimed marine bacteria were gram positive, not negative as most people believed. It was very controversial. Because the was no way to test marine bacteria the conventional way, we tried to develop a new technique."

"Dr. Dick Dillman suggested using lectins for structural staining. We tested it and found incredible results."

The new process identifies bacterium as either positive or negative through its structure, rather than its retention. The old process, originally developed in 1883, is a messy, four-step stain that takes about three minutes to perform and has a 5-10% margin of error.

Dr. Sizemore and Caldwell's technique takes less than a minute, uses only one stain, and can be used on cultures without incubation. The process is virtually error-free.

Dr. Ron Sizemore, chairman of the Biological Sciences Department here at UNCW, has developed a process to more efficiently identify bacterium.

The new procedure uses a commercially available fluorescent wheat germ lectin, agglutinin, to stain an air-dried bacterial smear. The stain is rinsed and covered with glass. The smear is brought into focus with phase contrast optics and illuminated with ultraviolet light using an epifluorescent microscope. Gram positive bacteria show up clearly; gram negative do not. The entire process can be done in 15 seconds.

The speed, dependability, and use of non-toxic materials makes the new process potentially highly marketable. The old process is done thousands of times a day in most hospitals around the country.

Another person who contributed heavily to the project was Anne F. Kendrick, assistant professor of biological sciences at UNCW and medical technology coordinator. Kendrick spent a year blind testing bacteria donated from New Hanover Regional Medical Center. Using the old process 143 times, Kendrick came up with 271 conclusive and six incorrect results.

Using the new process 437 times, Kendrick came up with 13 incorrect results. The 13 were then examined and 12 were found to be contaminated, thus throwing off the result.

At the press conference announcing the patent award, UNCW Chancellor James Leutze said it gave him "special pride to note that the co-inventor of this method was an undergraduate biology student when it was discovered."

UNCW's emphasis on capitalizing on the talents of its undergraduates sets UNCW apart from most universities and has paid off in a potentially large way.

Allman Brothers

As you know, the Allman Brothers Band will be playing Trask Coliseum Wednesday, Sep. 2, at 8 p.m. Student tickets are still available for $12.50 at the Information Center in the University Union. As of Monday there were only 138 student tickets remaining.

What you may not know is the band came into existence in 1968. It released its first album The Allman Brothers Band in 1969 and followed it up with Idlewild South in 1970 and the classic At Fillmore East live album in 1971. Duane Allman, co-founder of the band with brother Gregg, died in a motorcycle accident in 1971.

The band survived the tragedy until 1981 when it broke up. In 1989, the band decided to try it again with two new members, guitarist Warren Haynes and bass player Allen Woody.

The band reclaimed its spot as one of the best rock bands around with its Seven Turns (1990) and Shades of Two Worlds (1991) releases.

The Allman Brothers Band's latest release An Evening With The Allman Brothers Band is the band's first live album since 1971 and does not include any of the songs on that album.

An Evening With... contains the first-ever official live recordings of Allman Brothers Band classics "Revival", "Dreams", and "Melissa".

With the cooperation of Brant Vanboy, concert chairman of the Association for Campus Entertainment, and Michael Durham, I was able to get a hold of Warren Haynes, one of the guitarists in the band, and conduct the following interview.

UNCW Campus Is Hurricane Ready In Case Of Another Hugo

BY SUSAN WEITZ
Staff Writer

What if Hurricane Andrew were to come on land here? Many students, both from the coastal and inland areas, fear the threat of hurricanes.

Hurricanes are tropical cyclones in which winds reach a constant speed of 74 miles per hour or more. They are defined as giant whirlwinds in which the air moves in a spiral around a relatively calm center, known as the eye. This eye can be very deceptive, as those caught in it may think the worst is over; however, there is more to come.

These storms are formed over a large area of open sea, exposed to direct tropical sunlight for a week to ten days, and have four stages of development: the formative stage, immature stage, mature stage, and lastly, the stage of decay.

According to Stanley Harts, UNCW's safety technician, students who can go home are strongly urged to do so. Anne Devaney, the co-manager of the emergency shelter here on campus agrees. For this reason, classes are cancelled four hours prior to adverse driving conditions, which are defined as the point when winds reach 40 miles per hour.

All students unable to leave are advised to contact their parents of their whereabouts, secure all electrical equipment away from windows and doors, and lock up bikes before heading to the University Union, UNCW's only shelter, or any of the other American Red Cross approved shelters. Anyone heading to a shelter should bring something to sleep on as well as cards, books, and any necessities.

In the case where an evacuation becomes necessary, signs will be posted outside suite and apartment doors, by the elevators, and in Wagoner Hall. Residence Hall staff will ensure that all residents leave the building, whether heading to a shelter, or home.

Off campus, most apartment buildings also post signs on doors or bulletin boards. Please check these places often for updates on the situation, or check with the apartment office for evacuation procedures.

HOW TO TRACK A HURRICANE

Advisories are numbered consecutively for each storm. Present location and intensity is indicated and forecast movement is given. Tropical advisory are issued at six-hour intervals—midnight, 3 a.m., noon, and 3 p.m. Eastern Daylight Time. Each message gives the storm's central (eye) position, intensity, and forecast movement of the tropical cyclone.

Hurricane center positions are given by latitude and longitude. 15.0 degrees North and longitude the example, 85.0 degrees West. When the storm moves within range of radar, center position may also be given in station cities and distances from a specified point.

* Tropical systems are given names only when they reach the status of tropical storm or higher. Names are listed in alphabetical order.

Andrew Rocks Gulf

BY SUSAN WEITZ
Staff Writer

Andrew has at long last been downgraded from a category four hurricane to a tropical storm with winds of only 65 miles per hour, yet only Tuesday wreaked havoc on Louisiana's coast with 140 mph winds, and tortured Miami Beach with winds of up to 164 miles per hour.

It has been reported to be the costliest hurricane in U.S. history, with damages estimated at between $15 and $20 billion. Hurricane Hugo, back in 1989, previously held the record for high dollar damages, with claims adding up to $7 billion.

Roofless houses, uprooted trees, downed traffic signals, and furniture scattered along roads and in parking lots are common sites in the areas of Louisiana and Florida that were the hardest hit by the storm.

Residents have been calling it a modern-day apocalypse, and President Bush pledged an immediate $50 million in federal disaster aid, even before stepping foot in Miami or Lafayette.

Louisiana's governor, Edwin W. Edwards declared a state of emergency, and requested a federal disaster declaration for the state.

Andrew left more than 50,000 homeless in Dade County alone, flattening whole neighborhoods and destroying trailer parks.

Luckily, the death count has been low because most people cleared out in time. Most of the twelve confirmed deaths reported have been from drowning and tornadoes which touched down in the midst of the hurricane.

As bad as Andrew was, it could have been worse. Miami Beach and Key Biscayne were expecting a storm surge to bring a wall of water over the two cities, but it never materialized.

Joe Mitchell, president of the Student Body, delivered the annual State of the University speech to members of the Student Government Association Senate.

The speech, which must be delivered by the president at the first SGA meeting of the year according to the Constitution of the SGA, focused on what SGA has done and where Mitchell wants the organization to go.

Mitchell focused on the benefits students have received from SGA in the past. He cited these as representation, funding of student organizations and special programming.

"Three quarters of our members are elected by the students, any student can run and then the student body decides who holds elected positions. This means that students who hold elected positions in SGA know they must report directly to the students."

One aspect that senators might have to report on is where the money SGA allocates goes. SGA is allotted over $250,000 in student fees and they funded 20 organizations, ranging from sports clubs and minority groups to academic clubs.

As well as funding clubs, SGA started new programs and is in the process of starting new ones. Among these new programs are Legal Services, a Challenge Course, Take a Faculty Member to lunch, campus recycling, SGA's own consignment bookstore and fax service for registered student organizations.

Students Venture Abroad

Exotic pictures and killer earrings aren't the only things UNCW summer study students got from different countries.

"We saw everything you could see," said senior marketing major Don Hanson, who went on the Barbados four week archaeological dig "for the dig and also a vacation." For about $1,900, the 13 member group stayed in a dorm at the college and worked for the Barbados Museum.

The group dug up a slave shack from the 1600s, and the weekly Barbados newspaper featured the find, said Hanson. "That's the biggest find there's ever been," he said.

They also discovered more of life from the people and culture. "I learned that we take for granted what we have," Hanson said. "Basically, we have everything compared to them."

However, the "happy go lucky" Bajan don't stay depressed by economic difficulties, he said. "They're at the beach and they enjoy what they have. They take it day by day."

The second session to Barbados was a three week study of English and sociology, costing about $1,700. English Department chairperson, Jo Ann Seiple, taught the course Caribbean Writers, which was geared towards Dr. Diane Levy's sociology class, and also the culture.

"The island was the classroom," Dr. Seiple said. Students interacting with the people made them more accepting and understanding of the customs and culture they learned about in the classroom, she said.

The eight students, ranging in majors from nursing to marine biology, "became brothers and sisters together" as they adjusted to the new culture, Dr. Seiple said. One aspect of the trip to adjust to was having to adjust to the bats.

At Coddington College dorms, where the group lived, windows were kept open and "Bats would come in and visit us," she said. "I had one in my bed once."

Costa Rica got a taste of UNCW students with 18 students participating in a four and a half summer study, with a choice of two sections at a cost of about $1,800.

The students lived with families and junior marine biology major, Karna Davis, said her favorite part of the trip was "getting to meet the people in the group as well as the people there."

The most difficult thing to adjust to was probably being submerged in Spanish, she said. "If you weren't fluent in the language, that was the hardest thing. It was weird riding around and seeing all the signs in Spanish."

However, by the end she had improved. "I started dreaming in Spanish."

Dawn Evans Radford, an English graduate student, said that the group experienced some small earthquakes, but "as long as there's earthquakes people don't have to worry about volcanic activity."

Some other things weren't quite the same as in the U.S.

"A stop sign is a suggestion there," she said. But the climate was "just delicious," with temperatures ranging from 68 to 80, and rain every day at 1:00.

Both students said that the food was delicious, although it consisted of a lot of beans and rice, or gallo pinto.

"The whole thing was priceless. It was the best form of education a person can get. On a program like that you learn so much more because you're experiencing it yourself," Radford said.

Sixteen students went to Spanish-speaking Ecuador for four weeks, costing about $1,700, with a variety of courses offered. Ecology students, like senior biology major, Janice Robbie, spent two weeks in the jungle and lived in huts.

"It was the most beautiful experience of my life. I learned a lot because it was hands-on experience." The group went on hikes, caymen-watching, fishing, and bird-watching, among other things.

All students experienced the people and culture of Quito as they lived with families and went to the University of San Francisco. An International Club at the University greeted students at the airport and helped them throughout their stay.

"The people in the International Club were awesome. We were there like one day and they were already our best friends," Robbie said.

Ms. Aida Toplin, Coordinator of the study abroad programs and International student advisor, said that an International Club will be started at UNCW. Within the next few weeks interested students will meet, draw up the constitution, and elect officers.

The International Club is envisioned to provide a social framework for exchange students, she said, and also allow UNCW students to continue to extend their international education.

Eight criminal justice majors went to London, England for three weeks to take criminal justice courses. The cost was about $2,600. They lived in dorms with students from Italy, Germany, and France. Senior Tashia Lewis said that, "It was really different; it was a lot of fun."

The group toured the jails, prisons, courts, and Scotland Yard.

"It was really neat to compare the two systems. They do not use

Jim Clark I Let My Mind Wander And It Didn't Come Back

What a wild week it has been. The Republican Party wrapped up its convention with President George Bush and VP Dan Quayle getting the nod from the Great Old Bill in the Sky to try and run the country for another four years.

I would have preferred their running this country the past four years, instead of defeating those brain-washed, godless, Big Mac-starved commies.

Toss a rat into a boa constrictor's care and see what happens. More likely than not, nothing will happen. But, when the snake gets hungry, ooh out!

I liken the citizens of the East Bloc countries to the snake, the United States to the rat-tosser, and freedom to the rat.

The communist governments oppressed their people, abused their power, and lied about everything to maintain power (sounds like the Republicans, doesn't it). Once the people had had enough, they revolted en masse. There was nothing the governments could do. The people wanted freedom from their government, not to join the number of Americans who put money in the S&L fiasco.

Presidents Reagan and Bush are rat-tossers. Heck, every president since WWII has been one. The only difference is the snake bit during their administrations. It wouldn't have mattered if Pee Wee Herman had been president, communism was coming to an end. (And I'll bet Pee Wee wouldn't have been caught with his pants down by it.)

I hate politics because it is for the rich, by the rich, and of the rich. Another topic of discussion is Andrew. By now he probably isn't even a tropical storm anymore.

Staff writer Susan Weitz has written a story about what to do if a hurricane were to hit Wilmington. In the coming weeks we will further detail hurricane preparedness procedures for UNCW and the Wilmington area.

(President Bush broke a law of physics the other day, did you hear about it? Faster than light, he flew to Miami after the hurricane hit. He was like a lawyer to an accident, Jimmy Swaggart to a prostitute, Oliver North to a shredder, and Sally Struthers to a starving child.)

Hurricanes are not something to take lightly. Especially in Wilmington. We are on a peninsula and have little contour to the ground. The Miami area was spared from a storm surge, but that might not be the case here.

Wednesday night, the biggest concert in UNCW's history, at least in 10 years I've been here, will happen, the Allman Brothers Band with special guests The Red Devils.

In order to continue to attract top acts, be they musicians, comedians, or trampolining dunkers, it is imperative the school produces a huge student turnout.

We are privileged to get an act like the Allmans here. They will be laying Carowinds in Charlotte on September 4, Atlanta on the fifth, and Walnut Creek on the sixth. UNCW is the only college on this tour. We need a large turnout.

Warren Hayes promised they would play a minimum of 2.5 hours, and possibly four. This band is one of the tightest groups you will ever get to see.

Besides, you will also get to see one of Cher's exes.

If you are a fan of Star Trek, a Trekker, then you need to be at the University Center Saturday, August 29, between 11 a.m. and 5 p.m. Ambassador Sarek, Spock's father, will be there. Mark Leonard, the actor, is also one of only a handful of actors to play three different aliens.

There will be a costume contest, door prizes, and a chance to hear the most famous words in the universe.

No, not "Damn it, Jim, it's not even female!"

"Live long and prosper!"

Stillpoint with Bob Haywood

Self Control Key To College Success

We would like to see ourselves a strong, independent agents who are "captains of our fate and masters of our souls." But we are not! If we are lucky, we are on our way to such a state of independence, but most of us still submit to forces beyond us that often leave us involved in attitudes and actions with which we are internally uncomfortable.

I think it is very important, in our college years that we give the power to influence the decisions we make. It is critically important to have friends who like us and care for us. It is critical for us to belong to the groups that make us think we are "okay" and help us feel included. In other words, having close peers and peer groups is a very significant part of our college experience and appropriately so. There is simply too much going on, too many decisions to be made, too much to work on to want to approach our college experience alone. And those who do fine themselves alone, in most cases wish that they weren't. Still, it is important that we ask ourselves how much control we are willing to give to an individual or a group.

My perception is that many who are part of the university scene give away an awful lot of power in order to please certain persons and/or groups. We become participants, albeit sometimes uncomfortable participants in a whole range of activity related to partying, attitudes about certain groups different from us, attitudes towards people in authority over us, values related to behavior—to sex and drugs and alcohol that are different from the values we bring to our university experience. It has been my opportunity to work frequently with women who are experiencing an unwanted pregnancy who, in retrospect, expectations of a party scene and wished that they had not. Their common determination is to become clear about their own personal values and to exert found that they had given away too much power to the greater strength in determining, themselves, how they are going to relate to people and situations in the future.

I would hope that many of you would choose to become more intentionally reflective on your own values and the impact of those values on what you do and how you function here at UNCW, without having to face such a crisis.

One place for you to begin is to take some private moments and choose to become aware of who it is you are trying to please in order to meet what you perceive are your needs here at UNCW.

Secondly, then reflect on whether you find yourself being invited by persons or groups to do some things with which you feel uncomfortable. What specifically triggers these emotions inside you? What is it that is causing you to ignore the uncomfortable messages within?

The third step would be to seek out someone, whether peer or university resource, with whom you can talk through the conflict you are having to gain both insight and support for finding ways to meet your needs without compromising your value.

It "ain't" easy! It is important. The people who find the most meaning and joy in life seem to be people who have internalized their focus of control. People with inner strength and conviction have more effective relationships with spouses and peers and business superiors. It is not too soon to develop a strong sense of integrity that allows inner values to be acted out in the context of our needs for friends and groups of friends that seem so important in having a successful life as a student here at UNCW.

I hope and pray that you will find the strength to intentionally explore the forces at work in your life and your needs. You are in charge of yourself and that fact alone invites you to become more clearly self-responsible in all your choices. If you'd like a safe place to talk about these concerns, give me a call at 799-8497.

Carole Mehle Get Involved

Get involved. It is something that students are told every year.

And some listen and get involved—whether it be through joining a Greek organization, one of the many clubs, by being involved with The Seahawk or by being one of the elected members of Student Government.

In past years, students have been accused of being apathetic. Joe Mitchell, student body president, has said many of the vacancies are filled that SGA advertised in The Seahawk last week.

Mitchell also said there has been a good response to registering for the upcoming elections, being held September 8 and 10.

For the elections, Mitchell hopes to improve the communication between SGA and the students through publicity. Through candidates' forums, fliers and displays, he wants to get more students involved in SGA and the university than ever before. He wants the students to know what is going on with their money.

And after all, students, it is our money with which SGA works. We have a right, a responsibility in some ways to get involved, whether with SGA or one of the organizations that they support.

One way that Mitchell hopes that students will support SGA is by voting in their upcoming elections. "I hope that we see a good number. I encourage all to vote," he said.

And we all should vote. By voting for these people, we are ensuring our money is spent well. We can make sure that the people that want to do good for our school can. We are showing we care what happens to our money.

As a part of SGA, Mitchell has ideas with what he wants to do with the money that SGA is allotted out of student fees. He needs people in SGA who represent the student body's needs, people who have been elected by the students. After all, SGA's motto is "Students serving students."

In summer school, there were people who rushed to spend their declining balance so the school wouldn't get their money. There were on-campus residents who complained about having to pay a $10 activity fee. "We shouldn't have to pay it. We're not involved in anything."

That is why we have to pay it, as an incentive to get involved—to insure your money is getting put to use on activities that interest us, the students.

We have to get involved.

UU 205

It's 2:30 a.m. on a Friday night/ Saturday morning and you are driving down Crews Drive. When you get to Randall Drive you slow down, check for on-coming traffic, see none, and turn.

The next thing you see in your rear-view mirror is that all too familiar shade of blue rotating brilliantly.

The Campus Police have just nailed you for not coming to a complete stop at a stop sign.

You just need to go in the post office for thirty seconds, so you park in the handicapped space. When you come out you find an officer placing a ticket on your windshield.

You wake up a little late for class, and there is no one on the road, so you go about 35 to get to class as early as possible. The police pulled you over and don't care that you can't afford another tardy.

Has any of this happened to you? Are there things you see could be handled better by them?

What do you think of the job performed by the police?

Let The Seahawk know how you feel (keep it clean). In a couple of weeks, we will give the Campus Police a chance to respond to your comments.

Send your responses to: The Seahawk, 601 S. College Rd., Wilm, 28403; or drop them off at our office in UU205.

Allman Brothers Band Plays UNCW Sep. 2 Warren Haynes, Allman Brothers Guitarist

The Seahawk: As one of the newest members in the band, how did you get into the Allman Brothers Band?

Warren Haynes: Dickey Betts (the other guitarist in the band) and myself started working together in 1986 or 87. I played on his solo album. I wrote a song for it and played and sang on it. I was also writing songs for Gregg's solo album as well.

When they decided to put the Allmans back together in '89, they just called me and asked me to join. I've been with the band for four years, and Dickey and I worked together for three years before that.

TS: You co-wrote "End of the Line" (the first song on An Evening With...), how did that song come about?

WH: We (Gregg Allman, John Jaworowicz, Woody, and Haynes) wrote that song in pieces. It started with Allen and John writing a song together. Then Gregg got involved, and then they got me involved. It was a long process. That's probably the only collaboration we've done with that many people. It's usually just one or two.

The final product came about with me, Gregg, and Allen in Seattle. We had apparently gotten a little too loud for the hotel, playing and singing at 2 or 3 in the morning, so we went to the bus and sat until daylight working on the tune. When we got done, it was finished.

That one took a lot of meeting of the minds. Some of them come quickly, some of them don't.

TS: Is there anything on this tour with a horns section, as you had done with the (former) Tonight Show Band?

WH: No, the thing about the "Tonight Show", one year we did "True Gravity" from the Seven Turns album, which I co-wrote with Dickey, and the next year we did "Kind of Bird", a tribute to Charlie Parker. Both songs lend themselves to the Big Band horn section kind of feel. It was just an opportunity that arose with us doing the "Tonight Show".

We got there, rehearsed with the band, they made a few changes, and then we winged them. There was no real forethought, to tell you the truth. I really enjoyed doing it with horns.

TS: Pink Floyd, the Beatles, and the Rolling Stones have recorded with symphonies, will the Allman Brothers Band be doing something similar in the future?

WH: Probably not. We never really talked about that aspect. Through the years a few things similar have come about. Gregg did a solo album with a symphony orchestra backing him up, which was Gregg Allman and Cowboy.

This is something not very well known: When At Fillmore East was done, the first version they recorded had horns. Tom Dowd, the producer, was against it. He didn't like the horns in the Allman Brothers. They all went down to Atlantic Records, sat down and played the tapes, one with the horns and one without. (Dowd) convinced them it was better without.

Maybe Gregg will use horns on his next solo album. Right now though, with the Allman Brothers, there's so much going on-two guitars and three drummers- there's so much happening there's not much need for it. Plus, the music is not as conducive to it.

TS: You've been on tour since May, is the end of the road in sight?

WH: The second week in September. Then we're going to take an extended period of time off. We may do a few isolated shows here and there. Mostly though, we're going to be writing for a future studio album, and then do other projects as well.

TS: UNCW is the only college on your tour, why is that?

WH: (The Wilmington area) is a market we haven't played much and it seems to me the college market there would be a good market for the Allman Brothers Band.

TS: The album you are promoting with the tour is An Evening With The Allman Brothers Band. Tell me a little about this album.

WH: It's 75 minutes of live recordings. We made a conscious effort not to duplicate anything from At Fillmore East. It didn't seem right to repeat songs. There's so much material to choose from. If we do some more live albums, there may be some repeats, but, for the time being, we wanted to release versions of songs you had not heard live.

TS: Was this a Bruce Springsteen-type album, recorded at different venues and then choosing the best versions of songs, or was this a one-shot deal?

WH: We recorded in Macon, GA, Boston, and New York City, then picked the best stuff from the different cities. Most of it came out of Boston and New York.

TS: Any thoughts on being a member of the Allman Brothers Band?

WH: The Allmans have always been a very special band to me. When I was growing up, they were always one of my favorite bands. I was very influenced by the music. That helps for me having that background to come in and fill this position, so to speak.

It's an odd thing. The original Allman Brothers Band, with Duane Allman and Barry Oakley, was cut so short that it didn't really have a chance to even find out what it was capable of. Duane died before he was 25.

Dickey and Duane only played together for three years. Where as Dickey and I have been together for six. We've been able to spend a lot more time together and take the music in a lot more different directions than they were able to.

Of course, all of us would love to have known what it would have been like if the original band would have been able to stay together.

Off-Campus Dorm Coming

BY HOLLY PRICE
News Editor

UNC-Chapel Hill has Granville Towers and N.C. State has University Towers. Now UNCW students may have their own off-campus dormitory.

UNCW students will soon have an alternative to on-campus housing, that will still resemble a dormitory.

The 341-room dormitory will be built on McMillan Avenue. The land, owned by Horizon Land Trust, is behind K mart and near Stonestrow Townhouses.

Last Tuesday the Wilmington City Council approved a special-use permit to allow the dormitory to be built near UNCW. The project will be the city's first privately owned dormitory.

Overcrowding in UNCW dorms and classes prompted campus officials to cut the total freshman enrollment this year to 1,200 this year. With this new dorm, crowding in campus dorms would be lessened.

And the new Quad dorm will offer more to students than the on-campus facilities do. Each apartment will have two to four bedrooms. The original plans now also call for eight three-story apartment buildings, a restaurant, copy shop, convenience store, pool, laundry facilities, and kitchens.

"I think it is a great idea," said freshman Jim Wolf. "It gives the university a little competition."

The City Planning Commission's approval of this project came with a few rules. Only one person shall occupy each bedroom and no signs shall be mounted on the restaurants due to zoning regulations.

a lot of violence over there and it works well."

Some things weren't so different from home, as the "prisoners shouting obscenities" as they left the maximum security prisons.

Although Lewis said it was a great experience, she was glad to get home. "We got real tired of the accent over there. They were real pushy and always in a hurry so we were glad to be back."

The School of Education headed a two week trip to Australia, costing about $2,600, in conjunction with the Teaching Fellows program.

First offered to education students and then to the entire university, 38 students from UNCW and 13 from other campuses took the trip, flying 20 hours to reach the Land Down Under.

The group visited public schools and universities and compared the Australian system with the U.S.

About 30% of the schools in the Bush or Outback are one room classrooms, in which one teacher teaches kindergarten through twelfth grade, said Dr. Louis Lanunziata of the School of Education.

As with all the programs, "the nights were basically party time, you know," he said.

Next year the education department plans on a trip to Ecuador, Lanunziata said. Students will teach in Ecuadorian schools.

Dr. Gary Faulkner, Director of International Programs, said that the office will have information for next summer's programs in about a month.

"Most of what was offered this summer will be offered next summer with the possibility of one or two programs more," he said.

During the speech, Mitchell called the Association for Campus Entertainment, "SGA's number one student service program."

Mitchell also called SGA and its members, "a priceless resource."

He stated, "Without SGA many innovative, important and necessary programs would not have been provided."

Also included in the speech was Mitchell's vision for SGA. That vision included, "remaining focused and continuing along the path we have currently set...increasing publicity...working towards goals which were set at the end of last semester."

In addition, Mitchell said that he would like to see the start of the Senior Class Project and day care service.

"Students need to know that they can come to SGA with their concern and that we can do something about them."

Office of Recreation and Intramural Programs

Hanover #202 • 919/395-3261

Heart and Sole Fitness

The Office of Recreation and Intramural Programs offers a variety of fitness opportunities on a non-competitive, self-paced basis. The two biggest fitness programs are aerobics and weightlifting. Each aerobic class is designed to improve cardiovascular endurance, increase flexibility, and develop muscle tone. The weight room also offers a variety of fitness opportunities by providing equipment such as nautilus, free weights, lifecycles, step machines and treadmills. The recreation and intramural fitness instructors (aerobic teachers and weight room personnel) are required to attend a four day educational clinic in their area. Academic as well as practical course work is covered. In addition, each fitness instructor is certified in CPR. The staff will circulate throughout the weight room, and be available to place individuals on fitness programs, if requested. Fitness is not a trend, nor is it a fad. Instead, it is a way of life. Today is the day to make the decision to enter into a healthier, more fit lifestyle. Take a short trip across campus to Hanover Gymnasium, and you will discover the many fitness opportunities that are right at your fingertips.

Intramural Sports

Intramural Sports is the largest program offered by the Office of Recreation and Intramural Programs. The participation is excellent and the contests are always competitive. However, the most significant benefit gained from these athletic events is the socialization that occurs. With each game, the players learn more and more about team spirit.

Flag football is the first intramural sport, and registration for it has already begun. Teams or individuals may register at the computer clusters located around campus (library, Trask, Bear, Cameron, and Academic Computing). If there are questions regarding computer registration or deadlines, do not hesitate to call our office at 395-3261. Deadlines are very important. After the original schedule is developed, teams cannot be added. In addition to the regular flag football season, a pre-season flag football tournament is also being offered. The 1992 Kickoff Classic will be played on September 5 beginning at 9:00am. Teams may register for the tournament in The Office of Recreation and Intramural Programs. We look forward to another great year in intramural sports. Let the games begin!

Club Sports

This is an exciting time for club sports at UNC Wilmington, for the fall seasons are about to begin. Open to all students, faculty, and staff on the UNCW campus, the club sport program is designed for recreational pursuits, educational growth, and competitive play. Historically, our club teams have been extremely competitive, and we expect great things from them in 1992-93. Please support the club program by attending home competitions.

Congratulations to the women's ultimate frisbee on their 1991-1992 national championship. Their efforts, sacrifices, and successes are commended.

The first club sport meeting is scheduled for August 27 at 4:00pm in the Golden Seahawk Room. Club Presidents must attend! If there are any questions regarding the Club Sport Program, call the Office of Recreation and Intramural Programs at 395-3261.

New Coach Brings Hope

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

When new track and cross country coach Jim Spreacher initially came to UNCW, he was impressed by the beauty of the campus, its location and climate. These factors help sway Spreacher to accept the track job vacated by Bill Cason in May.

Spreacher worked with UNCW Athletic Director Paul Miller at Louisiana Tech. At Tech, Spreacher was an assistant coach for three years. He then moved on to the University of Arkansas to be their head coach.

Spreacher's biography is loaded with coaching accomplishments: relay champions, NCAA All Americans and conference championships.

Assessing the talent of UNCW's track program, Spreacher said, "Coach Cason had developed a good middle distance program. We have a lot of good runners in the 800-meters up to the half-mile events."

Spreacher's long-term goal is to balance out UNCW's program, and get UNCW into the top half of the conference.

"To challenge for a conference title is where the program's focus will take us. From there I would like to get some individuals into the NCAA's," said Spreacher.

In the next couple of years he plans to bring more sprinters, jumpers and hurdlers to the program.

"North Carolina has a lot of raw talent that UNCW could develop," said Spreacher. He plans to recruit heavily in state.

Spreacher feels that his strength as a coach is two-fold. Off the track he feels that his organization will get things done; on the track he feels that he can get the athletes motivated and to want to excel.

Spreacher has installed a two-a-day practice system to help the athletes excel.

"I feel that a person will get more out of two shorter practices than on long practice," Spreacher said.

The cross country team is preparing to open the season at the Seahawk Invitational will be September 12 here at UNCW.

A member of the cross country team stretches before hitting the dusty trail. Coach Spreacher has the team doing two-a-day practices.

Coach Dudley Speaks...

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

"Before we would tell ourselves that we were a young team, now it is time to get to the meat and potatoes and win," said Head Coach Dr. Lea Dudley.

For each of the last eight seasons, the UNCW women's golf team has competed against twelve of the top twenty-five teams at an assortment of invitational across the southeast each season.

This year will be no different for the Lady Seahawks. The teams fall schedule has them at four away events and one home tournament. But for the players, this year marks the first year that the ladies will fly to every tournament. In the past the team has driven a state van to away matches, far as Florida.

"Flying to competition was once a recruiting tool that gave other (universities) an advantage. Flying will help our team not be as absent from classes as often because of long drives. So this change in transportation will help them academically and keep them well rested on the field," comments Dr. Dudley.

This season the golf team is composed of all sophomores and juniors. Coach Dudley feels that after the women earn their spots, experience will help us this season."

Last year, the Seahawks, as an independent were sixty-third in the nation. The team's best finishes included third at the Lady Sunshine Invitational at Central Florida University, third at East Coast Athletic Conference, Championships at Rutgers University and first in the Lady Seahawk Invitational

Major Wiggins shot. The former UNCW basketball player was shot while in the parking lot of Campus Edge Apartments. Major and some friends were in an altercation at the Club New Zoo. Later at about 3:40 a.m. in the Campus Edge Parking lot, a man jumped out of a car and opened fire on the group standing in the parking lot. Major was reported to be in good condition when he left New Hanover Regional Medical Center.

Frank Tascone is looking for interested students to head up the revitalization of Track Force committee. Current ideas include: finding ways to increase support for all varsity teams, road trips to away games and any other help full ideas. "The committee will be totally student, I am just the advisor," Frank said. Any interested students should contact Frank in the Student Activities Office 202A, phone 395-3284.

"Looks to me as if every ligament in your knee has been hideously shredded beyond repair... Then again, could be just a bruise" hosted by UNCW.

Looking at the upcoming practice sessions Coach Dudley finds that "Some of our players need to work on the short game and trouble shooting fundamentals. Some will need to play more than practice and others will need to practice more than play. Plus we got to work on endurance, it is tough to walk with clubs and pack for 18, 27 or possibly 36 holes"

Dudley wants to be competitive on and off the field. This is most evident on what she thinks is the ideal player for UNCW. "I want a player that education is first and golf second," said Dudley.

This education over competition philosophy has produced Academic All Americans for UNCW. Last year two were chosen from our program. This was the second such selection for Senior Lin Valera.

Stephanie Poulin also received this honor for UNCW.

There are three schools in the Colonial Athletic Association that have a women's golf program. That leaves the CAA one team shy from having a conference and championship tournament. Instead, UNCW has to compete in the Mid-Atlantic region.

"We are in the Mid-Atlantic region, which is composed of teams from North and South Carolina and Virginia. The regional finals will have five teams and five individuals selected. We are trying to secure one of these spots," explained Coach Dudley.

This year the program was selected to host the NCAA Division I finals in 1995, at Landfall. This is a great honor for the program. And with the youth of the Lady Seahawks golf team it might turn out to be home field advantage. Look for the Lady Seahawks November 13-15 at Topsoil Greens Country Club in the Lady Seahawk Invitational.

NEXT WEEK NFL PICKS

I extend my apologies to anyone offended by the intramural section in last week's issue. This apology is extended to the entire campus, not only to the Office of Recreation and Intramural staff.

My intended connotations were positive. Cracker-jack was intended to mean high quality. Dichotomy's meaning was two approximately equal divisions. Again my deepest apology for this disappointment.

Start New Year With A Bang

From University News Bureau

A formal convocation will be held at 11 a.m., Wednesday, Sep. 9, in Trask Coliseum to launch the 1992-93 academic year. This is the first such fall event in recent school history and is open to faculty, staff, students, and interested members of the public.

Highlighting the convocation program will be the conferral of the honorary doctor of letters to Ida Howell Friday and the honorary doctor of laws to William C. Friday for their long and distinguished service to the people of North Carolina.

Ida Friday will be recognized for a lifetime of achievements in education, public health, and cultural affairs. William Friday, president emeritus of the University of North Carolina, will be recognized for his service to higher education in the state and nation, as well as his work to promote philanthropy, leadership, literacy, and economic development initiatives.

Another component of the program will be the presentation by Chancellor James R. Leutze of three distinguished teaching professorships designed to foster UNCW's commitment to excellence in undergraduate teaching. Each recipient will receive a $5,000 per year stipend for three years. This is the first time an award of this distinction and financial magnitude has ever been presented at UNCW to recognize professors who excel in undergraduate teaching.

Dr. Leutze will also present distinguished teaching medallions to 15 past Trustee Teaching Excellence Award recipients and to 10 prior Chancellor's Teaching Excellence Award recipients.

Following convocation, everyone is invited to attend a picnic luncheon on the grounds beside Trask Coliseum. The cost for lunch is $3.65, and student meal cards will be accepted.

Also scheduled at noon near Trask will be an Outdoor Celebration in the Pines, featuring speakers and entertainers from the university and the community.

The annual Activity/Volunteer Fair will take place from 1:30-4:30 p.m. on the north lawn of the University Union. More than 100 student organizations have signed up to participate in the event that allows all student organizations, university departments, and community agencies to come together in one place to seek volunteers to participate in their activities.

To allow students and faculty to attend, 10 and 11 a.m. classes on Wednesday, September 9 have been canceled.

SGA President Interviewed Mitchell Wants All Involved

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

Student Body President Joe Mitchell is a busy individual these days. He is not only trying to get the Student Government Association's year off to a good start, he is also in charge of the upcoming student elections. "My Election Board chairman resigned over the summer, so I'm pretty much in charge of that," Mitchell said during our interview.

Mitchell, a Greensboro, NC, native, is an American History major and plans to graduate in May 1993. He is a member of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity.

Mitchell has been involved with the SGA for a couple of years now. In March of his freshman year, he was elected to be a Representative at Large. The following March, he was elected to be the Student Service coordinator, and last year was elected Student Body President.

The Seahawks: After last year's messy election, have new guidelines been established for someone to have a candidate disqualified?

[In March 1992, Mitchell was charged with campaigning in the SGA office and disqualified by the Election Board. The Election Board did not follow judiciary procedures. The charges were later dropped and Mitchell was reinstated.]

Mitchell: We are working on a new election code.

The Seahawks: During your campaign, you mentioned expanding the recycling program on campus. Have there been any new developments in that area?

Mitchell: The Student Services Coordinator is to meet with the Budget and Planning Committee. We need $2,000 to expand the program to include paper.

The Seahawks: Are there plans to have a truck from the recycling center tour the on-campus and off-campus residences of students to pick up recycling products?

Mitchell: We haven't looked into that. We have the aluminum can bins around campus, and we want to put out bins for paper soon.

WLOZ Struggles To Come Back

BY CAROLE MEHLE
Staff Writer

It's a case of out with the old and in with the new at WLOZ, the campus radio station.

Despite a rough summer for the radio station and a sizeable budget cut, WLOZ is foraging ahead.

On June 11, 1992, an individual was charged with possession and consumption of alcohol in the WLOZ studio after a janitor found three empty beer cans in the studio. Later in the summer, on July 19, two individuals were charged with possessing marijuana and drug paraphernalia while the station was on the air.

Now at a new frequency of 89.3 and under new management, the station is undertaking new projects like getting the radio station heard in central locations on campus such as the University Center and the Hawk's Nest.

Another project for the station is getting their FM slot back, even though WLOZ is one of the top ten cable stations in the nation. The station lost their slot a few years back and they are in the process of raising funds to get them back on regular FM radio as early as Fall 1993.

The equipment that the station needs for this project will cost over $25,000, said Robbyn Marshall, general manager of the station.

Marshall is also interested in making the station much more accessible to listeners. Marshall said, "We'll be interjecting more jazz and underground music that people are familiar with into the playlist for the peak hours of 9 a.m. to 2 p.m."

Some of the bands that Marshall mentioned are the Dead Milkmen, the Butthole Surfers, and REM. "We won't be playing any mainstream music. We want to fill the place that B-100 and Surf 107 doesn't."

For listeners in Wrightsville Beach, on campus and downtown Wilmington, that is what WLOZ does. Marshall estimated that the station has 2000 listeners who signed a petition to save the station when it was in jeopardy of losing funding from the Media and Publications Board.

As well as catering to the needs of the underground music fans and jazz fans, WLOZ is trying to get programs of reggae, news and sports. With the new remote unit the station is getting, WLOZ will be covering events on campus, like basketball games.

By catering to the needs of a wider audience, the station hopes to double their listening audience.

At the end of the last school year, there was some doubt as to whether the station would survive the budget cut and the events of the summer. Marshall said that with the cuts, the station has become harder to run. "The whole staff is volunteering. We were hurt, but the music won't change. The station is not in danger."

To get WLOZ, call Vision Cable at 763-4628 and ask for a cable radio hookup. There is a charge for service hookup and a monthly rate of $1.75.

Dennis Flowers of Vision Cable said two ports are required on-campus to get WLOZ, one for cable TV and one for the radio. Flowers said that an illegal hook up of the cable is a problem for some of the emergency vehicles, which communicate by the same frequency as cable radio.

"We're more concerned that they get it right. We're willing to give it to the students for free on campus."

Both Vision Cable and Marshall are working on getting cable hookups for radio on campus.

WLOZ's airtimes are the same as the hours for the Union: Monday through Friday 7:30 a.m. to 11 p.m., Saturday 12 noon to 5 p.m., and Sunday afternoon 4 p.m. to 11 p.m. The radio station's location is in the Union, room 214 and their phone numbers are 3086 and 4020.

First Annual Kickoff Classic Held

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

The Office of Recreation and Intramural Programs kicks off its intramural year with the First Annual Kickoff Classic Saturday at 9 a.m. The flag football preseason tournament will be held on the intramural fields beside Trask Coliseum.

Intramural Coordinator Brian Cooper has set a deadline for tournament sign-up for Friday, 4 p.m., September 4. Teams wishing to play in this tournament should go by the intramural office in Hanover Hall.

The deadline for the flag football regular season begins on Tuesday, September 8, and deadline for team sign-up is today, Thursday, September 3, at 4 p.m. The captain's meeting is at 4:30 today.

The Office of Recreation and Intramural Programs is a young department. Yes, it has been around for three years, but in different forms.

Originally, it was under the Athletics department. Last year, it moved to the Health, Physical Education, and Recreation department. This year, it is part of the Student Activities department and is better suited to fulfill the needs of the students.

Besides the Kickoff Classic, the department is busy with its "Heart and Sole Fitness" activities. There are aerobic classes Monday through Friday, and the weight room is open six days a week. Check the office's Fall calendar for times.

Director Elaine Penn has promised "there will be something for everyone.... The weight room and aerobic area have been completely renovated, new equipment has been purchased and better programs have been developed."

New to UNCW is Intramural Coordinator Brian Cooper. Cooper graduated from the University of West Florida, where he served as a student intramural supervisor and fitness coordinator.

He received his Master of Science in Recreation and Park Administration from Eastern Kentucky University, where he held a graduate assistant position supervising competitive sports and club sports.

Cooper emphasized that signing up for intramurals is easy. At computer clusters located in the Library Micro Lab, Cameron 122, Bear 215, and SB221 sign up is possible.

At the prompt "Select Service," type "VXC." When the "connected" prompt appears, strike [CR] until you receive the "username" prompt. Type "REC" and from there, follow the instructions.

If any problems should arise, call the office during working hours at 395-3261.

Cooper stated that only during registration periods listed on the calendar can a student sign up for an event. Trying to do so before or after the allotted time will not be possible.

The "youths" department is eager to get all members of the UNCW campus involved in recreation. They have worked hard to not only make more activities available, they have also made it easier to get involved.

Pi Kappa Phi Injured In Fall

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

Pi Kappa Phi received a scare Friday. While performing philanthropic work, one of its members was injured. Sean Kinney was on the two-story platform promoting "P.U.S.H." (People Understanding the Severely Handicapped), when gale-force winds from what was once Hurricane Andrew blew over the structure.

The platform was adorned with cloth signs promoting "P.U.S.H." and the fraternity. These signs caught the wind, much like a sail, and toppled the frame.

Fraternity President Randy Holtfield said in phone interview that Kinney received a broken collar bone in the fall. Kinney was held overnight in the hospital, but was released the next morning.

Living Treasure Honored

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

John Braxton, master gunsmith from Snow Camp in Alamance County, NC, has been chosen as the 1992 Living Treasure of North Carolina by the Institute for Human Potential at UNCW.

Braxton will be recognized and presented the Living Treasure award at a banquet at 6 p.m., Friday, September 4, in the University Center Ballroom. Admission is by invitation and the cost to attend is $14. For more information, call 395-3406.

Braxton is the seventh person to be honored as a North Carolina Living Treasure. "The purpose of the living treasure is to recognize talent and master craftsmanship in North Carolina," said Dr. Gerald Shinn, professor of philosophy and religion at UNCW and acting director of the Institute for Human Potential. This is the sixth year the award has been presented.

Braxton was born November 11, 1936, in the home of his grandparents in Alamance County on property that has been in his family for seven generations to date.

As a child, Braxton showed an interest in North Carolina history and antique weapons and tools. At 15, he rebuilt an old rifle at his high school machine shop. At 17, he had built his own rifle machine.

In an effort to learn more about gunsmithing, he went to Ohio in the 1960's to visit the few remaining old-time gunmakers. From them he learned more about barrel making as well as forging and tempering steel. Since then, he has built numerous examples of weapons and tools.

Braxton is a self-taught machinist and riflesmith who is considered a leading authority on North Carolina Long Rifles. His restorations and replicas of early firearms can be found in many museums and state and federal parks across the United States.

He currently holds three national records in shooting matches held bi-annually in Friendship, Indiana. These matches were won with guns and barrels he made.

The master gunsmith will bring selections of his reproductions of antique rifles and tools to the lobby of the University Center and meet with students, faculty, staff, and the public between 11 a.m. and 2 p.m., Thursday, September 3. He will also demonstrate firing a flintlock barrel. There is no charge for this exhibition.

Recycle Big Sweep Involves

UNCW

BY SUSAN WEITZ
Staff Writer

On September 19, the 6th Annual First Citizens Big Sweep comes to New Hanover County. This annual event is operated by Keep America Beautiful and is being chaired by Ted Profess and Roy Weitzell of UNCW's Student Biology Club. In the past, the focus has been the beaches, but this year it was suggested to clean Spoils Islands.

These islands were formed when the corporation of engineers dredged the Intracoastal Waterway. They are uninhabited. It is estimated that for each square mile there are 700 cans and three times that much styrofoam left by passing boaters.

Roy Weitzell, co-chairman of Big Sweep, stressed the need for boats for this event. "We would like to involve the whole university, but lack of transportation prohibits it," he said. Because of this, there is room for only 30-40 members, mostly consisting of Biology and Ecology Clubs.

Previous Big Sweeps have been quite successful. Last year in North Carolina, 212 tons of litter was cleaned by 12,500 volunteers. Locally, 14,000 pounds of trash was collected from 15 sites. The majority of the trash was cans, plastic bags and wrappers and enough cigarette butts to cover more than two miles (laid end to end).

The Seahawk: The weight room in Hanover Hall has been remodeled, but the Athletic Department has certain hours that are strictly for athletes. Are there plans in the works for a student recreation facility? One where all students have equal access?

Mitchell: Not right now. We only have a limited amount of money. Our money goes to current programs, funding organizations, the legal services we provide, and expanding the recycling program. It is a good idea though, we'll look into it.

The Seahawk: What projects are SGA working on now?

Mitchell: We are working on a Senior Class Project. We are trying to get seniors and senior parents together to raise money for a wall that will go in some building on campus. Every senior who graduates in May, the summer, or December 1993 will have his name on the wall, provided we raise enough money.

We also want to raise enough money to have something for the school. Whether it is a landmark or scholarships, we want to do something for the school.

I have mentioned the recycling program.

The SGA Consignment Bookstore was a success, and we still are offering free legal consultation.

SGA just established an ad hoc committee on day care. I met with Bob Haywood, the campus minister, about it. There is a possibility we might provide some type of day care off campus on S. College Road. There will be drop-in child care for UNCW students.

The Seahawk: When will Student ID Discount Cards be available?

Mitchell: September 15.

The Seahawk: Last year there was a lot of money spent on hats, pens, and even windshield screens promoting SGA. Will there be more of that this year?

Mitchell: No. We will promote ourselves through brochures and the Update page in the paper.

The Seahawk: There have been some comments around campus about a possible conflict of interest with you and Vice-President Ziggy Nix being from the same fraternity. What is your response to such comments?

Mitchell: I don't know what would be there. I was elected president and he was elected vice-president, so obviously the students don't mind.

I guess, my response to that is people need to realize we can be Greek and be in office too.

Underlying that is some people's fears that people in fraternities only care about their fraternity. I wouldn't be here if I cared about was Sig Ep.

Ziggy and I are totally professional. If anything, it makes it harder to do this job because people are thinking that we are going to show bias, so we have to make sure we don't.

I don't appreciate people saying that because it questions my integrity, and the integrity of people who voted for us.

I was in student government before I was in Sig Ep.

The Seahawk: Is there anything you want to add?

Mitchell: Just that student elections will be next Wednesday and Thursday, September 9 and 10. There will be a voting table at the University Center from 10-6 on the ninth, and 10-4 on the tenth. There will be a table in Wagoner Hall during lunch and supper on the ninth and during lunch on the tenth.

1992 Crime Awareness and Campus Security Act Report

University of North Carolina at Wilmington

For the first time this fall, the federal Crime Awareness and Campus Security Act requires UNCW, like colleges and universities throughout the nation that receive federal financial assistance, to report on its campus crime prevention activity and its measures to encourage a safe campus environment. The legislation requires publication of reported occurrences of certain crimes specified in the act which UNCW is providing through this report.

I. Campus Security Policies

A. Law Enforcement

The UNCW Campus Police Department, located at the rear of the campus on Price Drive, is open 24 hours daily. Police officers patrol the campus throughout the day, providing round-the-clock protection and service to the university community. The department is comprised of 20 officers who are sworn, armed and empowered legally as authorized by the NC Department of Justice. All officers have completed Basic Law Enforcement Training and undergo training that exceeds the annual requirements of the NC Criminal Justice Training and Standards Commission. The officers staff three departmental divisions — uniformed patrol, crime prevention, and criminal investigations.

The department also employs 20 - 25 security guards (who are not sworn officers) to enforce university regulations, 4 telecommunications, and an administrative assistant. The primary objective of the UNCW Campus Police Department is to provide a safe and secure environment in which students, faculty, and staff can live, learn and work.

Police officers are responsible for a full range of services, including medical and fire emergencies, enforcement of university regulations, all criminal incident reports and investigations, traffic accident investigations, enforcement of state law and regulations regarding alcohol, controlled substances, weapons, and other statutory offenses.

The Police Telecommunications Center maintains direct radio contact with all local law enforcement agencies and direct telephone contact with area fire and emergency service agencies. In addition, all telecommunications are certified to operate the Division of Criminal Information (DCI) computer terminal, housed within the campus police office, and may access National Crime Information Center files with the FBI.

The Campus Police Department has a close working relationship with federal, state and local law enforcement agencies as well as other components of the criminal justice system. Criminal incident reports and investigations of offenses occurring on university property are completed typically by members of the Uniformed Patrol Division. Supplemental investigations are then conducted by the department's Criminal Investigations Division. Criminal incident reports are submitted monthly to DCI of the NC State Bureau of Investigation.

B. Facilities Security

For student residence facilities, the university is phasing in a new system of building security. Eventually each student resident will obtain access to the facility by using a personal identification card scanned by an optical reader. In addition, physical security is provided by student staff on each floor in the traditional high-rise residence halls and by an entry staff member. In the suite-style residence facilities, there are student staffers as well. In the apartment-style residence facilities, however, there are no student staffers within an individual's apartment.

Each resident student has an in-room telephone that may be used for emergency purposes in addition to its customary use. Training and prevention measures such as un-announced fire drills are conducted periodically in the residence facilities to maintain alertness and familiarity with emergency evacuation procedures.

The academic and administrative buildings are secured each evening by the Campus Police Department at the conclusion of the scheduled activity for each facility.

II. Emergency and Safety Policies and Procedures

To report a criminal or emergency incident, call the UNCW Police at 4911. Use 4911 anytime police or other emergency response is needed on campus. Trained telecommunications are available 24 hours daily to respond to emergency calls. The department offices may also be reached for non-emergency routine administrative calls by using 395-5184.

III. Safety Programs and Materials (educational and preventive)

The Crime Prevention Division of the Campus Police Department actively pursues measures to alert members of the community about crime prevention. The aim is to make it more difficult to commit a crime on campus, thereby reducing or eliminating the opportunity for a criminal to succeed. The following list includes just a few of the many programs and activities coordinated through the Crime Prevention Division.

- Educational presentations: crime prevention presentations are offered for the university and the surrounding community on topics such as property security, personal security, sexual assault, violation of laws and regulations concerning alcohol and controlled substances;
- Distribution of literature: brochures and other printed materials on the topics listed above are written specifically for the university community and are distributed regularly to the university community;
- Bicycle registration: to discourage theft, and to facilitate recovery of stolen items, ownership of bicycles is registered by serial numbers entered in a computer data base;
- Operation ID: the department permits members of the university community to borrow its engraving tool to etch driver's license number and state registration information onto valuable personal items;
- Seahawk Shuttle: the university's escort/shuttle service provides safe cross-campus transportation for students at night. Driven by a campus security guard, the shuttle operates Sunday through Thursday, 6 p.m. until midnight, and Fridays from 6 until 9 p.m. The escort service is available after midnight to students who call the Campus Police Department to request assistance when traveling alone across campus;
- Seahawk Crime Line: members of the university community may use the crime line to report information about criminal activity to the campus police while maintaining anonymity. The caller may receive a cash reward under some circumstances.

IV. Policies on Drugs and Alcohol

The university complies with the Drug Free Schools and Communities Amendments of 1989 (PL 101-226) and regulations regarding drug-free schools and campuses (34 CFR Part 86) by publishing annually in the UNCW Student Handbook the policies on illegal drugs and the enforcement of federal and NC laws. In addition, the university's policies regarding the possession, use and sale of alcoholic beverages and enforcement of NC underage drinking laws are set forth in the Student Handbook. Employees receive copies of the policies in accordance with the drug-free campuses regulations.

V. Crime Statistics

Below are reported occurrences of certain criminal activities for the time periods indicated and the campus population statistics as of the fall of each calendar year for which figures are presented.

Stillpoint with Bob Haywood

Take The Time To Relax And Enjoy

I bet you're busy! If there is one thing that I would guess that we all have in common here at UNCW, it is that we all have a lot going on. I know that I do.

I have a pile on the floor of my office for each of the projects and, last spring, I found the image of a bowling alley describing my sense of my work life. It's like my job is a bowling alley where there is a fifty pound sack of sand at the head of every alley that carries the label of one or another program or responsibility. And there are twenty alleys (programs)!

Each day I come in and work at getting thru bag pushed down the alley a little or a long way, first pushing one and then another. The goal, of course, is to push it over the far end of the alley into "successful completion." Some days some of those bags seem to get moved somehow. Other days, I feel like I have to work at every single one of those bags at the same time! Then it gets crazy.

But I have found a way out of that overwhelmed feeling. I have found my Stillpoint. I have found that anytime I choose, I can gentle my spirit, slow down my pace until there is a sense of stillness both around me and, more importantly, within me.

To create and experience those moments of quietness, those moments of "rest and refreshment for my soul" has become the single most empowering experience of my day.

The paradox is that most effective action is rooted in inaction, in quiet and stillness, in constantly returning to that Stillpoint.

You have a Stillpoint within you that is waiting to be discovered and savored, but it has to be sought out like a hurricane tracking plane seeks the calm eye of the storm. To find that center of quietness is not easy at first. It takes some discipline to learn how to let go of the distractions outside of ourselves and the distractions of our mind that keep intruding when we seek moments of quietness.

All the same, I would encourage you to consider where you can find your Stillpoint. I have found that space in my life to be essential to my well-being.

When are you still? How do you collect all the scattered pieces of your days into some kind of coherence? Prayer and meditation work for me. A walk on the beach in the early morning or the late evening works for others. Individual times of exercise is useful to others.

Why Are There So Many Of Us Suffering?

A man who spends ten thousand a year will do more good than a man who spends two thousand and gives away eight.

Samuel Johnson

The man who gives away eight reminds me of our beloved president, the man who helped bring down the "evil empire." While thousands of people in this country go ignored by Washington, thousands of people in other nations are benefiting from Washington money.

The former Yugoslavia, Somalia, the Philippines, and many other countries around the world are crying out for financial aid to help alleviate pain they have partially brought upon themselves. Yet, the United Nations calls out for financial and military aid from the lone remaining Super Power (which is now a misnomer). Why?

The former Yugoslavia is undergoing a civil war, with religious ties, that will never be settled because the land in dispute is wanted by all.

Can you say "another Middle East"?

It would be nice to settle the dispute without the loss of any more lives, innocent or not. But it is not feasible.

The famine in Somalia is similar to the one in Ethiopia in the 80's. People are dying, but the government isn't doing enough to stop it. There is plenty of food getting to the country's ports, but it is being stolen by rebels before it gets to the needy. One NBC News report said half the food in one shipment had been taken by rebels. Until there is some form of national government in Somalia, is the United States going to dictate and enforce the laws of the land? That has not in the past, and will not work now.

Can you say "Vietnam"?

The Philippines is another nation of turmoil (except for its Little League baseball team) that wants United States money. Funny thing is though, they don't want us to maintain military bases in their country any more. It's not of a "Yankee, go home, but leave your wallet" mentality.

All through the latest Republican reign, the United States has dictated world policy through financial and military means. "If we can't solve the problem through money, we'll bomb the hell out of it until we get our way."

(Of course, there is also the "If I'm down in the polls, I can always invade somebody" policy of Presidents Reagan and Bush.)

What about the so-called "war on drugs"? If the Oval Office had really been concerned with the welfare of the American people, there wouldn't be half the problem there is now.

How many more innocent people have to die via stray bullets from a drive-by shooting, being robbed to support someone's habit, or by being in the wrong place at the wrong time before the president decides the next ravaged nation worthy of Washington money is this one?

Desperate times call for desperate measures. And these are desperate times in America. Crime is at an all-time high, which translates to worse than last year. Yet, city and state governments are having to cut back on police forces, or limit their resources, because there isn't enough money to go around. Why?

The reason is the President and Congress have lost touch with this country. Why else would Whoopi Goldberg, Robin Williams, and Eilly Crystal have to bring homelessness to the fore with "Comic Relief"? How many times has the president even said "AIDS"? How many times has he said the word "abortion" publicly?

Abortion is one of the key issues in the upcoming presidential election and the reigning official won't even mention it.

We need a president that will address the issues of this country, work to fix them, and clean up the mess that has been created before venturing too far in other countries' problems.

The "evil empire" no longer exists, but look what is left. How much more United States tax-payers' money is going to be spent cleaning up other people's messes?

We have roaches in our house, but spraying every other house in the neighborhood isn't going to drive them away. We need to spray right here at home, starting with the white ones in Washington, D.C.

Charley begins at home. We need a leader who will spend enough time at home to realize that.

Phil Smith

Suds, Trekkies and Police Everywhere

UNCW... the final frontier; these are the writings of NoBull Prize Winning Columnist Phil Smith, on a four year mission to eke out strange new forms of writing, to dig up trash on various people and groups... to boldly write what no one (being the politically correct term for "man") has ever written before.

In case you did not know, (and indeed you probably didn't know if you are among the population of student earblisters who do not already, blissen to the radio, or c/watch television) there was a Star Trek convention on campus this past weekend.

Star-Knight productions, in conjunction with Surf 107, WJKA TV 26 and the brothers of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity sponsored the First Annual Wilmington Trek-o-Rama on this past Saturday.

Trekkies, or Trekkers, or Trekkos or whatever they call themselves, came from across the nation (well okay, maybe Burgaw) for the chance to experience the first Star Trek convention of this magnitude that the Port City has ever seen. They were wearing everything from "Star Fleet Command" uniforms to plaid shirts with bell-bottom jeans.

While most of the attendees appeared to be normal everyday people with fetishes for science fiction, others looked as if they had been beamed up from a galaxy far far away.

I attended partly because because of my constant pursuit of journalistic excellence, but mostly because of my burning desire to say things like "Jim he's dead," or "Captain, I cannot guarantee she's gonna hold out. It'll be a least two hours before I can get the Dilithium Crystals re-crystallized," followed by "but damnit Scotty, we don't have two hours."

There were some Klingon warrior looking things floating around, which I later learned were Campus Police officers "just trying to fit in."

Speaking of Campus Police officers, I recently went down to the Campus Police Headquarters to register my bicycle. I hear that it is mandatory to register bikes this year, and anyone failing to do so must pay a five dollar fine and have a finger chopped off.

My guess is that they were going to take an arm and a leg also, but the parking office beat them to it with the parking stickers this year. By the way, the powers that be in the parking office were recently quoted in The Seahawk as blaming Chancellor Letzter for the huge increase in parking fees (he blocked last year's ridiculous increase). I say they are just trying to pass the buck (twenty of them per student) and make the Chancellor into a scapegoat.

In case you missed the last issue, I promised that the next issue would be "How I Spent My Summer," and this obviously isn't it. There was just too much going on with Star Trek Conventions, Republican National Conventions (the Star Trek one was the best), nasty hurricanes, and the like. Speaking of hurricanes, I think everyone around here should thank GOD that Andrew did not come this way.

I doubt we would have a school to go to, or even our apartments to live in. I was going to offer, for my reading enjoyment, my "Top Five Techniques For Looking In The Wake of A Hurricane, but I really don't think it's appropriate right now.

While I am on the subject of hurricanes and apartments, let me tell you about my roommates. They are freshmen (Middle schoolers on steroids) and act on every bit of it. I came home the other day, only to be greeted at the door by a wall of suds emanating from the dishwasher. Yes, they had put a gallon of Dawn in the automatic dishwasher. Needless to say the kitchen floor, cabinets, living room carpet, and my television were squeaky clean. I've already had to make a trip to Johnny Mercer's pier to unlock car doors.

The list goes on and I don't wish to bore you anymore that I normally do. They both (Gregory Kenneth Coats and Daniel Eugene Adkinson) asked me not to mention their names; so I won't.

Well friends, I guess that about wraps it up for this issue. I'm working on an idea for an "All My Professors Are Nutty" issue.

If you have comments, ideas, or monetary gifts to offer, then send them to me in care of The Seahawk. Have a good week and leave don't show up for school on Labor Day.

Live Long and Prosper. Until next time...keep your mind out of the gutter and your head out of the toilet.

It's A "Doggone" Funny World

TODAY'S SCIENCE QUESTION IS: Who is smarter, dogs or trees?

This question is on our minds here at the Research Institute For Looking Out The Window When We Should Be Writing A Column because of the behavior of our staff dogs. We have two dogs on the staff:

—Ernest, our large main dog, who is powered by an 800-horsepower motor controlled by a tiny computer microchip originally designed for use in a Whack-A-Mole game.

—Zippy, our emergency backup dog, who is basically a small, dim-witted toupee with legs.

Both of these dogs perform a number of routine duties here at the Institute. Their most important duty, of course, is barking. They use the energy-conserving Two-Dog Alternating Bark Procedure: a deep BARK from Ernest, followed immediately by a high, irritating yip! from Zippy, followed immediately by another BARK, and so on BARK yip! BARK yip! until morning. They implement this procedure whenever their keen senses detect that one of the following Danger Red Alert situations has occurred:

1. Somebody is at the door.
2. Nobody is at the door.
3. Another dog — any dog, anywhere in the universe — is barking.
4. None of the above.

Zippy performs two other main duties:

"Zippy has no idea how large these dogs are; all he can see is a snout, which is about his size."

1. Getting sick on lizards. Here in South Florida we have cute little lizards all over the place. You often see them halfway up the wall, holding very still, as if thinking: "How the hell did I get up HERE?"

Zippy spends a large portion of his day relentlessly hunting these lizards down, swallowing them, then barking them back up again in pieces. Here at the Institute we've been trying to explain this behavior, and we now believe that it dates back many eons to when giant lizards roamed the Earth, lumbering through the jungle on huge legs, shaking the ground STOMP STOMP STOMP and making so much noise that they failed to hear the high-pitched yip! from way down on the ground, where Zippy's prehistoric ancestor, the small but fierce Saber-Toothed Toupee, was warning them that they were in his territory. And so the lizards kept coming until STOMP STOMP STOMP yip! SPLAT Zippy's ancestor was converted into a saber-toothed pizza. Millions of years later, Zippy is still ticked off about this.

2. Trying to get killed. Next door, separated from us by a tall wooden fence, is a property with three big German shepherd dogs, all of whom look as though they should be named Bart. There is a small crack under the fence, and every day Zippy goes to the crack and barks vicious insults at the Barts, causing them to become furious and take turns thrusting their snouts as far as they can through the crack in an effort to get Zippy. Zippy has no idea how large these dogs are; all he can see is a snout, which is about his size. He is firmly convinced that he can kick the snout's butt, if it would only come out and fight like a man. Every day he gets more insulting, barking remarks about the Barts' mother, driving them into an insane frenzy of rage. We're getting so sick of the noise that we're thinking about throwing Zippy over the fence to see how tough he is when confronted with more than just the nasal sector of an opposing dog. The lizards favor this idea. "Go ahead, toss him over," they whisper, from up on the wall. "He could use the exercise."

Ernest ignores the lizards and the Barts. Ernest's entire existence is focused on one goal: Getting a squirrel. We have a large battalion of squirrels here at the Institute, scampering from tree to tree, and Ernest spends hours racing around beneath them, barking the enticing message that they should please come down so she can eat them. The squirrels never do this, but sometimes they scamper along the top of the fence, which forms a sort of Rapid Transit Squirrel Monorail.

The fence is high enough so that Ernest can't reach the top, but whenever an Express Squirrel comes scampering along, Ernest races alongside, barking furiously, gaining speed, sprinting harder and harder, barking louder, becoming a blur now, faster and faster until BORK she runs headfirst, at approximately 20 miles per hour into a tree that has been located in the same spot for 30 years. We personally have watched Ernest hit this tree "THREE TIMES, although that is probably only a small fraction of the actual total.

These impacts have caused no discernible damage to Ernest. We think that automotive manufacturers should stop messing around with safety gimmicks such as air bags, and start making car bumpers out of the material Ernest's head is made from. Whatever it is, it's definitely not brain tissue, because Ernest has yet to make even the slightest effort to avoid the tree.

The tree, on the other hand, is definitely moving away from the fence.

The theaters in Wilmington were bustling with action last Friday night. With so many new releases, it's quite difficult to make a decision on what to see. Of course, I was faced with that very decision. I finally narrowed the choices to Honeymoon in Vegas or Colombus. With those two options in mind, I chose the one that would be most mentally stimulating, historically correct, meaningful to my life, and one that would stay with me in my heart the longest. I chose Honeymoon in Vegas.

Nicolas Cage and thirty-seven Elvis impersonators jumping out of airplanes over Las Vegas was only one of many funny scenes in Honeymoon in Vegas. When I first saw the previews for this film several months ago, I wasn't sure what to expect. But, when it was all over, I was positive that I received some sort of worthwhile adventure.

Nicolas Cage (Moonstruck) plays the private detective Jack Singer, a man who has become the master of marital dispute surveillance. Through this profession he's seen the problems that arise in marriage, i.e., affairs, violence, divorce, etc.. These elements cause a deep fear of marriage in Cage's mind, and this causes sort of a dispute in his own relationship with the beautiful Betsy Nolan, played by the ever seductive Sarah Jessica Parker (La Story). As time passes, their strong relationship weakens. Parker is about to call off the relationship because she can't stand to be "boyfriend/girlfriend" for the rest of her life, when suddenly, Cage proposes, and decides to have their wedding and honeymoon in Las Vegas. With that, they're off.

After checking in to Bally's Casino and Resort in Las Vegas, Tommy Corman, a successful gambler/millionaire, played by James Caan (Misery), sees the beautiful Parker and is instantly reminded of his lost wife.

Caan invites Cage to a private poker game to supposedly welcome new guests of the hotel to Las Vegas. However, instead of a friendly game of poker, what erupts is a vicious game placing Cage in the hole for $65,000. Without much money in the bank, and Caan known all over the country as a heavy weight in the bookie/gambling business, Cage is left without any alternatives. But Caan had it figured out from the start.

An agreement is made (not to Parker's liking) that she will spend the weekend with Caan in exchange for the debt incurred. This is where the adventure begins. From that point forward, they travel to Hawaii, go on an incredible adventure, deal with Pat Morita (Karate Kid) who plays a somewhat comical taxi driver, and of course, the flying Elvis.

I don't want to give away much more of this movie to my reading audience, but I will say this, on a scale of 0-10, I would give this feature a 6. The 6 is very significant in that you should not pay the extra money after 6:00 p.m. to see it. Instead, catch the bargain matinee. The casting for this picture was done well, and Andrew Bergman did a fine job directing it. It is your typical "ok" movie. Until next time!

Friday 3:30 a.m.

I walked in through the door of my apartment, kicked the cat in the tail, and headed for the bedroom, smoke, haze and dim lights in my eyes.

Sunday 12:30 p.m.

I Can Be Killed, a threatening pre-industrial Big Black song pounces forth in truncated lurches of guitar noise from my roommates 1976 Radio Shack stereo. It sounds good. Refreshing. Like a jolt of high octane coffee before going out in the rain and mud.

I need a burst of coffee like adrenaline to get the brain reels creaking after fully digesting the party favors imbued during the second official weekend of the fall semester.

Oh, the places to go, the atmosphere to drink in, the music and names and faces and smells to bombard the senses; and the streets of downtown Wilmington like so many trails through traveling carnival's stalls: the shooting gallery, the "roller of cigars" and, ah, yes, the freak show.

It was a busy Friday night. Perhaps a little too far removed from the usual crowd of slow movers and multitudinous drink drinkers that habitually roost at the various bars downtown with the same regularity as swallows returning to Capistrano. Every bar, club and coffee house seemed to have its own distinctive milieu.

One of the first stops of the evening took myself and a small party of friends to one of two fairly new establishments, Plan B Cafe. Located somewhere on Grace, between the Hilton and Third, Plan B, is an all night coffee house that sports, music, plays, poetry readings, midnight dance things—in short, the basic schtick of the "cafe"—which unfortunately includes no alcohol. But there is a fully operable pool table. So, after getting schooled in a few games of cut throat the mouth grew parched and the brain needed an oasis of sorts. It was time to move on.

On to the other new night spot, the Well Informed. But if I was looking to escape from the heat of the desert, then the Well Informed was truly a mirage. Like a Moroccan cafe with fans languidly spinning in vain, the elongated quarters of the club trapped the heat wonderfully, but as a sign near the door proclaims, the beer is thankfully cold. An entertaining jazz trio made it worthwhile to endure the humidity, but gripped with the unreasonable fear that Victor Borge and his cronies would burst upon the scene disguised as a rowdy band of Peter Lorre impersonators, I decided to break for the door.

What followed was a beleaguered trail through the Water Street row of bars: Crooks, the Barbary Coast, Mini Juleps and finally, down to the lighthouse where I was haunted by visions of Beach Music zombies fever feeding me vicious doses of the Tams, the Drifters and other renowned North Carolinian favorites. The corners of the patio provided refuge though, and before long it was time to check out the scene at Jacob's Run.

I hadn't anticipated a large crowd. The band playing, the Royal Crescent Mob, was largely an ambiguous name among the locals and students. I had in fact purchased one of their CD's away back, but financial need forced me to hawk it. I can honestly say I enjoyed their cover of Roller Coaster of Love, the first song I heard upon arriving, but after that things turned a tad peculiar. The faces in the crowd grew too happy, their smiles too wide, the lyrics completely silly: "Baby, what I know is tuna fish and love don't mix." I couldn't drink fast enough to avoid the warm contents of the last puzzle as the audience began jumping rope to the all too familiar blend of white boy funk and blues that the Royal Crescent Mob play.

Retreating upstairs, I bumped into Terry, a music aficionado who remembered the band back in their "heyday" in the early eighties. He said, "after ten years their music sounds relatively the same." Were they good at what they did? Yes. Was the white boy funk as well as it was ten years ago? No.

Disregarding the deluge of white boy funk, I headed toward Water Street again, looking up at the marquee as I left, the September tenth Pavement heading caught my eye, and I wondered if it would live up to its hype.

In any case, the night was still young. There was cash to be squandered. Faces and places and drinks and eight balls and names to drop. And the breeze off the river was crooning over the cobblestones.

The Coast was still doing business, and the smoke filtering into my eyes felt right at home as the grey door swung open, and bottle caps popped.

But Dan Was There In Spirit

BY CAROLE MEHLE
A&E's "No, this is not about Duran Duran" Correspondent

Well, you can tell what this is not about, and I'll bet the majority of you are happy. What this might be titled is "How To Waste a Perfectly Good Sunday Night" or "Quayle-bashing with the stars."

Yes, my Sunday was spent watching re-runs of The Simpsons, and stars poking fun at the Vice President. In between this, the Emmys were presented. For those of you who aren't couch potatoes (is that with or without the "e," Mr. Vice President?) or awards show junkies, the Emmy Awards are presented to outstanding achievements in TV in the past year.

This year's show gave Hollywood a chance to respond to the bashing it has received from the Republican party and particularly from Dan Quayle. I guess it just isn't enough that Danny's mom won't let him stay up past his bedtime to watch Murphy Brown.

The Quayle-bashing began with the first host (and the most politically conscious of the three hosts) Dennis Miller. Miller said that while Bush had been criticizing The Simpsons and Quayle had been Murphy-bashing, they should have spent less time watching TV and more time fixing the deficit. Hey, what can I tell ya, Dennis? Maybe Hollywood should have spent less time presenting Quayle-bashing and more time presenting the awards.

Speaking of the awards, here's a blow by blow account of the more important awards. To sum up the technical awards, I can do it in five words: Star Trek: The Next Generation or The Young Indiana Jones Chronicles. Now on to the more important awards. (Sorry, Mona, no mini-series—just file those under the "Haven't seen them, and I don't really care anyway" category.)

Northern Exposure could-busted (pun intended) their competition in the Drama Series category. It's funny and quirky. A little too funny to be a drama, though. I think it deserves a category of its own.

Continuing in the Drama category, Valerie Mahaffey, better known as Eve on Northern Exposure took home a statue for Supporting Actress in a Drama. Among her competition was Cynthia Geary, who plays Shelly on the same show. Richard Dysart of LA Law took home that shows only Emmy for Supporting Actor in a Drama.

Dana Delany of China Beach snagged the award for Lead Actress in a Drama. Christopher Lloyd, better known as "Doc" from The Back to the Future, captured the Lead Actor in a Drama award. He snagged the statue for a guest appearance on the Disney Channel's Avonlea. Sorry, I think Rob Morrow, "Fleishman" from Northern Exposure, deserved that one.

Best Writing in a Drama Series went to Northern Exposure for "Soul Mates." (Yeah, like we really pay attention to the title of the episode.) Northern Exposure had this category sewn up—they were only nominated 3 times in the same category.

Best Writing in a Comedy Series went to Seinfeld, which was only nominated in 3 different categories. I really like Seinfeld, but hey, some people have to work on Wednesday to get this quality paper to you, our beloved readers.

Laurie Metcalf, who plays Roseanne's sister on, uh, what's the name of that show ... oh, yeah, Roseanne won the Emmy for Supporting Actress in a Comedy Series. I thought that the chick from Seinfeld was a lot funnier than a bitch truck driver who's Roseanne's second fiddle.

Michael Jeter from Evening Shade won for Best Supporting Actor in A Comedy. Sorry, don't watch that show. I prefer The Fresh Prince of Bel Air over a show with Bud Reynolds in it any day of the week. Once again, I have to go with the nominee from Seinfeld. Jason Alexander, who plays "George," was my choice, though I really liked Jay Thomas, who was up for his appearance as "Jerry Gold" on Murphy Brown.

Lead Actress in a Comedy Series went to Roseanne Arnold for Roseanne. NOT!!!!!! Candice Bergen blew away the competition for her portrayal of Murphy Brown. Murphy's pregnancy didn't reduce her sense of humor. As a matter of fact, it made her funnier. Murphy had a reason for winning, unlike Roseanne who just bitched period.

The Lead Actor in a Comedy was a tight race. Though Craig T. Nelson walked away with it, he had tough competition in Ted Danson, who plays Sam on Cheers, and Jerry Seinfeld, who plays himself in Seinfeld.

Two nominees that the Television Academy missed were Ed O'Neill (Al Bundy) and Tim Allen of Home Improvement. Allen is the only man that makes me laugh about tools. Allen, also a host for the show along with Kirstie Alley (Cheers) and Miller, was the second best host of the show. Although I had to wonder if he had any other routine than the tool man, he was funnier than Allen and her "dirty" jokes.

Another category with tight competition was Best Comedy. I said that Murphy Brown was the best and funniest show on TV, and it was confirmed. Yes, despite what readers might think Seinfeld is not my favorite show. Murphy Brown is. The show KO'd its competition from Home Improvement, Seinfeld, and Cheers.

Walter Payton, the NFL all-time rushing leader, gained a career 16,726 yards in twelve years (1975 to 1987). Walter Payton never scored a touchdown in a Superbowl, but he did manage to have most yards in a game (275) and end up second in all-time leading touchdown scorers with 125. Payton finished behind Jim Brown with 126 Touchdowns.

A.D. Paul Miller To Increase Student Support

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

"Athletics are for the Student Body. I plan to speak to student organizations to get them more informed," said Athletic Director Paul Miller.

Planning for fundraising events and half-time basketball activities and give aways is what Miller's office will be finalizing in the next couple of weeks.

Local merchants and companies, will again be an important part in this process. Pepsi, Advance Auto Parts, Dominoes and Bob King Auto will be the sponsors for many events coming to UNCW.

In order to raise money for this year the university will be holding a number of fundraisers to ensure the quality of the programs and the well-being of athlete's academic progress.

Two golf tournaments are scheduled, one at Landfall and one at Porters Neck to give many a chance to interact with some of our administration and athletic department personnel.

A deep-sea fishing tournament will be slated for October and in December there is a black tie dinner buffet on the USS North Carolina.

"We plan to revitalize Trask Force through newsletters, special events and possibly a road trip to North Carolina State University," said Miller.

The Bud-Lite Dare-Devis will be performing at Trask Coliseum.

This will Mark the second time that the daredevils have been to Trask Coliseum.

"Last year we had a pre-game party, before most games, but few students would get their before seven thirty," said Miller.

We have to find something to get the students there and excited about the game," Miller said.

"Recruiting went well for all of our programs and I am pleased to say that this year UNCW lead the state in athlete graduation rate," said Miller.

This is important because the athletic director is responsible for UNCW's sixteen varsity sports and the athletes academic progress.

"I am happy to say that we have not had to turn down any player needing extra assistance toward academics. Whether they need an extra summer or semester to complete their degrees," said Miller.

Miller said, "This season we will be introducing a new logo and a new mascot. We hope to excite the student body toward becoming more involved."

A little Background on Paul Miller. He came to us from Louisiana Tech University. where he was over 14 sports for men and women.

Now well into his second year, Miller is settling into his new role as UNCW's Athletic Director. He has already beginning expansion.

There is a men's basketball locker-room in the works for the upcoming season. The weight room is a wonderful addition for athletes and students alike.

As the meaning of the new logo implies, UNCW looks to boost every aspect of every athletic program, toward being number one.

The Gutter

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

Professional sports are in jeopardy of being devoured by the same capitalistic tools that have made team owners rich.

For years, the greed of the owners went unchecked, unchallenged, and unquestioned. Now in the 90's, greed has positioned itself on both sides of the bargaining table.

Veteran holdouts, unsigned rookies and Plan "B" free agents, monetary demands are reaching all-time-high levels. Fully understood that professional sports are a business, it is still hard to understand the almost exponential increase that pro salaries have taken in the last ten years. In an economic period where the average American brings home less money, these women and men, made more.

If their total system is based on supply and demand, what is the factor that I am missing in order to figure out how much a player is worth.

If salaries are based on wins or a persons ability to help facilitate a win, why do losing teams have millions?

I just do not get it. Everybody is an athlete to some degree. Only one percent of all athletes are professional. Of this elite, one percent which includes all races and all nationalities, there is the power to determine that fate of a play, a week and a season.

Of this elite one percent, there is the power to captivate an audience with an over the shoulder catch; to demoralize opposing defenses by dunking, rushing or smacking one 475 feet.

Also out there, is a greedy agent, telling a future young star to hold out and wait for your deal. Owners and general managers then have to negotiate a salary that a player may not live up to.

But the owners also get the rights to market a players number and uniform adding to their pockets.

The player may sign with a shoe company, sports drink, cereal and any other endorsement to increase in already staggering income.

Soon it will even be worse, salary caps will dissolve. Current teams that are rich will get richer and richer. The teams that are not as popular would have to relocate just for survival.

This consequence does not stop there, it would quickly reach the average "Joe and Jane," like ourselves.

To clarify, I want you to think back to the summer Olympics, do you remember them, they were the first to fall to the most dangerous threat in sporting history, Pay-per-view television.

With contracts being signed for record numbers, the dark day is coming when pay-per-view will have under it's wing the World Series, the Super Bowl and NBA Basketball Championships.

The sad part about this syndrome is that the players are only doing what the next guy would do. What Player "x" going to settle for $300,000 dollars, when they could be receiving at least $1 million a year. Even the water-boys are demanding more money these days.

It is simple to see how the capitalistic system is both beneficial and oppressive. It is turning into an issue of the corn verses the common folk, the corn bread people (well to their standards).

Oppression, when the dark day of pay-per-view comes will be far reaching. This oppression will be crippling to our sporting addiction. Our quick fix for our addiction would be $19.95 a day, featuring AFC on the red channel and NFC on the blue channel.

As a sportsaholic, I do not see any end to this growing cancer spreading affliction to a nation of sports fanatics.

Players are always going to ask for the top possible dollar, the owners will continue to make millions and the only group that will be suffering will be the sport fans.

Player Spotlight

By WAYNE WILLIAMS

Senior soccer player Paul Cairney's goal this year is striving for the Chancellor's Cup. The Chancellor's Cup is the award given to the senior athlete with the highest grade point average. Paul, flexing with a 3.9 G.P.A., has a really good shot at this honor.

Paul, an English major, has learned the secret of time management. Juggling eighteen hours, soccer and a social life Cairney has learned to combine activities for efficiency. "I read to relax. Most of the time it is my course work though," said Paul.

At first Paul wanted to be a business major, but was inspired by the an English 101 teacher to pursue a career in English.

After college Paul would like to be a high school English teacher, while doing some coaching.

Paul found out about UNCW while at a soccer camp in Florida. It was there that he had a chance to meet coach Jackie Blackmore.

"Coach Blackmore really stressed academics," said Paul.

At his home in Clydebank, Scotland, Paul played club soccer. One of the reasons that he choose UNCW soccer is our colors.

"At home there is a team who's colors are green and white. They represent the Catholics and they play another professional team of blue and gold which represent the Protestants. These teams play each other with so much passion an vigor that they inspired me to play soccer."

Paul appreciates the difficulty of this seasons schedule. Cairney adds, "If we played teams that are 0-9 or Cape Fear Community College, the victories would not mean as much. This year we have the potential to upset some teams. Especially if they come looking for the UNCW team of the past."

Paul likes the new additions to this years team. He comments that, "the new guys have a good attitude. They do not have any animosity toward other team members. They are a good pool of talent for us to draw from."

With a strong defense and a steadily improving offense, Paul will be surrounded with new scoring threats for the Seahawks in Steve Elliot and Todd Pascarella.

"Conference-wise Old Dominion is our toughest opponent. Non-conference-wise North Carolina State will be a great challenge," said Cairney.

Among all the games this season, the one Paul would like to win the most is the home game against William and Mary. Cairney said in an interview that, "In my four years here we have never beaten them, but we have had the opportunity twice."

Paul said that, "Attitude has hindered us in the past. This year we have the confidence that will help us achieve. We must think that we are as good or better than other teams and players."

At the end of last season, Paul collected his fifth yellow card, which requires him to sit out the first game.

Saturday September 5, the Seahawks start their '92 campaign against The Citadel here at Brooks Field.

Athletic Director Paul Miller is focusing attention on getting students more involved in athletic programs.

Fridays Receive Ph. D's

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

At the first formal academic convocation in recent history, UNCW conferred the honorary doctor of letters to Ida Howell Friday and the honorary doctor of laws to William C. Friday for their long and distinguished service to the people of North Carolina.

Ida Friday was recognized for a lifetime of achievements in education, public health, and cultural affairs. William Friday, president emeritus of the University of North Carolina, was cited for his service to higher education in the state and nation, as well as his work to promote philanthropy, leadership, literacy, and economic development initiatives.

During his remarks, Dr. William Friday said, "Much has happened in such a short interval of time. The establishment of the UNCW must rank as one of the incredible success stories in the history of this state."

Dr. William Friday was on the steps of Hinton James Hall July 1, 1969, when the Trustees met with Governor Robert Scott to induct Wilmington College into the UNC system.

"Could there be any doubt in a rational mind of the enormous importance of the educational enterprise to the future economic growth, cultural enrichment and spiritual leadership of our country?" Dr. William Friday proposed in his speech.

"The University must be out front as loving critic, exploring, developing and promulgating ideas and sending forth leaders qualified to forge a new world order capable of establishing peace among people of all lands," he answered.

Also recognized in the ceremony were the three instructors to receive distinguished teaching professorships presented by Chancellor James Leutze.

Dr. Grace M. Burton, professor of curricular studies in the School of Education and the 1991 recipient of the Trustees' Teaching Excellence Award, was cited for her inspiring enthusiasm and commitment.

"The recipient is intent on having her students overcome anxieties about the subject matter, on teaching them to take risks, to try new ideas, and to realize the benefit of their efforts," Dr. Leutze said of her.

The second recipient was Dr. W. Lee Johnston, professor of political science. Dr. Johnston was cited for his infectious enthusiasm for teaching, whether he is "infecting" beginning freshmen, student legislators, or participants in the Elderhostel programs at UNCW.

School Of Education's Decade Of Reform

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

The UNCW School of Education has unveiled its plan to radically change the education process in southeast North Carolina. Dr. Robert Tyndall, Interim Dean of the School of Education, outlined Phase I of the three phase, ten year program Tuesday afternoon in a luncheon press conference.

The new mission of the School of Education is: By the end of this decade the School of Education at UNCW will be recognized as the best teacher and administrator training and development institution in the State of North Carolina. This goal will be realized through a broad array of training and regional service programs which stress quality outcomes at all levels.

The School has just completed a year-long review of itself by a special task force chaired by Dr. Bill Johnson of the Department of Design and Management which calls for significant changes in teacher and administrator preparation programs.

Part of this reform will require faculty, regardless of rank or tenure, to get back into the public school systems; the hiring of part-time lecturers, adjuncts, and seminar lecturers on a non-tenure basis to teach education majors; having aggressive follow-up of graduates; and a reflective analysis of the program's value to educators.

One reason for this overhaul is world-wide job competition. Chancellor James Leutze said, "Education is as important an issue as any this country has or will face."

Dr. Leutze went on to say that there is a definite need for "radical, revolutionary change" in our current education system.

Dr. Tyndall said one of the obstacles in the current system is "competition as opposed to cooperation."

"One task force after another has called for reform," Dr. Tyndall explained. "It's always someone else's fault. Someone else is to blame."

The reform proposed by the School would eliminate the competition for results. A number of projects are underway now, or will be soon, to see which approaches best suit the needs of students.

The Odyssey project, with its $20 million education reform grant, will revolutionize the education system of Gaston County, the fifth largest system in the state. It will be put into effect in late 1993 or early '94.

A study is underway to see how effective minority teachers have with minority students. Another study has been started to see how improvements can be made in the "SAT training" classes, to improve SAT scores in the state.

Teachers will not be the only ones effected by this new emphasis on quality education for all. Assistant principals will have training sessions to foster attitudes and behaviors that will make them more effective school leaders.

This is not a short-term goal for the School. The leaders of the program, Dr. Tyndall, Dr. Eleanor Wright, and Dr. Rodney Earle, expect this reform to take ten years before significant changes are seen.

With the current success rate in education in this country lower

First Day Mandatory

BY SUSAN WEITZ
Staff Writer

Tuesday, the Faculty Senate held its first meeting of the 1992-93 school year.

The main issue of the meeting was the issue of dropping students who are not present on the first day of class. The motion passed 25-8. It states that an instructor that has a fully enrolled class, and who has additional students waiting to enroll, may drop from the class roll any student who does not attend the first class meeting and does not notify the instructor within 24 hours.

Dr. Doug Smith is concerned there could be "real problems with implementation."

"The class rosters are confusing enough. In order for this new system to work, it must be rigorously enforced, causing more problems for the professors," he said.

Instead he offers an alternative change, the drop/add policy. He suggests that the last day of the drop/add period could be made into any adds and no drops permitted.

Judy Signaw offers her support for the motion. For the first day of one of her classes she had a waiting list of 15. She told them to come to class anyway since she lectures the first day. She wanted to drop those who missed and add those that had initiative to come even when they weren't enrolled.

Stephen Pullum agrees. "I'd much rather cut the dead weight and get on with it."

The question was raised as to whether or not this is legal. Dr. Bob Brown of the Academic Standards Committee says there is no question about legality since it is purely optional. "UNC-Chapel Hill has a similar program as well as other states and it seems to work."

Freshman Killed In Two-Car Crash

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

Tragedy struck the UNCW campus again last Friday. Freshman Tricia Ann Couchon was killed when her car collided with a large panel truck about 2:30 p.m. between Barger and Rocky Point, according to the N.C. Highway Patrol.

Couchon, 18, from Cherry Hill, N. J., was driving away from Wilmington when her car apparently hydroplaned, causing her to lose control and swerve across the median, said Trooper C. R. Lee. Couchon was alone in her car.

Couchon is survived by her mother, Patricia Dolan, of Cherry Hill, N. J., and father, William Couchon, of Cary, N. C.

SGA Elections Are Today, Vote!

BY CAROLE MEHLE
Staff Writer

Student Government Association elections are being held today to elect freshman class officers, fall representatives at large and an attorney general.

The polls are located at Wagoner Hall and The University Center and are open from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. SGA Office Manager Susie Goodrum said that the ballots, which are scantron sheets, will be scanned at 2 p.m. Goodrum added she hopes that the election results will be posted by 5 p.m.

Four candidates are vying for the title of freshman class president: Kristy Bowman; William Humphrey; Chris Sudduth and Jason Kish. Dan Sullivan and Lawanya Barfield are in competition for the office of freshman class vice president.

Candidates for the position of freshman class senator are Greg Wahl and Brian Thompson.

Upperclassmen also get to join the freshmen and vote for fall representatives at large and attorney general.

Anna Parry, Jay Lewis, Robin Bradley, and John Farmer are joined in the race for fall representative at large by current Representatives at Large David Fann, Jeff Gurkin and Kristian Pulliam in the race. Also in competition is Ashley Wallace, Spring representative at large.

Running unopposed for attorney general is Lee Person.

Person has served SGA as a freshman and sophomore class senator and as a special senator and president pro tempore of the Senate. Person has also served as a member of the Budget and Planning Committee, the Media and Publications Board and the SGA Consignment Bookstore Committee. Person has also served as manager for the bookstore since its opening.

When the office of freshman class president is assumed by the winner of the race, responsibilities will accompany the job as well.

Some of the responsibility of the new president is to initiate class projects.

The vice president's job includes assisting the president. Along with the president and the vice president, the class senators shall represent the views and interests of their class.

The job of the representative at large is to represent the unenrolled student population and to represent viewpoints they feel are lacking in the Senate.

The attorney general is in charge of defending and enforcing the legislation of SGA and its constitution.

Staff Writer

The League of Women Voters and The Seahawk are sponsoring a voter registration drive today until 4 p.m. in the University Center.

All one needs to take to the table is a form of picture identification. Janet Durham, registrar and member of the League of Women Voters, said that a form of identification with a local address is preferred. Durham added that student ID cards will be accepted.

Voters can register to vote as a citizen of New Hanover County or as a resident of their home county.

Registered voters who are interested in getting an absentee ballot for their area are offered directions at the table. Durham said there are three options. A voter can write to the courthouse in their county and ask the Board of Elections for a ballot or have a new relative stop by the office. The dates that this can be done are between September 14 and October 27.

Durham said Wednesday afternoon she had registered 25 voters and there had been approximately 50 registered that morning. Durham added that a total of 150 voters are expected to be registered during the drive.

N. C. Living Treasure Honors His Heritage

BY ED MOSELY
Staff Writer

A young man's devotion was shaped more than forty years ago when the stake he used for horseshoes turned out to be the barrel of an old long rifle.

Since then, 56-year-old John Braxton has traveled the country to learn and teach the art of a master gunsmith. He demonstrated his craft last Thursday in the lobby of University Center.

Mr. Braxton, of Snow Camp in Alamance County, is the seventh person to receive the Living Treasure of North Carolina Award. It is presented annually by UNCW's Institute for Human Potential in recognition of "talent and master craftsmanship," said Dr. Gerald Shina, the institute's acting director.

"One inch a minute. You can just about set your clock," Mr. Braxton said of boring rifle barrels, also called "rifling." "It usually takes about eight hours to complete a barrel, depending on the length and type."

Like the early American gunsmiths, Mr. Braxton uses simple tools: chisels, files, hammers, and sandpaper. While grinding a file on what would become a lock for a flint-lock rifle Mr. Braxton said, "Accuracy is needed, but on the original guns they made mistakes, so you don't feel as bad when you make mistakes today. A machine can repeat itself, it's hard for a man to repeat himself."

N.C. Living Treasure Robert Braxton demonstrated his hand-made weapons and tools in the University Center last Thursday.

He has an electric barrel drill, which increases the rifling speed, but he would rather use the hand powered drill like the one he had on display. With it he can feel the flaws in the metal.

Also on display were tools, locks, and hammers in various stages of production, two rifling machines, and seven finished rifles.

Among them was an exact replica of a George Kaiser gun of Vienna, Austria. Also a reproduction of a 1630's style musket found in a late seventeenth-century American-Indian grave was on display.

The southeastern Native Americans traded "as many deer skins as the gun was tall". Mr. Braxton said. The gun was nearly six feet tall.

Mr. Braxton recognizes the importance large events have on history. He has crafted guns for state historic sites, museums, and the National Park Service, including the 7,200 pound cannon and carriage on Sheppard's Battery at Fort Fisher.

"My main interest is in the average everyday way of life," he said, "but who would remember if someone went out and killed a turkey or not."

For persons interested in finding more about Mr. Braxton, a trip to Snow Camp Revolutionary War Battlefield is scheduled for Saturday September 12. Call Everard Smith at 395-3138 for more information.

ACE Loses $11,000 on Concert

BY JULIE PODLASEK
Staff Writer

Losing $11,000 from the Allman Brothers concert turned out to be a big surprise and quite a disappointment for ACE, The Association For Campus Entertainment, here at UNCW.

The loss occurred for several reasons. One being, that concerts this big are expensive and can prove to be an extreme risk. UNCW usually only hosts smaller concerts that will not hurt them as much if they are unsuccessful, and those that are very likely to be a guaranteed hit.

Another reason for the loss was possibly the competition with the Walnut Creek Amphitheater, where the Allman Brothers previously performed. Although it is more costly to see the show there, the fact that the amphitheater is outdoors and alcoholic beverages are permitted, may have made it more appealing.

Even though there was publicity in Jacksonville, Myrtle Beach, and by our own SURF 107, simply not as many people showed as were expected.

The Allman Brothers concert, despite the financial loss, was otherwise a great success. Wilmington's SURF 107 called it the concert event of the year.

According to Frank Tacone, the advisor ACE, the event was, "well planned, well publicized, and the students got a lot of useful knowledge from it."

Though ACE suffered a great deal from this event monetarily, it is not stopping them from continuing their plans for activities in the future.

ACE consists of a group of seven committees who program various activities for the university. Their different committees include housekeeping, special events, films, cultural arts, and lecturers, publicity, and concerts.

The Allman Brothers concert, despite the financial loss, was otherwise a great success.

Brant Vanhoy, the chair person for ACE, is organizing two outdoor concerts to take place at the gazebo before the semester is over. Vanhoy is also planning an outdoor festival in the spring with various booths, campus organizations, food, and bands.

Nothing is Worth More Than Today

As this semester gets underway, a series of events have reminded me once again of one of the more important learnings by which I want to operate my life.

In freshman seminar, when asked to tell the story of an event that has had significant impact on their lives, more than a few told a story of a friend being killed in a car wreck, often after drinking.

Before school started a student was playing in a mud puddle and broke his neck while sliding through the water. There is a real possibility that he will spend his life as a paraplegic. And then Hurricane Andrew, over which no one has any power, inexorably crushed the life, life style, and future of hundreds of thousands.

Such events make us very aware of how quickly life can change in ways that are quite drastic and often difficult to deal with.

Jim Clark

None of us are exempt from the possibility of such events impacting our lives. To be sure, if we choose to exercise care and wisdom in our activities, we can avoid feelings like my young student friend expressed when faced with the possibility of losing the use of his legs: "You know, I really hate to lose my legs because of doing something so stupid." But we can never be fully immune to something happening that brings drastic change to us. We are simply not in control of the forces of nature or other people's behavior.

What we are in charge of, is our own feeling and attitudes about life in general. We demonstrate wisdom when we seek to increase our awareness of the forces at play in the simple living of our days so that we can Identify and claim certain values that we will seek to allow to inform choices that we make, whether small or great.

On my desk is a card that reads "Nothing is worth more than this day." Each day is a gift. It is unique, special, only one of a kind. When it is spent, it can never be retrieved again, saved by memory. And our days are numbered. We do have limits even when we are granted the full measure of days.

But given the fact that we do not know what kind of events lie before us and how they may effect our lives, we would do well to pay attention to how we use each and every day. Time is precious and limited commodity.

In a film about working with the terminally ill the statement was made, "I don't fear death, I fear the possibility of never living it all!"

Each day is a precious gift and we would do well to reflect on those things from our past—for example, worries, grudges, insecurities—to see how they are impacting us today and to consider our anxieties about the future and how they are impacting on our use of this day.

Such awareness may help us to work more clearly towards days that are uncontaminated by past and future feelings. Then we can begin really to take one day at a time, use it, savor it and live in a daily state of grace and gratitude.

The old saying, "Today is the first day of the rest of your life" is still true. Pay attention to how you feel about this day. Have a good day. It is your choice.

Students Dropped First Day If Absent

For almost a year now the Faculty Senate has been looking at a proposal to drop students from classes if they are not present on the first day. Tuesday they made a decision. They will leave it up to the individual professor. He may simply use his own discretion if he has students trying to add the class.

The Faculty's hope is to make the drop/add process more productive by making people drop classes earlier and thus making room for people trying to add.

It has long been a tradition of many UNCW students to be "mysteriously" absent on the first day of classes. So, this new rule may bring forth a hardship on some. For others it will make adding that class they need so strongly all the easier.

The faculty needs to take this new responsibility with grave seriousness. Firm guidelines need to be established and both parties made quite aware of the consequences. For example, a list of professors or departments taking part in this new policy needs to be made available to all students before the first day of classes.

Even if only professors with fully enrolled classes and ones where students are trying to add may drop students, instructors need to be very aware of the impact their actions may have on some students. For example, seniors run a great risk of not being able to graduate on time if a specific class they need is dropped.

Professors also need to be very accessible for the 24 hours following the first class period when students are allowed to call and explain why they weren't present. They need to be aware that students do have emergencies and problems with schedules.

The best plan for everybody involved, is to know exactly what the deal is. Students need to look out for their best interests and know who is doing what. And by all means if students can't be in a class that has the drop policy, call the professor and explain why you won't be there.

So much for being old enough to make your own decisions.

Can't Television Find Positive Role?

During a week the School of Education unveils plans to revolutionize the education system in North Carolina and William and Ida Friday are honored for their 50 years of effort to better the university system and give students a wider choice in study, the television continues to bombard us with poop.

If it's not the Fresh Prince taking his clothes off for ratings, four (well, three) beautiful women from completely different background and lifestyles sharing a Malibu apartment, or some superhypped "docudrama" depicting life at its fullest, we also have to put up with the constant mindnumbing of Madison Avenue's finest minds at work.

Who are these people who think up the thirty-second commercials that pay for the "quality" programming we enjoy each night?

My guess is sexually repressed, neurotic, insecure, egomaniacs.

Who else would have in their "Old Spice" men's deodorant commercial a crotch-shot of a woman. Mind you, it is a nice-looking crotch, but it has no place in a man's commercial.

Remember the men's jeans commercial that was on MTV (the epitome of quality television) a while back? The one that said they could show us guys wearing the jeans, but they thought we (men) would prefer to see a bunch of scantily-clad women instead? Why?

Why do we put up with this constant sexual bombardment?

If Ross Perot were to start his campaign again (God forbid!), but this time had two or three or more bikini babes with him, would we take his politics more seriously? I hope not.

So why do we put up with it from advertisers? Are we too shallow and weak to say, "Hey, enough all ready. Your product is crap and no matter how many people I see having fun with it, it is still crap?"

Not that the above mentioned products are crap, but you get the idea.

The worst offenders in this sexual onslaught have got to be the beer producers. How many butt-ugly people do you see in the ads? None!

The next time you are in a bar, club, or grocery store, look and see who is buying beer. Chances are there will be one or two butt-ugly people.

Commercials don't accurately reflect society. They are a distant dream of some Aryan sub-culture. How many integrated commercials do you see on TV? Not many.

Why? I haven't a clue.

We live in a society that has a very short fuse. Too many people want, and want right, now. The slightest friction tends to cause an over-reaction.

In order to overcome our fears and break the ice toward a harmonious society, television, the one constant in most homes, must strive to show it can be done.

Instead of showing us something that isn't likely to happen in most of our lives, why not show us some reality?

Why not show us there are more people wanting to stop the hatred and interracial violence, but don't know where to begin?

Why not show us programs that have worked in the past?

Why not show us programs about the '60's leaders that wanted to stop the hate, and paid for it with their lives?

I can think of four men who died partly because they believed in change. Two were named Kennedy, one was named King, and another was Malcolm X.

We are seeing the world being divided into smaller and smaller groups. The Serbs don't like the Muslims, the Jews still don't like the Arabs, the Blacks don't like the Crypts, well, you get the idea.

We are becoming a society of sects.

Convocation

Dr. Johnson is currently teaching at Kyung Hee University in Seoul, Korea. Dr. Johnson was also the 1989 Trustee Teaching Excellence Award winner.

Dr. Gerald Shim was the final professor recognized for excellence. Dr. Shim, professor of philosophy and religion, has been with the university since 1967 and has, in the words of Dr. Leutze, "worked relentlessly to imbue the fledgling institution with the characteristics beyond academic excellence which are associated with the more established universities—distinctiveness, dignity, and tradition. He has helped UNCW build its heritage."

Dr. Shim founded the Albert Schweitzer International Prizes in 1975, the establishment of the UNCW Museum of World Cultures, the North Carolina Living Treasure, and the United States Living Treasure. In 1985, he was a finalist in the National Professor of the Year Award. He was also the recipient of the 1981 Trustee Teaching Excellence Award.

Each recipient will receive a $5,000 per year stipend for three years. This is the first time that an award of this distinction and financial magnitude has ever been presented at UNCW to recognize professors who excel in undergraduate teaching.

After the award ceremony, Dr. Shim said, "The best learning is done outside the classroom. If students don't learn outside the classroom, they only know what the professor knows, and that's disappointing. Youngsters must go beyond their professors."

Also recognized during the ceremony were the 1991 and 1992 Chancellor's Teaching Excellence award recipients.

The 1991 recipients were Dr. John M. Garris, Production and Design Sciences; Dr. William H. Overman, Jr., Psychology; Dr. Carole E. Talbot, Communication Studies; Dr. Bradford L. Walker, Curricular Studies; and Dr. Michael D. Wentworth, English.

The 1992 recipient were Dr. K. Douglas Hoffman, Management and Marketing; Dr. Carole Chase Thomas, Education; Dr. Timothy A. Ballard, Biological Sciences; Mr. Donald E. Furst, Fine Arts; and Dr. Carol A. Filgrum, Psychology.

Dr. Ballard was also awarded the 1992 Trustee Teaching Excellence Award.

Education

The School's goal is to provide better quality teachers for the students of tomorrow. It will aggressively recruit potential teachers, offer a pre-education course sampling, eliminate the "automatic A" sequence for student-teachers (Dr. Tyndall reported nearly 98% of all student-teachers receive an A in their evaluations), and possibly require a 2.7 grade point average for graduates, instead of the current 2.5 g.p.a.

"No more automatic 'A's' for student-teachers."

Dr. Robert Tyndall

This new approach to education will require close cooperation among all school systems, elementary, high, and college schools. Dr. Tyndall and Chancellor Leutze firmly believe that not only is this the program the best approach to school reform, it is also important that UNCW is the leader in tackling the problem.

Chancellor James R. Leutze addresses the audience during Wednesday's convocation.

Intramurals has begun, and has started with a bang. Labor day week-end marked the first annual kick-off classic, and the day was quite successful. Several teams competed in the round robin tournament, and by doing so, prepared for regular season play.

Sigma Nu won the championship finishing undefeated. They defeated Sigma Alpha Epsilon (2-1) in the final game by a score of 18-13.

All teams demonstrated excellent sportsmanship, and the games were very competitive. Congratulations to Sigma Nu and SAE.

Following this week's practice games, the regular season will begin Monday, September 14. The final day for volleyball registration is Thursday, September 17, at 4:00 p.m. Team captains and individuals in need of a team must attend the captain's meeting at 4:30 in Hanover gymnasium. Rugby has become recognized as one of the most exciting team sports in the world. It is fast, aggressive, and physical. What a great spectator sport!!

Collegiate Rugby began in North Carolina in the 1960's with N.C. State having the first team. However, it did not evolve at UNC-Wilmington until the 1980's. After two disappointing seasons in 1988 and 1989, UNCW had an extremely successful 1991-92 season. The team adopted Chris Wagner as the coach, placed second in the Eastern Conference, and defeated N.C. State for the first time. In addition to the team's success, there were also some outstanding individuals. Chris Wagner, Mark Ingham, and John Mieser were each named to the N.C. Collegiate All-Star Team.

The goals and expectations are high for UNCW Rugby this year. With many seasoned veterans and a new group of potential rookies, the team stands an excellent chance of placing first in Division 1. The first two home games are scheduled for September 19 against Duke, and September 26 against East Carolina. Both games will be at 1:00 on Brooks field. Please support the Rugby team by becoming an active fan. You won't be disappointed.

New players are always welcome. Interested participants should contact Chris Wagner at 395-0706 or Eric Muschel at 350-8078.

The Gutter

BY WAYNE A. WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

Last January my first love left me. Through our long separation, I felt empty, devastated, as if I were wasting away. During what I call the off season, I struggled to go on.

I spent most of my time trying to find my sporting identity and my sporting orientation. I managed to form a relationship with others, but they were doomed from the start.

I see know that nothing can take the place of my first love, the National Football League.

Last Sunday she came back into town. I heard the rumors that she was coming back, only now they are comforted. There is no mistaking her when you are face to face with such beauty and excitement.

At 1:00 she waltzed into my apartment and back into my heart. We spent the whole day together, reminiscing about the glory days, the rough years and the day at hand.

In one day we managed to visit Chicago, Philadelphia and Denver. As the day drew to a close she promised to return to my apartment on Monday for dinner. I begged her not to go, but she had other obligations. Our dinner turned out to be a Texas style feast, and as the night ended she had to go on business.

Ever part of her being, her essence and even her unpredictability I enjoy. She is complex, surprising and exhilarating to be around. Some days she is a Saint, while other days she is a Buccaneer, a Steeler or a Cowboy or an Indian.

As we move into late Autumn, urgency slips into our relationship. For I know deep in my heart that our time draws closer to an end. I eagerly await the weekends so that we may be together. On Monday's we cuddle closely while the snow steadily falls in Denver, Pittsburgh or Buffalo.

Each week unfolds the mystery in her character. Each weekend adds excitement to our relationship.

What would I do without her, I am wrapped around her finger. Each passing day my love grows stronger. Faithful to the end, I do not want another.

During the week I do not see her, but I often think about her. Saturdays, Sundays and Mondays are the days we renew our love affair. We spend passionate hours on the floor on the bed or where ever it is comfortable.

As I stand in her presence and gaze upon her, I stand awe struck, taking up by her beauty and grace. MY eyes do buck when I witness the splendor of a feline of the long bomb.

What makes our relationship so special is, finding the right play for the right situation is the complex part of our romance. Like most women, you cannot assume anything, for often you will be wrong.

Every time she returns to me she is different, which adds to her beauty.

On how I love her, but I know that she again will have to leave me. I will cherish the next twenty-four weeks together.

With more twists and excitement that a soap opera, I am caught up in her web of pleasure, pain and ecstasy.

What am I going to do when she leaves me again, what will fill the void in my life. Who will take the place of my first love, the NFL.

Home Sweep Home-Lady Seahawks Putting It Together

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

After the game Tuesday night Coach McDaniel was pleased. "Tonight we played well together. Defensively we were much better, the games in Charlotte showed us what we were like—our strengths and weaknesses."

Judging from the three game sweep over Coastal Carolina Tuesday, it looks as if the Lady Seahawks are using the losses in the Charlotte tournament to heighten their level of play.

Lesli Knauss, KC Harmon,

Sheldon Plentovitch, Jen Parks, Jennifer Jamieson and Amy Chilausky were the starters for The Lady Seahawks. The first home game of the season, marked a return to Hanover Gymnasium due to the Convocation set for Wednesday in Trask Coliseum.

Each game of the series was marked by distinct play, game one was plagued by long serves.

Both teams had troubles serving the ball in play on the other side of the court.

With Coastal up five to two, the lady seahawks tighten their defensive play to go on a three-to-zero run and tie the game at five.

With strong aggressive play from starter Sharon Plentovitch and a tremendous boost from reserve Bobi Pate, UNCW fought to keep serve.

The team did not give up even when down fourteen to twelve. With inspired net play Amy Chilausky, UNCW rallied back to win game one 16-14.

Game two the team chanted after their break, "start strong, end strong," and that was exactly what happened.

The visitor's broke into the scores column first, only to find themselves down ten to three as the game progressed.

With game two over at fifteen to nine the Seahawks, needed one game to win the match.

Game three could be slated, "one for the road." In game three, coastal started off with a four to one lead. After a four-to-zero run by the Lady Seahawks the opposition moved ahead seven to four.

Once again the total game play of the Seahawks rose. They committed less unforced errors as the other team were self-destructed on the court.

After a tie at seven the team scored seven unanswered points, ending the game at 15-7, totaling the three game sweep over Coastal Carolina.

Getting the team off to a good home start Tuesday.

The good all around play of the seahawks posted individual performances like Lesli Knauss's 11 kills and 13 digs. Amy Chilausky had 10 kills and 4 solo blocks, while 30 assists was posted by Sheldon Plentovitch.

As the team prepares to face the rest of the schedule, Coach McDaniel adds that, "Time to work together will solidify this team."

Lady Seahawk, Jennifer Jamieson (10) helped establish net superiority over Coastal Carolina.

Yelling, Kicking And Screaming

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS

The Citadel paid a visit to UNCW Saturday for a soccer match that began UNCW's season.

This game was the first career start for goalkeeper Ken Lentz. Lentz, a 6-foot-1 sophomore from Bay Village, Ohio, played in 2 games last season and totaled fifty three minutes in the goal.

The game's action went in spurts as this defensive struggle lumbered along. At the 16:45 mark, the Seahawks had the first opportunity to score with a scramble in front of The Citadel goal, but the kick was scooped up by the goalie.

The Citadel also had an attempt to forge ahead in the first half. At the 13:15 The Citadel had a chance to go ahead one. But the shot went wide.

The first half ended scoreless. In the second half the Seahawks Todd Pascarella, dinked in a deflected shot off the goalie to put UNCW up 1-0.

It was not until 1:28 left in the game did The Citadel tie the score at one a piece.

In the overtime with 2:30 seconds left in overtime, Todd Pascarella's shot is captured by the Citadel keeper.

The defense of both teams were solid for the rest of this period.

In overtime the Citadel scores from the outside with 12:40 left.

Lentz makes a diving save to stop Citadel from taking a two point lead with 8:10 left.

Time would only run out for the Seahawks after this attempt. As they go down to the Citadel 2-1 in overtime.

After the game coach Blackmore assessed the play of the team.

"We created some good chances. We played well enough to win, but in the last ten minutes of the second half, we were content with our lead... This was a time to play even harder for a chance to go ahead two goals."

Todd Pascarella felt that the, "teams motion was good, the other aspects of the game will come in time."

Ken Lentz perceived that, "we had a slight problem with our transition play, at times we were sluggish to get back on defense."

"I am really happy with the sweepers (Defense), and I was really comfortable with this being my first start," Lentz said.

Their next game will be the September 10 at Campbell at 3:30.

Goalkeeper Ken Lentz, had 10 saves out of 17 shots against him Saturday against the Citadel.

Wayne's "Game Of The Week," will feature those fabulous "Men of Steel" in Pittsburgh. The Jets are a one point favorite, but in Three Rivers Sunday the Steeler "D" will be as stingy as ever. Look for this to be a sleeper until the third. Steelers 24-14.

Jim's "Game Of The Week," is the Buffalo vs. San Francisco game. Can the Bills be as awesome on grass? Is Steve Bono for real? Yes, to both of these questions. Look for Buffalo's "D" to be the key. Bills 31-21.

Chris Powell's "Game of the Week" is Chicago at New Orleans. I expect this to be the biggest defensive game on Sunday. Look for New Orleans to raise the level of their running game. New Orleans 24-20.

Lee Person Elected Attorney General Cute Factor Wins Sudduth Presidency

BY CAROLE MEHLE
Staff Writer

Last week, the Student Government asked the students to vote on who would fill some vacancies in the Senate. This week, those vacancies were filled by the winners of the SGA elections.

The winners of the elections filled vacancies for the Freshman class offices, representatives at large and attorney general.

On Monday, Chris Sudduth took office as the new Freshman class president. Along with Sudduth, Dan Sullivan emerged from the elections as a winner. Sullivan assumed duties in his new office of Freshman class vice president. Serving as senators for the freshman class are Greg Wahl and Brian Thompson.

The upper classmen voted in the elections for the attorney general of the Senate and for seven fall representatives at large. Veteran senator Lee Person was elected as attorney general. David Fann, Jeff Gurkin and Kristian Pulliam returned with new terms and Ashley Wallace returned to the Senate as a fall representative.

Joining the returning players in the Senate are first time players Jay Lewis, Anna Parry and Robin Bradley.

Two other vacancies were filled at the SGA Senate's Monday meeting as well. John Farmer beat out William Humphries for the special senator seat that Person vacated when he was elected as attorney general. Roger Hyman, sophomore class president, was elected as president pro tempore of the Senate. The president pro tempore is the person that runs the SGA Senate in the absence of the SGA Vice President Duane "Ziggy" Nix or if Nix has a conflict of interests with an item on the floor of the Senate.

The elections went "great," said Suzie Goodrum, office manager for SGA. Goodrum said over 20% of the freshman class turned out and that 268 members of the class voted. Upper classmen did not turn out as well as the freshmen did, with only 135 turning out to vote.

"People have a tendency to think of fall elections as freshman elections. The reps are for everybody," Goodrum explained.

"Many assume the elections are for freshmen. They don't understand the makeup of SGA." One thing the election was not lacking was publicity. Red stop signs were posted all over campus by Public Information Officer Jeff Holeman. He said, "There was more [publicity] than ever done for an election before. A lot of work was put in and I put forth my best. See SGA, page 3.

Russia, Japan, England, and others represented Exchange Program Spans The World

BY EDWARD MOSELEY
Staff Writer

If you feel like you are in another country don't be alarmed, instead smile and greet the growing international community at UNCW.

This semester the Office of International Programs brings us 50 new students from 23 countries. This is a large increase over previous years.

"The crucial element in international programs is to have the support of the administration," program director Dr. Gary Faulkner said. "Chancellor Leutze has strongly supported our effort."

Further support for UNCW's growing international community is in the planning. It will be called the International Student Organization (ISO).

"The ISO will be a focal point for international students whether they are going out or coming into it," said UNCW environment staff advisor and sponsor, Ida Toplin.

The ISO is drawing up a constitution and will elect co-officers to meet the special needs of in-coming and out-going international students.

The next meeting will be Monday September 28 at 5:00 pm in Room 103 UU.

Currently there are 36 degree seeking international students and 13 International Student Exchange Program participants.

"I didn't like it at first, it was so different," said 23-year-old Adrienne Darvas from Hungary. "It is so noisy, and it was difficult with the language."

Adri can speak Hungarian, German and English and knows some Spanish and Russian. "I like learning languages," she said, except, "Russian was mandatory. We always cheated on exams. We hated it."

Adri wants to know why the buildings are so far apart here. "You have to walk ten minutes to get anywhere."

Vivienne Hurley, a Psychology and Marketing student from Great Britain said the university grounds are larger, but that, "there is not as much on campus."

"In England there are pubs on campus where 1,000 people gather to drink socially. We went to Center Stage one Saturday and two people were there," she said.

Hurley said she has had some interesting comments. "A lot of people say they like my accent. Another asked if I knew the Queen."

She said she did not know her socially and laughed.

Alcohol Advertising Reaches All Time High

BY AMY BRENNAN
Staff Writer

Last year, the alcoholic beverage industry spent $2 million on advertising campaigns which targeted primarily young adults.

Alternatives! and Student Activities will sponsor a program called "Drink Sells the Dream," which will look at the marketing of alcohol to young adults. The program will be on Sunday, Sept. 20, from 6-8 pm in the University Center Ballroom 2, and Monday Sept. 21 from 11:30-1:30 pm in the University Center Ballroom 3.

The program's speaker, Penny Norton, is not your average lecturer. Ms. Norton uses slides and videotapes to get her message across. "She's small, but she's big on energy," said Diane Edwards, Coordinator of Alternatives!

Ms. Norton has many titles stemming from her work in alcohol abuse prevention. Among them, she is Project Director for National Public Alcohol Awareness Initiative. She believes that communication is the key to change. Communities must set standards that must be enforced by everyone.

Unfortunately, there are few limitations on who alcohol companies target.

The media influences our values through advertising. Beer commercials often feature young, sexy people drinking beer and having a good time. Young people want to identify with that image. By age 18, the average person has seen 100 thousand beer commercials.

Ten percent of the population consumes 60% of the alcohol that is purchased. Despite drinking age laws that require consumers to be 21 years old, alcohol is the leading cause of death for people under 21.

Alternatives! in the University Union 104 helps students to make choices about alcohol and drug use. They offer substance abuse education, consultation, referral, and prevention programming. Alternatives! conducts lectures and workshops as well as providing information on drugs and alcohol.

They employ peer counselors who give most of the workshops. Oct. 19 Alternatives! will have a tie-dye session. Everyone is invited. For more information on what Alternatives! has to offer, call 395-3683 or just drop by. They are there to help with all the tough decisions that must be faced on a daily basis.

UNCW And Big Sweep Get Together

BY JULIE PODLASEK
Staff Writer

This Saturday, September 19th, hundreds of people are gathering together to do their part to help clean up the environment. They are participating in First Citizens Bank Big Sweep at Carolina Beach State Park and Fort Fisher Recreation area.

Last year, nearly 1,000 volunteers worked at New Hanover County waterways, collecting over 14,000 pounds of trash. Statewide, over 2,212 tons of debris was collected by more than 12,000 volunteers.

Many clubs and organizations at UNCW are taking part in the event this weekend. The Biology Club is doing something very unique this year for the Big Sweep. They are picking up trash on the Spoil Islands, which are located behind Masonboro Island and Wrightsville Beach.

These islands are formed by the dredging that goes on within these areas.

According to Mike Howe, the president of the club, most people usually concentrate on cleaning the areas around Carolina Beach and Fort Fisher but, "this area has never been done before." There is about 20 members taking boats from island to island to pick up trash. This is something which is greatly needed for the environment and appreciated by everyone.

The Geography club is also participating in Big Sweep by covering the areas on the south end of Masonboro Island.

This event is open to the public and takes place from 9am to 1pm on Saturday.

So be a part of the pollution solution and join the many students from UNCW who care enough to take trash into their own hands.

On the nights of September 23rd and 30th the UNCW history department will be sponsoring a symposium on the current crisis in former Yugoslavia. The intent of this program is to explore the historical foundations of the crisis and examine the challenges it presents to both the warring factions and the international community. The program will present five speakers who will each address a different issue, each falling within the above mentioned context.

The night of the 23rd will have three speakers, the first of whom will be Dr. David Mackenzie. He received his Ph.D. from Columbia University and is currently a professor of Russian and Balkan history at UNC.

Dr. Mackenzie has authored several books on diplomatic issues in southeastern Europe and has done extensive work on Serbian history.

Second on the agenda will be Dr. Mark Spaulding, a newly arrived assistant professor of history here at UNCW, who received his Ph.D. from Harvard University in 1988. Dr. Spaulding, who is currently at work on a book about Germany's foreign economic policy in the last century, will be addressing the topic of the effect of the current Balkan crisis on international organizations such as NATO.

The first evening's conclusion will be myself giving a brief presentation of the activities of the Croatian-American community in relation to the present situation. Questions will be taken by the speakers afterwards which will be followed by a reception in the auditorium of Cameron Hall.

Anyone wishing to gain a better understanding of this crisis, in such a potentially explosive part of the world, is urged to attend.

Trevor Fitzall, 21, of England also spoke of the Royal family. "I think most of the British public is pro-Monarchy," he said, "but there is no way back for Diana. The Monarchy is in real trouble."

He was referring to recent photographs and allegations of marital infidelity.

Nathan Ivens, 21, Matt Potter, 19, and Fitzall play Rugby. "I miss watching Rugby; it's all over the telly in England," Nathan said.

They think American food is great. You can eat all you want, but they need more vegetarians," said Matt Potter.

A difference that Trevor and Matt have noticed is the attitude towards school. "It's almost like going back to high school," Trevor said. "Going to lectures is more up to your own motivation in England where in the United States you have got to go."

Sherif El-Sanadily, 22, will play basketball for UNCW this year. He is from Egypt and is faithful to his Islamic heritage.

"We party in Egypt but, it is a different kind," he said. "There is no drinking, no sex before marriage. It is not acceptable to go dancing with your girlfriend. Once you marry you can go dancing with her."

Sherif attended high school in Kuwait and spent a year at American University in Cairo. He played basketball for American University's International team.

Masatoshi Kawamura, 21, is from Nagoya Gakuin University in Nagoya, Japan. "We have a completely different system than the United States," he said. "I was chosen as an exchange student. I had no choice what university. My professor decides. But I am lucky to come here."

Presidential Candidate, Bill Clinton spoke when Kawamura was at Iowa State for language training. He was surprised by the "No Bush" shouts and said, "In Japan you don't criticize the opponent."

Hirono Takeda and Yoshie Fujiwara are also from Nagoya Gakuin University.

Fujiwara is studying Spanish and English and said she, "did not want to take communications, but our university told us we had to."

Takeda said she likes the, "good weather, large campus, and pretty buildings". She is interested in international relations and American Society. "It's a very free, independent country," she said.

Paula Diaz, 23, of the International Exchange of Uruguay is from the Universidad Catolica del Uruguay Damaso Antonio Larrañosa.

There are two types of Universities in Uruguay; public and private. At public universities you don't have to pay and private you pay.

Diaz attends a private university. "You can get a degree without having to pay at public universities," she said, "but there is a price to pay. The government does not pay the teachers so the teachers split their time between school and another profession."

"The students in Uruguay do not study from book," Diaz said. "One person will go to the library, order a book, then go to a photocopy center and order 20 photocopies from the book. Then each person goes and pays.(for the photocopies)"

Diaz is studying Human Resources and would like to return to Uruguay to help improve the educational system.

Jean Jules Felix, 24, came to the United States two years ago from Haiti to study chemistry. He has, "one thing in life, one thing" that he would like to do. That is to become a cardiologist.

"I love the school system here," he said, "much more practice. More European in Haiti, more theory."

"The boat people are in hard economic times and are oppressed; no food, no jobs. On the American side...many problems with the economy. They cannot take every boat that comes to their shore because everyone would leave Haiti."

"If you go to America and tell everyone (in Haiti) how hard it is to make it they will laugh at you," Felix said.

"Everyone knows America has plenty." The office of International Programs (OIP) will have an open meeting soon for those with an interest in studying abroad. For information visit the OIP in Room 103 of the UU or call 395-3685.

SGA

"I'm satisfied. I don't know why they [the upper classmen] didn't vote."

Holeman said there was even an incentive for people to vote. "When I was running the polls, I had SGA cups and people were asking what they were."

Goodrum said she was doing anything she could to get people to vote and Holeman added that he thought the turnout was higher than the total of 403. "There was one time when I was in Wagoner Hall that I was swamped with five people giving me their IDs at once and I was trying to get them all in.

Though elections are over, there are still two vacant offices that are in the process of being filled. Nix said at Monday's SGA Senate meeting, he will appoint Laura Medlin to senior class vice president.

Medlin will succeed to the office of senior class president when Jennifer LePage, currently in the position, graduates in December.

Nix and other senators said that former Junior Class President Lyn Carney, who is studying abroad this semester, is interested in petitioning for the vacant senior class vice president position in the spring.

Why Are Family Values Such A Hot Topic Now?

Republicans have been in the White House for the past twelve years, and 20 of the last 24. The last twelve years have been led by two men who claim that God is for America and the Republican Party. So how come family values are at an all-time low? Haven't we had the best possible leadership for the past decade-plus?

President George Bush did not even read the Republican platform for the upcoming election (So he may not have realized there was a clause that said abortion will not be legal in any time), but he did read enough of the Democratic platform to notice no mention of God.

At the Republican Convention, President Bush harped and harped about the lack of family values in this country. How could any politician hoping to lead this country not take into consideration which side God Himself was on? How could a politician seeking the highest office in the land, under the supreme deity of course, be taken seriously if he ignores God?

President Bush wants us to believe he and his party are the proper choice for leadership because they know what is "proper" for this country. Let's take a look at a few topics and a few Republican responses.

The House recently passed a family leave bill that would provide 12 weeks of unpaid leave to employees so they can care for newborn or ailing children, parents, and spouses, or for medical leave if the employee gets seriously ill.

President Bush has said he will veto the bill.

President Bush has said his opponent raised taxes 128 times as governor of Arkansas in 12 years.

Using the same criteria to count tax increases (count some taxes several times, components of a tax are counted separately, and minor fees are counted as taxes), columnist George Will says columnist Michael Kinsley has pointed out the president has raised taxes more often in the four years he has been in office.

At a Bush rally, Rep. Newt Gingrich (GA) said Woody Allen having non-incense with a non-daughter to whom he was a non-father because they were a non-family fit the Democratic platform perfectly.

Rev. Pat Robertson said, in this "Year of the Woman," said that the Equal Rights Amendment being considered for part of the Iowa state constitution is part of a "feminist agenda" that "is about a socialist, anti-family movement that encourages women to leave their husbands, limit their children, practice witchcraft, destroy capitalism, and become lesbians."

These are men campaigning for the Republican party! These comments are similar to Adolf Hitler's during his rise to power. By presenting fantastically ridiculous claims, they hope to persuade voters to their side.

Comment such as these from a republican should not surprise many North Carolinians though, our own Jesse Helms said, after his heart surgery, that he was going to quit smoking because it was killing him. This from the man, who for years, politicized for the tobacco lobbies and their claims that cigarettes were not harmful to a person's health.

The Tufts University Center on Hunger, Poverty and Nutrition Policy recently released a study that stated 6 million people in poverty in this country do not receive food stamps, 10 million in poverty who receive food stamps still experience hunger because the program doesn't meet dietary needs, and 5 million people who don't qualify for food stamps experience hunger because they can't stretch their household budget far enough.

The Republicans want every household with children to have one parent as the breadwinner and one as a constant in the home. Single people, as Vice-President Quayle ("e" or "no e") has said, have no moral right being parents and are part of the problems in this country today.

(Well, if the economy, including tax breaks for the middle and lower class and tax increases for the "elite," allowed families to rely on one income, most people would probably follow the Republican dream.)

Instead, they live in a world that necessitates two incomes, putting children into day care, or coming home to an empty home. That world has been brought to us the last twelve years by, gosh, Republican presidents.

President Bush has concentrated on foreign policy during his four years because he saw what a mess he had inherited from his predecessor.

(Side note: Ronald Wilson Reagan is a series of three six-letter words, 666. Read into it whatever religious meaning you want.)

The Republican Party is reaching for straws. They don't have an excuse for the lack of leadership George Bush has demonstrated, so they are now claiming God as a political ally. By avoiding the true issues and indulging our intelligence with religious propaganda, the Republican want to demonstrate their leadership capabilities.

They have, and they are no where to be found.

(Note: There was no mention of Bill Clinton by name above, yet I know where I put my trust.)

perhaps a youth fellowship. Your beliefs, by in large, reflect all that you have been taught by your elders in the faith.

As in many others, your university days provide you with an opportunity to explore more deeply what you genuinely believe for yourself and how you understand what God is about in your life with all its hopes and fears, dreams and expectations. You are also aided by your present stages of psychological development which finds you working out your own identity distinct from your family and background.

How I Spent My Summer ...Not!!!

I had the absolute neatest idea the other day while I was watching an exciting episode of the People's Court. It was your average case; the guy (plaintiff) was suing his former girlfriend/fiance (defendant) over their engagement ring but she couldn't return it because she had used it to make a down payment on a double-wide trailer for herself and her new boyfriend, the plaintiff really needed the money so his new girlfriend went to the defendant's house where she was bitten by the dog and it was a big mess and they all agreed to drop their real court cases and have the dispute settled by a cranky old wanna-be judge and all in front of millions of Americans. I call it democracy in action.

Anyhow, the tension was broken by one of these Hardee's vs. Kentucky Fried Chicken commercials and I had my great idea.

What if KFC (Plaintiff) were to sue Hardee's (defendant) and have the case tried on The People's Court. That way, the dispute would be settled and we could once again feel free to watch television without those insidious fried chicken commercials. As usual, there may be a few problems.

1.) Would Judge Wagner even hear the case? (I hear he likes the boyfriend/girlfriend/dogbite cases much better.)

LETTERS To The Editor

I thought about applying for a job as a news staff writer but I figured that it would be more interesting and more fun to write an editorial to The Seahawk. This letter is concerning all the lazy people who are in our student body. Every week I read The Seahawk and have noticed that they must solicit for editorials.

It just so happens that while I was touring the University Union, I came across the Seahawk's luxurious "Penthouse" suite and noticed the extremely large white space on the editorial page. Trying to find something to compare it to, the only thing that popped into my mind was the basketball player's ego (God knows why they have them!! It's not like they have won anything lately. If anybody should have one it should be the Women's Ultimate).

So I grabbed the first available Macintosh and began to type out a letter. This goes out to everybody who complains. The editorial page is here for you to voice your opinion. Be glad that you live in a society where you can voice your opinion and don't have to hold everything in.

Many of you probably do not realize that your funds are going to the production of this paper. Not writing letters to the editor is basically wasting services that you have already paid for. Use it. THIS IS YOUR PAPER. You only get out of life what you put into it, and it is obvious nobody out there has put anything into The Seahawk editorial page.

I would like to thank The Seahawk staff, the editor and the typist for allowing me to contribute this article.

Name withheld upon request

"Well...I really do have it written and I do plan to turn it in someday..."

2.) Would Rusty eat the evidence? (I hear he's very fond of fried chicken.)

3.) How does the judge know if the litigants really were sworn in (Rusty could be a pathological liar), and if he really has read the complaint then why does he have to ask so many stupid questions? (I think he just likes to pry into people's personal affairs.)

4.) Would Doug Lewelyn come up with a corny title for the case? (I.e. "This is the 'fowl' case of 'My bird is bigger than yours,' and 'This little chicken went to market.'")

5.) Will we ever find out where in the back "Lake Eden" is? (I don't think it's in my neck of the woods.)

Things that make you go "Hmmm?????"

I really must get on with the topic at hand, which is of course, HOW I SPENT MY SUMMER BY PHIL SMITH. Well...I really do have it written and I do plan to someday actually turn it in to the editor for publication, but there were just too many other things going on this week and I thought it more journalistically correct to cover everything and save the "How I Spent My Summer" issue for a slow week. I know my faithful, forgiving readers will understand.

Speaking of understanding, there are some new UNCW Seahawks (I have decided that we are indeed still Seahawks even if the mascot is different and one of our colors that use to be green is now a putrid teal.) Policies that I just don't get. The first of these things I don't really understand is the new "First Class Absence" policy.

Simply stated (as if I ever state anything simply), the policy says that any student failing to show up for a class on the first day will be considered "absent with out leave," and bumped down like a wild beast or tortured and executed. Or, if the professor so chooses, he or she can merely drop the absent student from the class roster and add another student in the place of the wild beast (a.k.a. "absent student"). Of course there is a provision that provides for legitimate excuse (i.e. sickness, death in family, surf was up, etc.), provided that the student/wild beast has a well written, typed, certified, notarized, sealed letter signed by mom. And people say life isn't fair?

The other recent edict I don't understand is the new and improved bandy-dandy "Repeat of Course Policy" which littered my campus mail box last week. It consisted of a three sentence paragraph which essentially tells us that we can repeat, without substantial penalty, my course in which we receive a grade of "D" or "F" for up to five thousand times.

Then the following four paragraphs go on to define hard to understand concepts such as "course," "Grade," and "five thousand." It also informs the would-be idiot that only the first grade you receive will be counted in the GPA but that the other 4,999 will be reported on your transcript, along with the inscription, tries hard but finds work difficult. So those of you enrolled in Freshman Seminar for the thousandth time, don't worry, you've got 4,000 more to go. Someday, you may even see "Substantial improvement this semester" on your very own report card.

Well Amigos (Yes, I'm taking Spanish this semester), I guess it's about time for me to say "Sionara," or "Arrivaderchi," or something like that. Don't forget to tune in next time to this same bat paper on the same bat page. And remember, if you feel someone has written something in this column that grossly offends you, don't take the law into your own hands (but please don't take him to court); write a letter to the editor.

Until next time...keep your mind out of the gutter and your head out of the toilet.

Psychological Growth Spurred On By College Experience

but there are many of you that think Christianity is mainly about avoiding hell and going to heaven. It is not. Such a notion is too simplistic and makes the essential nature of the Christian faith too easy to turn off and walk away from.

I hope that as you engage in your college education, part of that education will find you seeking to unravel the issues that relate to your own personal spirituality and the place it plays in what you are seeking in life. Many of you come out of experience in churches that have been made up, in the main, of Sunday morning worship, Sunday school and perhaps a youth fellowship. Your beliefs, by in large, reflect all that you have been taught by your elders in the faith.

As in many others, your university days provide you with an opportunity to explore more deeply what you genuinely believe for yourself and how you understand what God is about in your life with all its hopes and fears, dreams and expectations. You are also aided by your present stages of psychological development which finds you working out your own identity distinct from your family and background.

This is a wonderfully deep and rich time of life, fraught with sorts of potential for growing in thought and faith. For non-traditional students, often something has happened that has brought you back to the university at a later period in life, but still open to discovering new perspectives for yourself.

I want to state as clearly and forthrightly as I can, my belief that we ignore our spiritual journey to our own detriment, not just in terms of heaven or hell, but in terms of finding or own identity and in terms of discovering a deep sense of meaning for our lives.

The fundamental question is not, "If you die today, do you know where you will be tomorrow?" The fundamental questions are two-fold: "who am I?" and "what is the source of an abundant life for me in this world in which I live?"

To seek the answers to those two questions, is to set forth on a spiritual journey that is not necessarily easy, but leads to a new and deeper understanding of God and Self and opens us to a life of integrity, congruence, freedom, hope, and love. And we will quickly discover that such a life which invites us to so much potential in our lives, is also an imitation to a life that never ends.

It is easy to stop going to church while in college. It is easy to find plenty of reasons on the religious scene for spoofing religion and having the excuse to turn it all off.

I am here to say that it would be an incredible waste for you not to explore any and all questions you have encountered on your own spiritual journey. God lies at the core of your own personal identity. You simply cannot ignore that without doing damage to who you are and who you might become.

UNCW Teachers Involved "Share our Strength" to End Hunger

BY RAMONA HUPP
A & E Editor

They looked like an ordinary family on vacation, taking a break from the long drive to Wrightsville Beach. Their dusty Ford, packed to the roof with what seemed like everything they owned, had come to rest on the empty mall parking. They, a typical four unit family, a bit disabled, a bit weary, had chosen this less than lackluster tourist sight not to observe, but to be observed.

With concrete buildings filled with materialistic goods and groceries as the backdrop, the breadwinner of the family held up a sign toward the passing motorists. It cast down a shadow which hid most of his face, but the words written on the flimsy cardboard were quite clear: "WILL WORK FOR FOOD."

So the typical four-unit family is now destitute, homeless and hungry—AND in Wilmington.

Federick Busch, writer and organizer of The National Reading: Writers Harvest for the Homeless, aptly puts it: "So the homeless are now five miles from paradise."

The statistics seem staggering, so staggering that it's hard to digest the numbers. Yet, here in the midst of southern hospitality it does exist.

Reported just last week by Associated Press, it is estimated that over 30 million Americans suffer from hunger—a 50% increase from just seven years ago. And 3 million Americans are estimated to be "homeless"—which, a little over a decade ago was just a word signifying a temporary condition, not a national tragedy.

Busch, coming face to face with the statistics, decided to put his skills in to action and came up with an idea to help. Busch, in conjunction with Share Our Strength (SOS), a Washington D.C. based group aimed exclusively at feeding the hungry, organized a national reading to take place on September 22, 1992. Writers, readers and listeners in 80 cities across the nation will join together on this day to share more than literary affinity, they will also help feed those in need through proceeds of ticket sales.

Wilmington will be one of those 80 cities participating in the national reading. The local reading has been organized by Joanne Bristol, of Bristol Books in the Galleria. Bristol actually helped develop this program while working for SOS in Washington, D.C.. After five years of working with SOS, she and her husband moved to Wilmington and opened their own book store. When she heard that Busch and SOS were ready to put their plan in to action she was more than delighted to offer any help to organize a local reading. The Bristol, UNCW, Blockade Runner Resort Hotel and WHQR 91.3 FM have all volunteered their services for this reading to take place.

The response has been very encouraging. Over 120 authors waived their fees and have donated their time in order to help launch this program. The National Reading: Writers Harvest for the Homeless hopes to become an annual event.

The reading, taking place at 7:30 p.m., King Hall Auditorium on UNCW's campus, will feature such disparate authors as Clyde Edgerton, Robin Greene, Tim McLaurin, Philip Gerard, Director of UNCW's Creative Writing Program, and UNCW professors, Kathleen Halme and Cameron Sperry. All will be reading lively passages from their own work. Edgerton and McLaurin will also be reading from a new collaborative effort.

Tickets are $5 for students and $10 for non-students, and can be purchased at Bristol Books or Philip Gerard's office, room 160, English Department, Morton Hall.

Don't wait until homelessness is only five miles from your paradise.

Fitness Fact SWEAT:

Your Natural Cooling System

Working up a sweat is a natural by-product of physical activity. Sweat is your body's natural cooling system. If you're active and you sweat, it is likely that your cooling system is doing its job; if you don't sweat, it's time to watch out!

At rest, your normal body temperature is about 98.6 degrees Fahrenheit. When you engage in muscular activity, your body temperature can rise as much as 3 degrees. Sweat is a combination of water, salt and trace amounts of iron. It helps cool your body and prevents you from becoming overheated. If you fail to replace the water you lose in the form of sweat, you run the risk of becoming dehydrated. This can have negative effects on the body.

Water is the best fluid to keep your body hydrated. In general, two 8 oz. glasses of water and one glass after exercise would be sufficient. At least 68 oz. glasses of water should be consumed daily.

So, don't forget: Sweat is healthy and means the body's cooling system is doing its job.

Club Sports

This weekend marks the beginning of two exciting club sport seasons. Women's Ultimate will compete in an all day tournament on Saturday and Sunday (September 19 & 20). Men's Rugby will play Saturday at Duke University. Both games will be very exciting.

The game of Ultimate is a fast paced and exciting game to watch. It involves alot of running and the ability to throw a frisbee and catch it while running and dodging the opponents rushing towards you. It is a combination of basketball, soccer and football. The players serve as the quarterback and the defenders. Many people think of frisbee as a sport you play with your dog or a beer drinking sport but, the game of Ultimate Frisbee is a totally different concept! Come out to Brooks field on Saturday and Sunday and find out what it's all about. For information on how to join, call Nick Meyers at 392-6198 or Susan Turner at 799-5706.

Rugby can be classified as a combination of football and soccer. Considering that there are no pads or helmets worn, and there is a lot of contact with other players, this sport is an extremely aggressive sport. A common term used in the game of Rugby is "scrum", which is an organized collision of 9 players called the "pack". The position of scrum half is similar to the position of quarterback in the game of football. The next home game is on September 26 against E.C.U., the state champions. Come support the Rugby club!! The Training For Excellence

Gutter

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

Last week in the NFL, we got to look at a man who is an athlete among athletes. A two sport warrior that was blessed and has learned the skills necessary to be a contributing factor for both teams that he is currently on the roster for.

The name of this extraordinary man is the issue in question, but not the focus of this editorial. I guess it depends on how you know him that determines what you call him. For those who know him of him, his name is Deion. For his fans, there are a choice of pet names "Primetime" and "Neon Deion." But for demobilized opposing teams, he can be called the breeze on a hot Sunday afternoon or the streak that you can't see let alone tackle.

There are few corner backs in the NFL that are of the same caliber of Deion a.k.a. "Primetime" a.k.a. "The Breeze."

In the last year or two there came the emergence of yet another cornerback that also wears black, like that of the great one, Neon Deion. Frankly he is of the same caliber and in some areas surpasses that of the great one, Sanders. The area in question is sheer hitting power if you are one of those that is curious about the area I was referring.

The American Football Conference, has their own version of a superman on defense. He plays for the fabulous "Men of Steel" in Pittsburgh, and his name is Rod Woodson. In the opening Sunday against the Houston Oilers, Woodson had two interceptions which he returned for 73 yards. He also had seven tackles and punished Houston's receivers for getting close to the ball. Add two more interceptions from the Jets last Sunday, and you have the NFL's leading cornerback in Woodson.

Woodson is definitely a cornerback that has to be respected in the NFL.

With these players in mind, and it is here that I finally get to the purpose of this editorial, I have composed a Dream secondary that I would place against any conceivable offensive team.

At cornerbacks in this nightmare for offensive co-ordinators that I will assemble, I have Woodson and the breeze of Deion Sanders. Man to man defensive coverage would be in full effect the whole game. Go ahead try to pass it over the top and watch these speedsters gobble up errant passes.

For safety's, I shutter to think of the damage that the combination of Alwater (Denver) and Lot (L.A. Raiders) could inflict on a team of fresh raw receivers coming across the middle.

I could stop here and just add some strong, quick linebackers to handle the middle, and the game would be over. So, not to keep you in suspense I have chosen, Pat Swilling (New Orleans), Lawrence Taylor (New York Giants) and Cornelious Bennet (Buffalo).

Scoring would be extremely difficult on this unyielding machine of a defense. When I add a solid front line, I feel that I may team would be undantied in their quest to deny and destroy.

This is What I present to be my dream defense I am challenging every reader to submit to The Seahawk A dream Offense and I will compile the information and tell you the reader what the results are (see inside cover for information of where to send submissions).

But I want you my dream defense would be the most menacing, pain inflicting and the most non-giving "D", the human mind can ever think up. Goodluck!!!!

Behind the scenes of each athletic event whether it be a practice, game or intrasquad scrimmage they will be a representative from the athletic trainers department.

UNCW has 14 student trainers that work closely with the athletes to assist them in any possible rehabilitation in case of an injury.

"This provides valuable hands on experience for anyone wishing to be a trainer after graduation," said Tammy Barber.

Barber explains that, "most athletes get prescribed and treatment here."

"If the injury is too severe for us to handle here, the university has a doctor that will handle it from there. He will look at the injured area, take an X-ray and some will return to us for treatment," continued Barber.

"It is scary seeing people go down in the middle of a game because often you can not tell how severe an injury is, if it is an injury at all," said Tammy.

This job is not all sprains, breaks, creams and ointments, "we get to see athletes without their game face on, we see their joking fun-side also," said Karen Longo.

Senior Megan McKnight adds that, "we must remember that our main concern is that they are making sure that the player(s) are ok, right away."

"We have been lucky along the line of injuries as a whole. The most we see are twists and sprains to the end ankles and knees."

Athletic trainers are trained in first aid, CPR, and are taking courses related to athletic training.

The first year, athletic trainers spend their time in the training room, familiarizing themselves with types of injuries and treatments.

To be certified as a trainer one would need 1500 hours under a trainer. Around twenty-five percent of these hours is to served with a team.

After the hours are done a three part test can be taken to gain certification. After passing a written, oral and practical exam, trainer. Around twenty-five percent of these hours is to served with a team.

After the hours are done a three part test can be taken to gain certification. After passing a written, oral and practical exam, the student trainer is then certified.

What can one do with this certification? Megan McKnight explains that, "the high school, college and professional ranks are opening fields, we just have to find the demand and fill the need."

Soon the new training room will be complete and we will move into this, allowing us much more space. I do not know, if we will be getting a new equipment but our current equipment is pretty modern," Tammy Barber said.

These students will be there if any player is injured. Sometimes the less glamorized role of the student trainer is overlooked and overshadowed by the athletes. Their jobs are essential and often not an easy one, these trainers come as a blessing to the athlete who needs their services.

In sixth grade when little Jenny Parks played volleyball for the first time, you would wonder if she had a vision of the future. Did she even dream, she would be playing volleyball for a division I university, like UNCW.

Now in her fourth year on the Lady Seahawks volleyball team Parks, a senior outside hitter, has become a solid team player for UNCW.

Parks said "The adjustment from high school to college has been a smooth one."

From Pines High School in Whispering Pines, North Carolina, Jen's early influences were her family. Her mom, dad, grandmother, and sister are at the heart of her admiration.

"Our closeness" is what she loves about her up-bringing.

After college Parks wishes to attend graduate school the UNC-CH, to study Speech Pathology.

She is currently volunteering her time at the hospital in the Speech Pathology / Audiology lab.

Speech Pathology is therapy for kids, the mentally ill and stroke patients. Patients are guided and coached in the means to get the most out of the speaking potential.

When asked why she plays volleyball Parks replied, "I enjoy volleyball for the team work and that my teammates have become my best friends."

Parks feels that the key for our team is sustaining a good defensive level.

"In the past we have slipped into a slump in the middle of the season in this area. If we don't let ourselves get into this situation, we will surprise a few teams this year," said Parks

Parks adds that "Our defense is pretty strong, and we are coming around this season offensively. Coach (McDaniel) is doing a good job keeping our motivational levels up."

Parks, is on the volleyball team's publicity committee. This committee is responsible for finding ways to inform more people about the home games and tournaments.

This year the team has an away match at Georgia Tech. "The ACC is always a good test for a team," Parks said.

"In our conference, William and Mary is a team that we have won games on, but we have not yet won a match against them in the four years that I have been here."

Starting with the next home game, their home will be Trask Coliseum, instead of Hanover Gym. "This is a great move for our team, the heat in after was often brutal on the fans and the players. With heat not a factor, this should add up to be a big boost for the team."

This weekend the team will be at The UNC-G Invitational. There they will play North Carolina A&T, UNC-G UNC Asheville and Davidson.

The next chance you have to see the Lady Seahawks in Trask will be September 30, at 7:00 p.m. verses ECU.

Elections Heat Up Campus Politics

BY AMY BRENNAN
Staff Writer

Wilmington and UNCW are heating up politically as the elections draw near.

Democratic Vice Presidential candidate, Al Gore, former Republican presidential candidate Pat Buchanan, and Republican congressional candidate Robert Anderson were all in town over the past weekend.

Mr. Buchanan spoke to about 150 people at the Wilmington Hilton at a breakfast fund-raiser for Republican congressional candidate Robert Anderson.

Mr. Buchanan called Al Gore an environmental "kook" because of Gore's radical environmental protection measures. He also put down the Democratic congress, calling it "entrusted leadership."

He didn't stop there. He also cited Democratic Representative Charlie Rose as a good argument for limiting terms. He was referring to the fact that Rose has represented Southeastern North Carolina for 20 years. Mr. Anderson made jobs at Democratic presidential candidate Bill Clinton by waving his draft notice and saying Clinton has turned his.

Democratic vice-presidential candidate Al Gore spoke to a crowd of about 2,000 at Riverfront Park on Saturday. He was in town to support Beach Sweep. Gore attacked President Bush for putting so much emphasis on family values despite the fact that he is threatening to veto a family leave bill. Senator Gore told the cheering crowd that President Bush and the Republicans, "have run out of time. They have run out of energy. With your help they're going to be run out of office."

UNCW is doing its part for the election. The newly formed College Democrats held a meeting and voter registration on Friday, 18th. Chair-person pro tempore, Wayne Hamlin, said the group is fairly new, but is gaining members quickly. The group has an open discussion format.

"Members need to talk about the topics and issues they don't understand," he said.

The group supports Democratic candidates by working with local campaigns and attending workshops. Mr. Hamlin said, "The election will be a popularity contest. Clinton will make a decent president. He's not the best there is, but he's better than Bush."

Mr. Hamlin seemed to think UNCW is a predominantly Democratic campus. The Young Democrats will hold elections for their own offices on Tues. Sept. 22.

David Rose, President of the College of Republicans, disagreed with Mr. Hamlin, saying that UNCW is more conservative, a

Cheating Scandal Hits UNCW Hard

BY EDWARD MOSELEY
Staff Writer

The Campus Judicial Board is currently hearing cases of alleged violations of the Academic Honor Code. Violations allegedly occurred during final examination period last semester said Pat Leonard, Dean of Students.

The Dean of Students Office sent notices of allegations to the students suspected of cheating in two Biology 105 classes.

"We received back quite a few letters that just asked to be admitted to the allegations," Dean Leonard said. "Some denied the allegation."

The exact allegation is not clear because a number of cases are scheduled to be heard in coming weeks. One case, heard last week was open, but the student's permission must be had in writing before the proceedings can be released.

"much out there," Dean Leonard said. "It's my responsibility that a fair hearing be held to ensure a fair process for everybody involved."

When asked if it was an issue of buying and selling exams, Dean Leonard said, "It could be."

The information on cases which have been settled is not available to the public without written consent of the defendant. A case held last week was open and anyone could have attended, but the release of proceedings also requires written consent.

"The faculty is depressed and disappointed," Dr. R.K. Sizemore, Chairman of the Biology Department said.

"You feel like someone has broken into your house."

He said some students came forward but only a few would testify.

"We felt we had to proceed," Dr. Sizemore said, "but on a scale this large there may be some innocent students involved."

"When I came here it was real pleasant," Dr. Sizemore said.

"Kids were basically good kids and there was minimal cheating. We are now feeling there is more of a problem than we thought; possibly pre-meditated large-scale cheating."

suspected violations fulfilled an obligation. Under section V-3-A off the Student Handbook and Code of Student Life, "Every faculty member, student, administrator, and staff member of the University Community.... has an obligation to report the alleged violation."

Those who do not fulfill the "obligation to report the alleged violation," may be "permitting" cheating and be subject to Academic Honor Code violations themselves.

"As far as morals, if I saw someone cheating I would tell the professor," student Massie Jones said.

"If you can't do the work then there is no point in taking the test."

A student who only wanted to be known as Amy said, "If they want to do it, it's their business. I'm just not going to do it myself."

When asked about the current hearings, Student Body President Joe Mitchell said, "I don't know anything about it."

He did, however, have some practical advice for the students who need this information in another class or a job," he said.

Dr. Jackson of the Psychology Department said if students would, "stop and think what cheating meant they may be less likely to cheat," he said.

"Rather than thinking.... they succumb to the pressures of the moment. They put themselves in a different frame of reference."

Although the faculty is obliged to report all cases of academic dishonesty to the Dean of Students Office an Emerge II survey found that that was not always the case.

The survey which covered the calendar year 1991 found that 77% of dishonesty cases were resolved by student-professor negotiations and not reported to the Dean.

There was approximately a 25% response to the Emerge survey.

Dr. K.R. Gurganus, President of the Faculty Senate, said the system is designed to prevent this type of situation.

"Students will solve the case with the individual instructor and proceed to do the same thing with other instructors," he said.

Delta Tau Delta Makes Comeback

BY HOLLY PRICE
News Editor

Delta Tau Delta is making a comeback on the University of North Carolina at Wilmington's campus.

Delta Tau Delta came to UNCW in 1984 and closed its chapter in 1991. "Our numbers were low and we had poor academics and chaotic finances," said Mr. Thomas S. Sharp, director of program development for Delta Tau Delta.

All this week and next, officials from the group's national office are here interviewing potential new members for the Delta's new chapter. Sign-up tables are located in the University Center throughout this week and next.

The fraternity is looking for all types to join their Zeta Tau Chapter, according to Mr. Brent Trantum, chapter consultant for Delta Tau Delta. "We need some men with some real leadership qualities to get this thing going," said Mr. Sharp.

The Delta's have two other chapters in North Carolina, at Duke and UNC-Chapel Hill.

Former UNCW student and reigning Miss North Carolina USA, Tess Elliott, died last weekend in a skydiving accident.

Miss Elliott, 23, a 1991 graduate of UNCW suffered her fatal accident Sunday when she became entangled in her parachute lines. She apparently strangled to death after the lines from her parachute and auxiliary parachute became entangled.

According to a profile Miss Elliott submitted to pageant officials she began skydiving as a way to overcome her fear of heights.

A dean's list student, Miss Elliott graduated last December with a degree in speech communication. The Morning Star contributed to this article.

Minority Affairs Offers Services

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

Mr. Ralph Parker is a busy gentleman these days. As Director of the Office of Minority Affairs, he tries to ensure all 472 African-American students at UNCW are happy.

The Office of Minority Affairs, University Union 211, offers many programs that ensure a quality education to the minority student. The office focuses on the African-American student now, but will encompass all the minorities soon. Mr. Parker has met with the faculty and staff, and student organizations to offer the best services possible to the other minority students on campus.

One of the programs offered by the office is the "Minority Mentor Program." The program was created to further meet the unique needs of African-American students at UNCW.

The program is designed to provide participants with an upperclassman who has a deep concern for the overall welfare of fellow students.

"We have had the program for six years now," Mr. Parker said. "The mentors, most of whom are selected, go through training sessions to make the new student's transition from home or mother campus to UNCW smooth.

"This is a big help to new students. We've received lots of positive feedback," Mr. Parker continued. "Most mentors were females."

One of the many functions Mr. Parker performs for the African-American students is recruiting new students. He, Mr. Doug Johnson, Associate Director of See Parker, page 8.

"Dirty Harry" At UNCW

BY LAURA KEETER
Staff Writer

It sounds like a scene from Dirty Harry: Sawed-off shotguns, semi-automatic pistols, large caliber pistols, several revolvers, and several high powered rifles.

But campus police confiscated these from UNCW students last year, and were not amused.

"Nobody has the need for a firearm on a university campus," Lt. Charles E. Willis of the Campus Police Department said.

Students who break the North Carolina General Statute prohibiting "for any person to possess, or carry, whether openly or concealed, any gun, rifle, pistol" on any property used for education, will be charged with a misdemeanor in the court system and face UNCW charges as well.

The firearm, said Willis, may be ordered returned or ordered destroyed.

It's fine for a student to want to have their guns at school, Willis said. Campus Police store guns for students who can check them out to carry them off campus.

But what about protection? Although firearms aren't legal on campus, according to Lt. Willis, they're not always a good idea anyway.

"If a person is not well versed in a firearm, it could be a weapon to be used against them," he said.

This happened recently to a victim at UNCW who tried to protect herself with mace, Willis said. An assailant grabbed the mace and used it on her.

"The only thing I can say is that mace and pepper products are not deadly," he said, not wanting to give a "blanket statement" of a good source of protection because, "you have to qualify what you say."

For example, a gun owner should be totally aware of the operation, danger, and liability that comes with the weapon.

Guns are usually confiscated from automobiles or the apartments, said Willis, sometimes due to a report of by a fellow student. But there hasn't been a problem so far this year.

"Keep them off campus," said Freshman Felicia Strand.

"It's dangerous. There's enough stuff with drugs and alcohol; we don't need guns too."

David Walker Celebration This Weekend

BY SUSAN WEITZ
Staff Writer

The weekend of Sept. 25-27 brings the 5th annual "David Walker Weekend Festival" to Wilmington.

An avid abolitionist, David Walker was born Sept. 28, 1785 to a free mother and a slave father. In the mid-1820's, while living in Boston, he became involved in the abolitionist movement. In September of 1829 Walker composed a pamphlet commonly referred to as a Walker's Appeal, indicting slavery and calling to the slaves to overthrow the system.

Friday night, Sept. 25, the festival kicks off with a performance in Kenan Auditorium by the band "SunSteel."

Speakers, Artists, and performers will provide the entertainment on Saturday from noon til 8 p.m. at the Robert Strange Park (located at the corner of 9th and Ann Street.) There will be something for everyone, from contemporary dance to jazz and Reggae, games, rides, and a variety of reginal favorites.

Sunsteel will perform at Kenan Auditorium Friday night as part of the David Walker Weekend Festival.

On Sunday, "SunSteel" wraps up the festival by hosting an Orchestra Workshop at the Martin Luther King Center.

This festival is designed to celebrate Walker's birthday by promoting individual, cultural and community development through art, music, speech, dance, and drama.

Pleasant Doesn't Always Mean Right

Isn't it great to be free! Now you're able to do whatever you want, when you want to do it and not have to be in at certain time. Isn't it great that there isn't anyone telling you what you have to do. Finally, you're on your own, as you have been wanting for so long.

As true as that is, I am mindful that there is a downside to the freedom that we enjoy. If parents are no longer calling the shots, then who is? "Well it's me, of course." Of course it's you, but which part of you is calling the shots.

Scenario: You're in your room with three hours planned to study for the exam tomorrow morning in biology. There's a knock at your door and two of your friends walk in to invite you to go with them to the Zoo. You're free to do whatever you want to do, so what do you do? My point is that I think some are already discovering that freedom has its own burdens and challenges.

Once we're in charge of our own life, then we get to decide which values we are going to allow to determine our behavior.

Thomas Merton makes the following assertion with which I agree very much: "It should be accepted as a most elementary, human and moral truth that no person can live a fully sane and decent life unless he is able to say 'No' to his natural bodily appetites. No man who simply eats and drinks whenever he feels like eating and drinking, who smokes whenever he feels the urge to light a cigarette, who gratifies his curiosity in sensuality whenever there is stimulation, can consider himself a free person. He has renounced his spiritual freedom and become a servant of bodily impulse."

Therefore his mind and his will are not fully his own. They are under the power of his appetites."

In the freedom of our independence, there seems to be a tendency to justify any behavior or action we choose as long as we are pleased with it. This concerns me because such a self-centered ethic and decision making process is self-defeating and even self-destructive in the long run.

There are some "shoulds" that we need to be discovering and "shoulds" imposed on us by outside authorities, but "shoulds" that we appropriate on our own on the basis of some serious reflection about what is good, what is right, what will allow me to function effectively in my life and in my society, what will allow me to be a contributing member of society to which I am a part, what will allow me to stand easily in the presence of my higher power.

Appropriating some clear, ethical values for yourselves does not turn out to be repressive, but liberating. Animals are controlled by their appetites. Humans are gifted with the ability to identify a set of values that needs to exist for the well being of ourselves and the society of which our individual needs are lived out.

The greatest satisfaction comes not from simply following the dictates of our appetites, but from capturing a vision of how life is meant to be lived and working towards matching our behavior with our values and dreams.

Bob Haywood is the Protestant Campus Minister. His office is located at St. Matthew's Lutheran Church, College Rd.

We Thank You Kindly

Just a few comments about the "Letters to the Editor" entries. You will see that we printed every letter we received, and did not edit, except for clarity.

However, if you read the "fine print" in the box in the upper left-hand corner, we reserve the right to edit letters for space or clarity. We also reserve the right to not publish a letter we receive.

If the letter is appropriate, does not contain numerous misspellings, and is to the point, chances are good it will be printed.

The editorial page is available to reader comments. That is why there were blank spaces or "filler" on a lot of the page in previous issues. No one was writing in. The editor's job is not to present both sides of an issue himself on the editorial page. But, to do his job properly, he must make space available to those with a differing opinion. We begged for letters. It took five issues to receive one that differed in opinion from the editor's.

Some editorials and columns have sparked "controversy" in readers. Good! It is the discussion of ideas, feelings, and opinions that educate us. But by not exposing ourselves to the thoughts of others we live in a shell and do not grow.

Some readers are confusing opinion with news. The articles and features on all other pages are presented in an unbiased manner. Our role is to report the news as it happens, not to create it. Some readers have commented that we should report the facts when writing an editorial. To have a differing opinion, or to present a comparison for effect, is the right of a writer. It is also the right of the reader to disagree.

When dealing with issues, there are always two sides. Hence, there is disagreement. The editorial page is a forum for discussion of those differing opinions.

successful methods, Clinton is trying to copy their failed ideas. When Bill says "we're underinvested," he means underfunded. I don't agree.

On behalf of the student body, I would like to request our paper stop slanting the facts to fit your liberal agenda. Report the facts!

Paul Langfield

Overcomers' Denied

This letter will address a recent situation involving an attempt by Overcomers' Campus Ministry to put a column in The Seahawk. An attempt might be too weak of a word to describe the way we went about trying to provide your readers with a little information.

We simply wrote an introductory letter, which explained the vision and purpose of the column. Steve Stevens wrote the column article, but I was sent to turn it in. The letter was not published. I went to the editor of The Seahawk to get an explanation as to why he did not allow the letter to be put in the paper; we met the qualifications required to have the letter published. For instance, we met the editors' deadline and turned in an acceptable hand-written copy. Surprisingly enough, the letter was not put in the next edition of the paper.

The editor's explanation was less than clear, to say the least. One of the big "problems" that he had was with our opening remarks. We wrote the phrase, "Greetings in the name of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

The editor stated that we could not write about Jesus as our Lord and Savior; he told me that we could only speak of him as Jesus. He said that he has some Moslem friends who might be offended by this phrase. The editor further stated that The Seahawk is a government-run and government-supported agency, and thus, in no way could we use that phrase. Another rule that he said we would "have to" abide by was that we would have to make reference to the Bible for our support.

The scripture speaks of Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord. There's our defenses, if that is what you want to call it. We're not using anything BUT Scripture to back up what we write.

Matthew 7:21 and 22, Jesus calls himself Lord. In Acts 2:36, we read "God hath made...both Lord and Christ." Isaiah 9:6 and testify "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne David, upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with justice from henceforth even for ever."

Regarding offending people—when did The Seahawk ever hold something back because it might offend someone? Do you think that nothing else in this newspaper might offend someone? Further, as far as The Seahawk being a government agency, keep in mind that this government is based on a Constitution, and that Constitution gives its people freedom of speech. I suppose that The Seahawk has greater power than does the federal government, in that it has the power to deem what its contribution can and can not say.

The religious freedom granted to us by our Founding Fathers was given because the Church of England was persecuting the Protestants for their beliefs. So, the Pilgrims set sail for the New World, so that, in part, they could worship Jesus Christ in the traditions of the Protestants, as Savior and Lord. You (The Seahawk) have denied your readers the right to speak their minds because a few friends might be offended. You have violated that freedoms given us by our Constitution. No opinions here. Just the facts, ma'am.

Steve Worrell

Editor's Note: The Founding Fathers also gave us freedom of the press. The Seahawk is not a forum for religious views. The initial column was an introduction to the Overcomers' Campus Ministry and its views and goals. It was not appropriate for the editorial page. The information in the column was placed in the "At A Glance" section.

Make Sure You Go and Vote!

Oh boy, Al Gore is coming to town! Maybe I can get him to personally autograph his best selling book Why I Am a Republican. His Story and Refrigeration will force our culturally deprived children to live in a world without trees.

Organized labor leaders loved the book so much they bought literally hundreds of thousands of copies that are now just lying around...waiting to be read by intellectually starved union members.

Well shucks, now that we're finding that Global Warming really isn't gonna kill us all before October, maybe we'll hear ole Al change his tune (kind of like he did on abortion a few years back). We might even catch a glimpse of Al's wife-Tipper (Goebbels) Gore. Man, if I could just get her to slap that P.M.R.C. seal of approval on my old Twisted Sister record I'd be pleased as punch.

Seriously folks—if you're gonna vote Clinton/Gore because for some reason you can't bring yourself to vote for Bush, think it over one more time. Listen to the candidates speak—read what they have written. Don't buy into the media's biased and inaccurate portrayals of the main players—go beyond the sound bites and look for substance.

If you decide you can't vote for Clinton or Bush, cast a protest vote for the Libertarian Party or Perot—granted, they won't win—but at least you can voice your frustration with the big parties. Vote—and if you think your choices suck, then write in Donald Duck—BUT VOTE.

Northern Impressions

What can I say? I was inspired by the first letter written to The Seahawk. That and I was probably really inspired on caffeine this fine evening.

I do have some minor complaints about this school. Aside from also having a very high out-of-state tuition, the prices of some of the food when you don't eat at the Wagoner Cafeteria are a little steep. We're college students for crying out loud! I don't know about you, but $2.59 for a 12 ounce jar of peanut butter is a little absurd! I know it's probably cheaper to drive down the street to Wilson's but when you lack a car, it's not always easy to bum a ride. Don't get me wrong, I understand it's a convenience store and you pay a little more for the convenience, but what can I say I'm not swimming in allowance money!

The other complaint is the huge mother black spiders in this place. When they blow away the domestic beige ones that I'm used to!

My roommate and I could not believe their size when we saw them for the first time. Does the Biology Club secretly breed them and then set them free into the dorms shortly before school starts? I know some people in my dorm feed it daily like a pet in return for a roach-free room. Oh well, you might say—such is life.

Aside from that, this place is OK. Of course there is the occasional problem of nosy R.A.'s and campus cops stopping in when they weren't invited sometimes, but what can you do except keep it quieter next time.

On another note, I'm from the north and I think it's rather strange that people are so friendly down here to total strangers. I find it really nice. It's just unusual because in the north, when passing somebody on the street, people would sooner look at a smashed bug on the ground than make eye-contact with you and say "Hi." The only people down here who are as "friendly" as the ones in the north would have to be the postal workers. Sorry, but they must have taken a course on "How to piss-off the customer" when they received a job in working States.

By the way, while I'm writing this if anybody had any information as to the reason why the campus phone service is screwed up, please write and let me know. By screwed up I mean that people calling you off-campus cannot get through, because it was supposedly busy all night. Then when they finally get a hold of you they say something about you line being busy all evening when you know for a fact that your long-forgotten-her-boyfriend-whose-four-hours-away-roommate was not on the phone with him at all this night for once. So, if you have a clue, fill me in. Thank you (Look at that southern politeness).

Maybe I'll have another caffeine high and write again sometime gracing you with my pathetic writing. One last thing, this letter was not written to offend anyone. It was written out of inspiration and a "Why not?" attitude. Later...

"Cute" Headline Not Appropriate

Let me begin by saying that I appreciate the coverage The Seahawk has given to Student Government in recent issues. Your attention has allowed the students of UNCW to be informed on how their student money is being spent. However, I was very concerned about the title of the article covering the recent SGA elections. It was entitled "Cute Factor Wins Southside Presidency."

In my opinion, this was very negative towards the newly elected Freshman Class President, and the Student Government as a whole. I hope that in the future The Seahawk staff will use better judgement in deciding headlines.

SGA President

Your Input Is Needed !!

I don't know how many of us know this, but Family Weekend is being held on October 3 & 4. Family Weekend, the new idea for Parent's Weekend, is held every year to give students and parents the opportunity to become better acquainted with good of UNCW.

As usual, Family Weekend will be held during Riverfest. Also being held on Oct. 3 is the annual meeting of the Parent's Advisory Council (PAC). You're probably saying "So, what's the point?", right? The point is that both of my parents are on the Council but due to their jobs are unable to attend this meeting; so, if all goes well, I will be attending in their place as a representative of the student body.

This is where you (yes, you—the one reading this letter) come in. I need your help. I'm a senior and have lived on campus since my freshman year. Over the past 4 years it has become increasingly harder for me to deal with the bureaucratic system (BS) of this "growing" university. I know other students feel the same way.

What I need from you is your input. Please take 1-20 mins. of your time and write down the top 10 things, about this school, you most want changed and the

Bias "Reporting"

I would like to address in this letter the liberal democratic bias appearing in every issue of The Seahawk so far this year. In printing one opinion the paper alienates a large group of politically conservative students, and an even larger group of students who are morally conservative, (by far the majority at this university).

The worst example of this bias would have to be the articles written by Jim Clark. Several issues ago Mr. Clark made the most errant oversimplification in the history of media. (I use the term extremely loosely when referring to this liberal democratic rag). In comparing the 50 year WORLDWIDE struggle against communism with a captured snake waiting to eat his dinner, Mr. Clark demonstrated better than I ever could how ignorance-steeped his opinions are. The populations of the free world sacrificed trillions of dollars and millions of lives. (I served in the Marines, and some of these lives were my friends).

The current issue states that the Republican platform mirrors the stance of the Nazi party, this is so offensive and inaccurate I would expect a retraction if this paper was not any more than a mouth piece for the Clinton/Gore liberals. Rev. Pat Robertson no more represents the main stream conservative voter than the wacko far-left freak Jerry Brown represents the main stream Democratic views.

The president will indeed veto the so-called "Family Leave Bill" as well he should. It is cumbersome, unneeded laws like this that would kill small businesses if Stick Willy were to be elected, (don't worry, he won't). A question to Mr. Clark, if the economy is so bad, why does everyone want a three-month leave period without pay?

Socialism, which is what Tax-and-Spend Bill proposes, has proven it doesn't work in country after country. While the rest of the world tries to mirror our

Denise Sutton
Are You Going To Buy That??

We can now add one more feminine hygiene product to the already ridiculously long list. You may have already seen the commercial. A woman with a soft voice whispers the purpose of Replens: a new product which promises to replace vaginal moisture.

The frightening fact about this new product is that there is a consumer group that actually needs Replens. This group is made up of "media victims," that is, women who bought the message that their bodies are not acceptable in their natural state. The "media victims" buy douches even though they aren't prescribed by physicians. They buy special powders and toilettes (so she carry her fears in her purse) to prevent moisture and mask unpleasant odors.

Now it seems, after abusing your body with a plethora of chemicals and altering its natural state, the manufacturers of feminine hygiene products have created a product that combats the negative effects of their other products.

Something's rotten in Denmark and a douche isn't going to clear the air.

Could it be that the socio-sexual hierarchy is associated with the mass media? Has anyone noticed the media selling and artificial idea of beauty, an objectification of women with a capitalistic motive? Advertising is very clever in manipulation. Ads aimed at women work through lowering women's self-esteem. After all, if advertising flatters the self-esteem it wouldn't be effective. By encouraging women to feel uncomfortable with the natural state of their bodies, the manufacturers make billions of dollars. Are we going to buy this advertising hypebole?

However, the only way these companies can continue to profit from these insulting and offensive products is if women continue to buy the message.

Let's realize the negative implications of these feminine hygiene products and boycott them. We must believe that it is not the woman's body that's offensive but rather the feminine hygiene product, and most insidious, the accusation behind these products that tells the woman her body is unclean and not unacceptable its natural state. Are you going to buy that?

reasons why. I will be tallying responses so that I can present them to the Council.

When compiling this list, remember that some things cannot be changed, e.g. tuition, speed limit. Please stick to realistic issues; for example: improving food service, or increasing the weight room hours. I want everyone's input, not just students who live on campus or seniors.

If you choose to do this, and I hope you do, please send your responses to: Karen Longo, PO Box 25499 by Sept. 30.

Thank you for your support.

Family Values"

I was encouraged to write this letter for two reasons. One was that moving letter written by someone who was upset that no one was taking advantage of voicing their opinions in the editorial page of The Seahawk. Second, your one-sided editorial on the election campaign of this year.

I do agree with the person writing in saying that everyone should voice their opinion on topics through the newspaper, but the bottom line is that the editor of the paper has the ability to manipulate any text as he pleases. So why bother? If we had an editor who presented evidence on both sides of the issue, then more people would feel that the editor does act in a fair way.

An example of how irresponsible the editor is, look at his last editorial entitled "Why are Family Values Such a Hot Topic Now?" Why not? Is it wrong for people to have two parents? Our society has forgotten what it is like to be rational about anything. President Bush and Vice President Quayle are not saying there is something wrong with single mothers, but that it is responsibility of both parents when their children are at issue. Mother's provide a special touch to their children just as father's do.

It is so easy to point the blame for the ills of our country at one person when we fail to see what the real problem is and everybody knows that hated word, CONGRESS. Unless we can get Congress reformed, then no matter who we elect, Mr. Clinton or President Bush, we will all be in that same boat as we were when this election started out.

In closing I would just like to say that everyone voting in this election should not base all their knowledge on the editorial page of newspapers. They should base their opinion on research done on their own. I know where I put my trust and it is not in the hands of The Seahawk. And one last thing Mr. Editor, I guess in all your years of writing high class editorials, you probably never misspelled a word, right?

Trust Me, I Have Nothing To Say

It's officially gone. Last summer ended as of 12:00 a.m. Monday. It was the same summer my cousin pulled a dead guy out of a car. It was the same summer my friend told me the found Dan Quayle mildly attractive. It was the same summer I knew I had to get out of the country. And while being out of the country I learned that I had nothing to say.

Since being back I've had trouble understanding my southern friends. One of them said traveling had made me a snob. She was joking of course, at least I think she was, it was hard to tell because I could only make out every other word or so. I had a hard time responding to her accusation, because ... I had nothing to say.

My mood has changed. I'm back to wearing black and fading into the woodwork. I'm content just looking up words that other writers use, like pedestrian, instead of using them myself. (Now, God knows when I'd actually have use for that particular word, but as a writer I should at the very least be thinking of an instance.)

The persistence of one good friend filled me into addressing my own self-persecuted reign of "slackeritis." This will be particularly distressing for him because I've NEVER known him to have nothing to say ... EVER. And given the opportunity I'm sure he'd have something to say on my behalf, because I, at this time, have nothing to say.

Maybe it was three months of enduring British television, maybe it was three months of Britain. Instead, I've developed an unusual desire to watch documentaries and request butter and cucumbers on my sandwiches. I've also adopted a rather problematic desire to be anywhere but here. But I'm not quite sure if I were anywhere else that I would have anything to say.

I have nothing to say, and I've just written a whole article about it. How is that possible? My sense of humor, no doubt. Yeah ... right.

The tour took them across the country to the gilded halls of the West coast. When talking to Scott R. about the crowd reception, he replied enthusiastically, mentioning that theatricality there was a definite lack of martians. For reasons beyond our control we were unable to continue the conversation, and I have been plagued by the thought of martians ever since.

You walk the streets of Wilmington with the ghosts of your collective past, walking side by side with the red and blue fresh-fish of a brass badge that speaks to you in a voice you fail to comprehend, and what have you? A side of cobblestone streets narrowed with saltwater shrinkage and the hard thoughts of cotton traders looks you in the face.

And what does the independent man of the streets with his brown bag 40 think of the stars tonight?

And what does the male prostitute with red hot pants think of come midnight under the streetlight?

And what of the woman.

It all seems so normal. So very American in its transformation from sleepy port city of the old south, to the more eclectic urbanized sprawl of the revamped south. The old fervor of the early-to-mid 1800's Wilmington—capital of NC commerce—is returning, and yet something different, something strange lurks within the city gates now.

Tom Waits Still Likes It Good, Greasy and Messy

 BY TOM MOON
 Knight-Ridder Newspapers

The characters singer/songwriter Tom Waits likes best are the ones that come at you with spitfire trailing from their lips, a wild gaze in their eyes, a nearly empty bottle in hand, and ideas streaming forth a mile a minute whether you wish to hear them or not. They are often full of drink, these savants, but nonetheless blessed with romantic hearts and a certain hard-luck wisdom. They know how a tragedy is supposed to taste.

As they piece together bits of information like homeless scavengers picking through rubbish bins to a fashion a meal, these characters are divining the clues of a society's decline, and its effects on the individual. They gossip about a rural murder, and philosophize about the environment, and wistfully speak of a proper church redemption, and they are never just victims or lunatics; they're the messengers of a messy underside, the stories that don't turn up on the news.

Waits has made a career turning these folks, hardly show-business material, into a perverse kind of urban folklore. On his excellent new album Bone Machine (Island Records), which arrived in stores two weeks ago, Waits brings some of the characters that blossomed on the 1983's Swordfishtrombones and 1985's Rain Dogs back for a reprise. He's altered—but not upgraded—the surroundings, and given some of them more respect, left their souls alone. Consider it maturity.

Always a sucker for a clattering percussion section, Waits abandons the symphonic mallet instruments and tuned percussion that perforated such masterworks as Rain Dogs, in favor of more homemade "found" percussion. These instruments (one, a crucifix-like contraption, Waits calls a "conundrum") do more than add splattery color behind the vocals; at times, the tape is saturated with a dissonant, vaguely Eastern drum that sounds as though it were generated by a dozen drummers working feverishly.

It's a phantasmagoric sound, immediate and arresting and closer to industrial metal than the singer-songwriter tradition. If he has done nothing else here, Waits has given birth to a whole slew of arty percussion textures that can't be easily named. But he's done much more: On Rain Dogs, Frank's Wild Years and others, Waits used plain, obvious song-forms (many of them blues, or adaptations of the musical theater forms favored by German-American composer Kurt Weill). This time, he's messing with structure in ways that make every verse an adventure: tossing in extra bars and subtracting beats, allowing the din of percussion to blur even the basic outline of the forms. Even an ordinary blues like the parade-shuffle "Jesus Gonna Be Here" is filled with unpredictable wrinkles.

This subterfuge—overt in the jagged extra beats of "All Stripped Down," more subtle elsewhere—makes for riveting listening. Though still writing street corner opera, Waits has abandoned the ornate trappings of Weill-worship, and sharpened the blues sensibility of his best work. He has traded most of the rigidity of the concert hall for the opportunity to make music more instinctually, from the scraps left by the side of the road. Apart from his voice, which is gloriously throaty and froggy, there's less than ever before to focus on; rather than supplying a complete harmonic picture, he just offers the backbone—sparse piano chords, bitter rhythm guitar, steady and serene upright bass.

These musical settings suit the themes as well as the typically mystically wordplay. Death is a looming presence, whether confronted head-on ("Dirt In The Ground") or postponed ("The Ocean Doesn't Want Me Today"). Waits' character pine for the promised land in the most individual ways—the scammer in "Jesus Gonna Be Here," for example, is keeping his eyes open for the arrival of his savior: "I'm gonna watch the horizon for a brand new Ford." He sings excitedly, "I can hear him rolling on down the lane, I said Hollywood be thy name, Jesus gonna be here, gonna be here soon."

For the first time in his 25-year career, Waits' mythology is cut with a shot of topicality: His chorus of spoons conjures the correct processional tempo for the environmental postmortem "Earth Died Screaming," and a well-timed account of the work of politicians, "In the Coliseum," plays like an elaborately choreographed game of back stabbing.

And just when it seems Waits is getting too brainy, he'll offer a gem of a Delta blues vocal performance like "Jesus Gonna Be Here," or a quintessential rock 'n' roll anthem like "I Don't Wanna Grow Up." Two offhanded masterpieces among many here. You can almost smell the grease on these tracks, and it's a luscious, sweet aroma: At a time when most rock artists fuss prissily over the tiny details, Tom Waits, thankfully, still likes his records messy.

at their chopped steak special across from you during the late night hours of a Jimbo's visit?

Whom are these people whom seem so satisfied with life? Surely not your typical spiffy lovin' apathetic student—nav, we all remember that person from high school. And more than likely their minds have not been made heavy with a warped interpretation of Nietzsche.

Martians. Yep, you guessed it. Some morbidly perverse group of martians, who have obviously watched far too much American television, have figured out how to blend in with our society by imitating the average stop light obeying, non-boroscope reading, shiny shoe Wilmingtonian.

Sounds crazy, huh?

Think about it though. The transformed alien, not being used to his new body (where the body comes from, well, that's beyond the scope of this article) is very much like a child: unsure, insecure in his new environment, curious (yet not wanting to give themselves away); they figure the best way to learn is to sit back passively and take it all in.

In the martian debriefing room, a large sign reads, "Since we have yet to beat them, join the crowd for now." Hence, Wilmington is checked with an even larger population of mutable cattle mooing and bleating like so many contented sleep-walkers calling out in their sleep.

How can we avoid these pesky zombie-like martians who only seem to clog up the works with their inclination to join a crowd? That's difficult since the humanized martians like best what you either still like, or (which isn't so bad) like what you once did, or (which isn't bad at all) like what you never considered liking. Your best bet would be to isolate yourself on the moon, disassociate yourself from the ever present attack of "the hip", take a jaunt of the slippery rails of face-dom. But beware, bandwagonese martians don't stop short of music, movies, magazines and books, they live for fashion, transportation, political ideologies, the icing on the cake and the butter on the bread.

Between the calm waters of Wrightsville Beach and the congested thoroughfares of downtown, Wilmington draws a one-eyed Jack against the martians pair of suicidal kings. The politically correct run amuck through the streets while the politically incorrect shut themselves in isolated abodes. Just be sure to give the person next to you a good once over as they pass you the ketchup instead of the A-1 for your chopped steak special.

Campus Rocks The Vote

BY CAROLE MEHLE
Staff Writer

The national voter awareness campaign, "Rock the Vote," came to University Center Tuesday afternoon in the form of a concert and voter registration drive.

The concert was sponsored by Fox 9 in conjunction with their "Rock the Vote" special that aired Wednesday night. Also at the concert was a voter registration drive. "There were more than 150 people that were at that table and at least 65 were registered to vote," said Jules Richie, business and traffic manager for Fox 9.

Also at the event were school board candidate, Allene Keith, Brian Keith of WSFM Surf 107 FM, and various members of the media.

Richie said she hopes the event "will increase voter awareness" and show that "it's not hard to vote and make a difference."

Neither Richie nor Joe Mitchell, student body president who worked on the event for SGA, were sure of the exact number of students that attended the event, but both agreed with Association for Campus Entertainment Concert Committee chair Brant VanHoy's estimation of attendance—"a lot of people."

VanHoy worked with Fox and SGA to get the Charlotte band, Thurns and Taxis to play the concert.

Both VanHoy and Richie said that Thurns and Taxis had done Rock the Vote concerts before.

The main help that each organization gave to the event was financial support and publicity. The Greek organizations that were involved mainly helped out with the promotion. Mitchell added that both of the organizations gave $25 each for gas money for the band, who played the event free of charge. SGA and Fox gave $50.

SGA also paid for the sound guy.

Mitchell said SGA's main role in the event was publicity, setting the agenda for the event, and the "goings-on." Mitchell added that he "appreciated Fox, SAE and Phi Mu."

Richie labelled the event, "a good success. I'm very pleased with the results."

Mitchell agrees. "The event went well. I'm happy that people got registered and that it didn't rain."

"The reason we had the concert was to give the students something to do and to attract them to register to vote."

VanHoy summed up the concert in one word: "awesome."

Both Richie and Mitchell expressed interest in continuing the national "Rock the Vote" drives in the future. Mitchell said he is interested in SGA continuing the campaign during major election years.

mostly Republican campus. Like the College Democrats, the College Republicans do volunteer work for local and state candidates.

They put up signs and man phones. They work with students on other campuses for their cause.

When he was asked about the state of the nation after Pres. Bush's 4 years in office, Mr. Rose said, "The economy isn't in the best shape, but Bush's economic proposals offer a more promising future than Clinton's do. Also, we need a strong foreign policy. Everyone knows Bush is strong."

Mr. Rose also said he didn't put much faith in the polls that place Clinton ahead of Bush at this point in the race. "The democrats have been ahead in the past and the Republicans have won by landslides."

The College Republicans meet on Thursday evenings at 7:30 pm.

Fox 9 and SGA sponsored a "Rock the Vote" event on Tues. Sept. 22 on the University Center Lawn. Voter registration was available. Local band, Thurn and Taxis played during the event. Fox 9 also featured a "Rock the Vote" special on Wed. Sept. 23 at 9 pm on Channel 9.

Some voters want 'none of the above'

"Rock the Vote" was started by MTV as a way to make young people aware of the issues that face them and the need to vote.

Students on campus had various opinions about the election and the candidates. Sophomore, Charley Williams, said that he wasn't registered to vote yet. "Bush has been in office four years and hasn't done anything. Clinton scares me. He's just trying to please people. If I were registered I would vote for Bush."

Charlene Stephens, a senior accounting major, is a registered Republican who is voting for Clinton. "I don't think Bush has done enough. You can't see any real effect. I don't think he knows what real life is. I think Clinton's been out there. He knows more about the people."

Francie Godwin is a registered Democrat who might vote for Clinton. "I don't trust any of them. If there was a 'none of the above' category, it would get more votes than the rest. I feel bad for Quayle. I think the media has made him look like an idiot."

Shawn Prevatte, a sophomore, is unaffiliated. "I'll probably vote for Clinton. The Libertarians are also on the ballot, but I don't know much about them."

Libertarians Andre Marrow and Nancy Lord are running for President and Vice-Presidency in the November elections. The Libertarian party has been in existence since the early '70's. For more information about them, call 1-800-292-3766.

Look for more election activities coming up today at 7:30 pm. The League of Women Voters is holding a registration and question and answer session at the YWCA on S. College Rd. For more information, contact Sue Cause at 452-9331.

Former Yugoslavia Talk, Part II

BY BRAD SEKULICH
Staff Writer

On Wednesday, September 30th at 7:30 pm the Chancellor's office and the History department will present the second half of "The Breakup of Former Yugoslavia: Why Now and What Next?" Like that first half of the program, presented on September 23rd, the program will present speakers who will look at the current crisis in the former Yugoslavia republics from varying perspectives.

The evening's first speaker will be Dr. Medzib Sacirbey, the Bosnian president's personal representative to the United States. Dr. Sacirbey, who earned his medical degree from Zagreb University, taught medicine at Sarajevo University. In 1946 he was sentenced to four years hard labor for his anti-communist activities in Yugoslavia. He came to the United States in 1967, and did not return to Bosnia until the elections of 1990.

Dr. Sacirbey's presence will be the results of the efforts of Dr. Susan MacCaffray, professor of history here at UNCW. Interestingly, Dr. MacCaffray had seen Dr. Sacirbey on CNN, and when she decided to put together this symposium, she thought he would be an excellent speaker, if it were possible to find him and bring him here. Well, after several phone calls she was, obviously, able to get him to come speak.

The second speaker that night will be Dr. Pendleton Banks from the anthropology department at Wake Forest University. He earned his doctorate at Harvard University and has held Fulbright appointments in Yugoslavia and Romania, as well as, Burma. He has traveled extensively through the Balkan region and was last in Croatia this past summer.

This program should prove to be very interesting to anyone with an interest in what is happening in this volatile part of the world. Both of these speakers will be able to give presentation that are not only backed by extensive study of the situation, but also by recent visits to the area.

Study Abroad Now

BY JULIE PODLASEK
Staff Writer

Have you ever wanted to travel to other parts of the world, be a part of another culture, and meet new people?

If so, come today to hear speaker, Dr. William L. Gaines, lecture about the many advantages of studying abroad. It will take place at 7:30 p.m. in Bryan auditorium, Morton Hall.

The topic will be, "Thoughts on American Study Abroad: Looking Ahead to 2000."

Dr. Gaines, president of The Institute of European Studies and The Institute of Asian Studies, has been heavily involved with international education for decades.

Located in Chicago, Illinois, the institute, conducts selected junior-year academic programs in 13 centers in Europe and seven centers in Asia.

The European centers include cities such as: Berlin, Kiev, London, Madrid, Moscow, Dijon, Milan, Paris, and Vienna.

The centers in Asia include Bangkok, Thailand, Beijing, Singapore, Taipei, and Tokyo.

Aside from the chief benefits and excitement of the program, Dr. Gaines will be discussing what students can expect in way of opportunities from an international education program.

This program is sponsored jointly by the department of History, the Office of International Affairs, and the College of Arts and Sciences. It is free and open to the public.

A HURRICANE

Addresses are numbered consecutively for each storm. Present location and intensity is described and expected movement is given. Tropical cyclone advisories are issued at six-hour intervals (midnight, 6 a.m., noon, and 6 p.m. Eastern Daylight Time). Each message gives the name, center (eye) position, intensity, and forecast movement of the tropical cyclone.

Hurricane center positions are given by latitude (for example, 13.5 degrees North) and longitude (for example, 88.0 degrees West). When the storm moves within range of radar, center positions may also be given as latitude miles and compass direction from a specified point.

*Tropical cyclones are not given names until they reach the storm stage—that is, rotary circulation and constant winds over 30 miles per hour (50 knots).

When you receive a tropical cyclone advisory, note the advisory number, center position, intensity and forecast direction of movement. Then mark the center position on the tracking chart. Because hurricanes change direction very quickly, you should listen more carefully to where the storm will go than where it has been.

See the color block at the bottom of the chart for an example of how to plot a storm from a position given in latitude and longitude.

the same thing the following semester because no one has reported the incident to the Dean of Students."

Dr. Mintzes said, "The whole system has less meaning if we ignore the problems that arise," he said. "A college degree is meaningless only insofar as faculty and students cooperate to make it meaningful."

"Honest students and the faculty should work together to try to minimize cheating," Dr. Sizemore said, because, "it's a double-edged sword. It hurts the students that are honest. The tests are often graded on a curve and when ten students have an exam they're going to blow the curve."

"Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs, Dr. William Bryan said, 'The only way you have adherence to the honor code is to have students believe in it.'"

"He recalled his college years. If you thought someone was cheating you would, 'shuffle your feet. That way people knew that the cheating wasn't going unnoticed.'"

"When we enter college we enter a contract with the rules and regulations of the college," Paul Cairney said.

"We must adhere to that contract."

He also said that students do not push themselves to learn all that is available in college.

Allison Mullaney put it very clearly, "College education is the one thing in today's society that people will pay for and expect nothing in return."

Admissions, and Mr. Jim Braye, Director of Career Planning and Placement, travel to different area schools, church groups, and recreation centers to tell potential college students what is required of them to get into school.

They emphasize not taking the easy courses in high school. "The better prepared, the better the SAT scores," Mr. Parker said. Their presentation goes beyond what the admissions office offers.

the area of race relations Mr. Parker would like a minority student lounge and a program in African-American studies.

Mr. Parker says, "It would be a big step by this campus. More can be done. We're talking."

African-American students now socialize in the upstairs lounge of the University Union and the artwork displayed in the office area was donated more than ten years ago by UNCW alumnus and area artist Harry Davis.

One of the current fashion trends on campus is to wear clothing featuring an "X" in tribute to Martin Luther King. "It establishes an identity for the individual," Mr. Parker said.

He added that he hoped the students who wear the "X" do some reading about the man and his ideals.

Some of the other activities sponsored by the Office of Minority Affairs include a tutorial assistance program, counseling, a bi-monthly newsletter, an awards program, Black History Month, and the King Program.

Mr. Parker says that though the office does a lot of presentations, brings celebrities on campus, and addresses the needs of students, its most important function is being here. He said whatever the minority student needs, "we fill that void."

Club Sports

Due to the growing popularity of Volleyball, UNCW is now offering a Men's Volleyball Club. Through the support and participation of some of the area's premiere beach players, the competition level should be one of the area's highest. Thanks to the voluntary work of UNCW Athletic staff members such as Coach Kathy MacDaniel and Assistant Coach Julie Shouse, the team regards itself as one of the best staffed in the region. According to President Michael Vick, "the biggest problem the team faces is going to be the transition from two man outdoor to six man indoor. We have a great deal of talent, the question is whether we can break through our individual habits and work as a team." The team is setting their goals towards becoming competitive members of the EIUAA (Eastern Intercollegiate Volleyball Association) and will play teams from schools including Duke, N.C. State and UNC-Chapel Hill. Look for upcoming matches!! Student support is greatly needed!!

Too Gutter

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

The following article may contain some ideas that are not suitable for all audiences. Some paragraphs are meant for mature audiences only. The writers discretion is avoided at all cost.

This week "The Gutter" deals with the one thing that I have found to be true and useful from the beginning of time.

If you can, think back to your childhood years when you played little league. Whatever the game was, football, baseball or basketball, there was a time we all made errors, fumbled the ball, or watched the ball sail over the backboard making our team lose.

Just knowing that it was me that blew the game was bad enough.

It was my parents who came to my rescue. In their words and actions, they would lift up a fragile ego and start me on the path again.

Their words and support, in time, became the most loving and kind things to say to a kid. With their child on a team approaching 0-7, and falling apart at the seams, they had great joy watching me and motivating me to play harder.

This type of tender loving kindness is what we as students have to exert on this campus. The talent is there, but the support is not. We are failing in our supportive role.

We need to support the programs more, cheer them on, be there even when they fail, adding praise regardless of their record.

Our job is also to praise improvement, and encourage development. The teams are doing their job. Are we doing ours?

having a few problems. But they are a young team playing a very difficult schedule. They also have key injuries to players that are vital to their offensive attack.

The teams have a match Saturday at ECU at 1:00. Go and watch our team play. Cheer, yell, and scream to let the team know that you are there to support them.

The girls volleyball team, even though they are last in their conference, led the conference in blocks, kills, assist and digs. These ladies are definitely fun to watch.

Keep looking in the paper to find out when a team is playing; get a batch of your loudest friends and go to the game.

Cross Country Team Sweep Classic

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

UNCW's cross country has completed two events to prepare themselves for the challenge of the upcoming season.

"Overall it was a pretty solid effort from our team. We are progressing well toward our goal of getting better each practice, week and meet. Right now we are on track," said Coach Sprecher.

In describing the week's practice for the team, Sprecher gives an estimate that the team practices about twenty hours a week. Under Sprecher's current system, twenty hours equals around sixty miles a week.

Sprecher said, "Some schools log in about 100 miles a week, we have quality over quantity as our practice method."

According to Sprecher, top athletes will work individually, well beyond the efforts of team practice time to in top shape.

This work is paying off. In both 8 kilometer races Sam Bobbitt and Tim Cox finished first and second respectively. Bobbitt with a time of 26:54 and Cox, 26:55, led the way for the Seahawk men at the Cape Fear Classic.

The women's team swept the Cape Fear Classic. Amy Jackson finished first with a time of 19:05. She was followed by her teammates Heather Fenton 19:30 and Jill Peebles 19:40.

At the Seahawk Invitational the mens team led by Bobbitt and Cox won their races helping the men team win there meet.

Bobbitt had a time of 25:51 when he crossed the line to take first place for the men. He was followed by his teammate Cox, 26:37, which was second place.

For the women the first Seahawk to cross the finish line was Amy Jackson. Her time was 18:50 which was good enough for fourth place. She was followed by her teammate Heather Fenton, who finished with a time of 19:12.

Both races were held here at UNCW. Sprecher had the team to focus on different things in both paces.

"The one (race) was to see how our team looked individually (Seahawk Invitational) and in the last race, the Cape Fear Classic, was to see how the team worked as a group," Sprecher said.

The teams are preparing to go to the UNCC Invitational, Saturday September 26.

Preparing for the Charlotte Invitational, the cross country team logs some daily practice time.

UNCW Sports

The soccer team lost two games to nationally ranked teams. Last weekend, the men's soccer team faced James Madison and George Mason. Losing to these Colonial Athletic Association power houses, dropped the Seahawks to 0-4 for the season.

On Friday the injury-plagued Seahawks played James Madison and lost 4-0 to JMU.

On Sunday, UNCW played George Mason. Tamir Linhart, the nation's leading scorer, with eleven goals in five games, scored three in the 6-0 GMU win.

UNCW's Goalie Ken Lentz, had 21 total saves for the weekend out of 42 shots on goal.

UNCW has yet to score a goal since the second half of their first game against the Citadel. Since then, the Seahawks have been outscored 19-0. The Seahawks look to get back on track this Saturday against East Carolina. The game is set to begin at 1:00 P.M., at ECU.

The Lady Seahawk volleyball team played four matches in Greensboro. With wins over UNCG (7-15, 15-12, 15-9, 13-15, 15-13) and N.C. A & T (15-6, 15-8, 15-6). On the second day the team lost to UNCA (15-13, 15-4, 15-9) and to Davidson (12-15, 15-11, 15-11, 15-12).

The Seahawks had very strong play from Senior Sheldon Pentovich, who was selected for the all tournament team and posted 177 assists.

The women's golf team, played two invitational tournaments in Florida. The first match was the Sunshine Invitational held at the Riviera Country Club in Daytona Beach, Florida. On this par 73 course the Seahawks finished seventh out of the eleven teams.

Beth Demane shot a 77-80=157 or +11 to finish 15th. Gwen Gravina finished 25th with a 162, Lee Ann Walker and Michelle Immekus finished 34th, with a 164 total.

The team ended with a total of 645 forty-one shots behind the winner, Ole Mississipp.

The second match was the Lady Seminole Invitational held at the Seminole golf course and was hosted by Florida State University.

On this Par 72 course in Tallahassee, Florida, Michelle Immekus was the top finisher for the Lady Seahawks.

Immekus shot a 74-80-77=231 ending +15 and finishing 12th. Lee Ann Walker was 31st shooting 80-83-77=240 ending +24, Beth Demane ended +27 for 41st place.

The team total for the event was 953, seventy-three from Duke the invitational winner. The team took eighth out of the fourteen teams present at the match.

Jim's Game of the Week is San Francisco versus New Orleans. San Francisco's offense will prove to be too much for Swilling and gang. The Saints lack of offense will keep their "D" on the field to long and Steve Young will eventually get 'em. SF 27-10.

Chris Powell's Game Of the Week is the Raiders and the Chiefs. With the running game of the Chiefs and the inconsistency of the Raider quarterbacks, Kansas City should win easily. Kansas City 24-13

Wayne's Game Of the Week is Pittsburgh at Green Bay. Does Green Bay have krypton hidden in their field, to stop the punishing defense off the "Men of Steel"? NO! Steeler's will be practicing their air attack this week. Steelers 27-7

What Happens If You Are Accused

BY EDWARD MOSELEY
Staff Writer

[The following is Part 1 of a three part series.]

You are charged with an Academic Honor Code violation of which you are innocent. People you would rather not tell find out. Your world begins to fall apart. Do not fear.

Procedures followed are designed to prevent this nightmare situation.

Rights of students charged with violations of Academic Honor Code violations are protected from the initial report into post-graduation pursuits.

What is considered a violation of Academic Honor Code standards? What are our rights and how are we protected?

Almost 90 percent of the faculty suspected AHC violations by their own observations and 10 percent were told by other members of the University community.

The University community is composed of "every faculty member, student, administrator, and staff member," according to section V-3 of the Student Handbook and Code of Student Life.

Section V-1 specifies types of violations. They are: plagiarism composed of word-for-word copying, the mosaic, and the paraphrase; bribery; and cheating.

The general responsibility of the University community, says section V-3, is to fulfill an "obligation to report the alleged violation" of the AHC.

The reporting of alleged violations serves three purposes: 1) to protect honest students rights to a fair, valued education; 2) to sustain the University a high level of academic integrity; and 3) to insure the faculty, staff, and administrator's purpose to educate.

Almost 70 percent of the faculty did not confront students about suspected cheating.

A faculty member may believe a student has violated AHC. See Accused, page 3.

College Police Blotters Now Public

BY JULIE PODLASEK
Staff Writer

Since the recent modification in the Buckley Amendment on July 23, 1992, crime reports that occur at educational institutions are now being made accessible to the public. This amendment is under the Family Education Rights and Privacy Act of 1974 which considers police reports as education records. Resulting from this change is the distinction between education records and law enforcement records, which will no longer be withheld if the information is needed.

The Seahawk will begin updates on the crime occurrences that are happening on campus. We will include brief reports with the hopes that this information will give students a better awareness to take precautions to help prevent these things from happening.

On Sunday, Sept. 20, a bicycle was stolen by the racks near Belk Hall.

On Monday, Sept. 21, there was a hit and run off property damage. A vehicle struck the wooden railings by Galloway Hall and left the scene.

Two more bicycle thefts occurred.

On Tuesday, Sept. 22, there was another case of bicycle arson in front of New Hanover Hall.

On Wednesday, Sept. 23, there was a motor vehicle/bicycle accident in Lot P. The car struck the rider who was then transported to a hospital for treatment.

On Thursday, Sept. 24, larceny under $1000 took place when a VCR was stolen from the Madeline Suite.

If your bike, or part of it, is stolen, call Campus Police at 395-3184.

There was a simple physical assault between two residents on campus.

Attempted larceny occurred at Randall Library when a non-student tried to steal a book, which reportedly happens quite frequently.

On Saturday, Sept. 26, there was yet another bicycle theft around Suite O.

A financial transaction card fraud took place when an unknown person used another's ATM card and withdrew money out of the teller machine.

On Sunday, Sept. 27, there were three more bicycle thefts in the residential areas.

Damage to state property occurred when the light fixtures at the University Center were broken in the men's bathroom.

Breaking and entering in an office in Trask Coliseum while the Public Enemy concert was taking place. The non-student was caught, arrested and transported to jail.

Assault. Subject was attending concert and assaulted by non-student.

As you can see, property theft is the most frequent crime reported at UNCW. Bicycle theft ranks number one. U-bolts and chain locks are of no use if they are not locked to a fixed object.

Remember that the Campus Police are here to provide you with a safe place to live and learn while attending UNCW. They offer various services such as emergency phones, the Seahawk Shuttle, Operation I.D., bicycle registration, programs and literature about crime, motor assistance, escorts, and self-defense classes.

Stalker Law Goes Into Effect Today

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

North Carolina's new Stalking Bill (HB 217) goes into effect today. The law will make it possible for women and other victims of stalking to have legal recourse against their stalkers.

The law, similar to ones in California, Colorado, Florida, and Mississippi, is for persons who reasonably fear death or bodily harm from someone who "willfully on more than one occasion follows or is in the presence of another person without legal purpose" and has been warned in a documented way to stay away.

The stalker must also have followed the victim in "a pattern over a period of time evidencing a continuity of purpose."

The law is not, repeat, not for harassing or inconveniencing situations. The victim must fear bodily harm, including sexual assault, and/or death at the hands of the stalker.

Brenda Campbell, a member of the North Carolina Council for Women, says, "There has to be emotional distress."

Fifth Judicial District Attorney Jerry Spivey emphasized the importance of the law's emotional distress element because he does not want every person who has domestic problems, or problems with a relation, to assume the law applies to them.

"This law is good for extreme cases. Ones where one side can't get over a relationship," Spivey said. "It good to have a law like this in place."

One provision of the law requires a victim to adequately warn the stalker of the victim's distress.

District Attorney Spivey recommends some form of documented proof of warning. A registered letter with return receipt requested is one way recommended by Ms. Campbell.

There does not seem to be a problem on the UNCW campus. See Stalker, page 2.

"Wilmywood" Casting Call

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

Hollywood hopefuls, your chance to steal a scene from Paul Newman, kiss Jennifer Jason-Leigh, or joke with Tim Robbins is coming soon.

On October 10, local casting director Sandy Dawes ("JFK", "Miller's Crossing") will be holding an "Open Casting Call Hulathon" at 1902 Dawson Street from 3 p.m.- 9 p.m. New York casting directors Donna Isaacson and John Lyons will also be on hand to meet with applicants.

The film, "The Hudsucker Proxy", to begin shooting November 30 in Wilmington, is a period comedy about the man who invented the hula hoop in the late 1950's. Joel and Ethan Coen ("Barton Fink", "Miller's Crossing", and "Raising Arizona") will produce/direct.

Wilmington residents ages 6 and up are invited to take part in the auditions. "Naturally, we will be looking for extras," says Ms. Dawes, "but we also have some speaking parts we'd love to cast locally."

Some of these parts are for men 30-65. "Although men in this age bracket will generally feel they are too busy to be in a movie, it rarely requires more than one or two days of their time; they hope they'll come meet with us!"

Why a "Hulathon"?

"Some scenes in the movie require men and women who can hula hoop, so applicants will be encouraged (though not required) to show us their 'hula skills'," Ms. Dawes explained.

In addition to "just plain folks," the casting directors are seeking ballroom dancers, modern dancers, chamber orchestra musicians, lawyers, secretaries, weight lifters, waitresses, barbers, manicurists, a Dwight Eisenhower look-alike, and male triplets aged 35-65.

All applicants are requested to bring a recent, non-returnable snapshot of themselves to the audition.

Brooks Doesn't Let MS Slow Her Down

BY LAURA KEETER
Staff Writer

Kathy Brooks admits she has an "A-type personality" and that's what she projects as Accounting Specialist in the UNCW Financial Reporting Office.

Her Muscular Sclerosis is hidden however from many observers.

"There's no visual sign of impairment. That makes it harder; I have to carry the weight myself," she said.

"I have to tell my husband, that I'm having an episode, unless it's my speech or my walk; something that's visual to him."

Brooks was diagnosed five years ago, at age 31, with the neurological disease that destroys Myelin (patches of insulation) to the nerves of the body and replaces them with Sclerosis (scar tissue). This occurs in multiple places within the nervous system, thus the name "Multiple Sclerosis."

Called "young persons disease" because symptoms strike between the ages 20 to 40, there is no known cause or cure to Multiple Sclerosis. Its symptoms however vary from weakness, lack of coordination or slurred speech to extreme fatigue, paralysis, or impaired bladder/bowel functions.

"So I know where every bathroom is in every store," she said.

"That makes you madder then anything."

The whole disease makes her mad, she said, and she tries to get more involved to release anger and battle denial. With the form of the disease she has, which moves in exacerbations (cycle of attacks) followed by remission (period of complete or partial recovery), it's easy to lapse into denial when in remission, she said. "I've been in denial or a long time. So I'm trying to get more involved."

The A-type surfaces in this fight as Brooks directs her drained energy to get involved with support groups, accumulating research information, and promoting events such as WALKtoberFEST.

Come rain or shine, participants will gather at Greenfield Lake on October 10, 1992, for the first WALKtoberFEST held in Wilmington. The minimum amount for raised pledges to enter the walk is $50, an amount which also wins the person a t-shirt. The event will be over by about 12:30 p.m., said Brooks.

The proceeds will benefit the Greater Carolina Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

Stalker

Officer Chris Slater of the Campus Police says, "There hasn't been any incident since he has been on campus." He has been an officer on campus since July 1990.

Dr. Kate Bruce, advisor for the Gay and Lesbian Association, said there have been instances of harassment toward homosexuals, but they were not repeated. "I'm aware of some harassment, but it is hearsay. (The instances) were not on UNCW, but in the community."

The bill was passed June 30, 1992, during the short session of the North Carolina Assembly. Sen. Helen Marvin (D-Gaston), with the cooperation of Rep. Charlotte Gardner (R-Rowan) were the key people in seeing the bill become law.

Rep. Gardner introduced HB 217 (Extremely Serious Assault/Felony) and pushed it through the 1991 session.

It did not look as though the bill would pass the Senate as it was, so Rep. Gardner allowed Sen. Marvin to substitute the stalking language in place of the original House language and introduced it into the Senate in its revised version.

Senator A. P. Sands (D-Rockingham), chair of the Judiciary-2 committee, wrote the bill with the assistance of the North Carolina Council for Women and the Domestic violence advocates who provided the background and American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) opinions.

Though there isn't a problem here at UNCW, everyone should take the time to know the law. It doesn't only apply to women, it is for everyone's safety. That includes friends and family around the state.

standards, but does not have enough evidence to make an allegation. For example, someone may report a violation, but not testify in a hearing.

Student's rights are protected by the need for strong evidence demonstrating justified authority to confront.

Some faculty members, however, may have a preference not to involve themselves with complexities of an AHC violation process.

A "philosophical difference," said Chancellor J. Leutze, may also contribute to faculty decisions to not confront students. They do not feel they should police student activities.

Faculty members may suspect violations more by their own observation than by student report, but students are sure of when it occurs more often.

If a student admits to an infraction two procedures may be followed by the instructor. A private resolution could be reached, or the case could be referred to the Dean.

In these instances students should raise their concern with the class instructor, department chair, or Dean of college/school in which the course is taught, according to section V-3-B.

If not initially reported to the instructor, the violation "shall be reported to the instructor of the course in which it occurred", section V-4-A states. This is so the instructor can confront the student person-to-person on the allegation.

This may be a problem at the end of a semester. Students could finish an exam and leave campus, thereby denying the student a person-to-person talk with the instructor about the allegations.

Such a case may be covered by section V-4-C which states, "Faculty are encouraged to consult with the Dean of Students regarding appropriate procedures and protection of student rights."

When asked if this is the correct procedure, Assistant Dean of Students Robert Smith said, "What you are saying sounds reasonable."

Once the student is confronted they have two options: to admit, or, to not admit.

If a student admits to an infraction two procedures may be followed by the instructor. A private resolution could be reached, or the case could be referred to the Dean of Students.

The Dean of Students and the Dean of the college/school is informed of the result of private resolutions by the instructor. The resolution is then entered into the students disciplinary records.

[Last week's article "Cheating Scandal Hits Campus Hard" incorrectly stated as 70 the percentage of faculty respondents who did not report private resolutions. The correct figure is 23 percent. This is closer to the correct way the Academic Honor Code should work.]

If the case is referred to the Dean of Students then the student does not receive a grade. A neutral "Z" appears on the students report card. Procedures in section II-2-D-3 are then followed to determine disciplinary charges.

The student may not admit to the allegation. In this case the faculty member may drop the allegation due to lack of evidence. The reporting party may override this decision, section V-4-D says, by filing a written report with the Dean of Students.

Faculty members may refer cases to the Dean of Students if the student does not admit to an allegation. Again the student receives a "Z". The Dean then begins a preliminary investigation.

The processes followed to protect student rights in preliminary investigations, and hearings are next in the series.

LETTERS
To The Editor

I am greatly disturbed by a recent incident that occurred on the campus of the UNCW on Sept. 26, 1992. My mission is to inform the public off the prevalence of racial unrest breeding not only in major cities across the United States, but also in small communities like Wilmington, NC.

As a student of UNCW, I was a little surprised when I heard Public Enemy would be performing at the typically sedate campus of UNCW. Just a few reasons for my surprise:

1) I believe Public Enemy is too big an act for our campus. Why 7-Rap concerts can easily reach volatile proportions in the presence of such a diverse group of individuals.

2) The UNCW public safety officers (a.k.a law enforcement officers of our college campus) are too minimal, in force, to provide effective security in an explosive situation should arise.

3) These safety officers are too well-adapted to their sedentary responsibilities. The campus atmosphere of UNCW is typically a passive and uneventful environment.

The above concerns are well justified by the action brought upon a close friend. These actions were brutal in nature. This friend has been a loyal fan of Public Enemy and an avid supporter of the black cause for advancement and equality. Unfortunately, his presence and support were unwelcome at the concert. My friend was assaulted by a group of people while trying to enjoy the show. The attack was absent of any type of provocation on my friend's part. He was present only to enjoy the music of Public Enemy. Following this attack, my friend spent three and a half hours at Cape Fear Memorial Hospital. Hopefully, the physical injuries he incurred will not result in any permanent damage.

My primary concerns are the internal injuries precipitated by the attack. He will continue to fight for the equality of all races, but I am sure he will never forget the anger he encountered in this vicious assault.

His attackers, although unidentifiable, will continue to inflict undue harm on other innocent victims. These individuals are not striving for equality, but promoting violence and aggression, as well as maintaining their racial hatred. In order to provide a safe and pleasant environment, UNCW must imagine the worst case scenario for each event and prepare accordingly. This is the only way to avoid such inhumane acts of rage. If the security force of the Public Enemy concert had been adequate, this particular outburst of rage could have been prevented and/or quickly ceased.

A course of action must be taken and responsibility assumed. I do realize what has taken place cannot be changed, but my primary goal in writing this letter is to achieve public awareness and the deterrence of future violence against innocent victims. If awareness and deterrence are gained, partial justice will then be served.

"Hats Off" Award Winner Announced

Washington, D.C.-- In a not so surprise move earlier this week, former possible 1992 Presidential candidate H. Ross Perot announced that he may again hint that he may again consider the possibility of thinking about maybe entering the 1992 Presidential race. Perot cited the fact that Democratic candidate Bill "Stick Willie" Clinton and Republican George "Read my chapped lying lips" Bush do not have a significant plans to salvage the sagging US economy. Sources behind the scenes say that his real motive is that he "misses being ridiculed on Saturday Night Live." I hear another Barbara Walters special entitled "Woss Pubwo: The Man, The Miff, The Wegend."

In other news, the UNCW community was shocked last week over allegations of students cheating on Biology 105 exams. According to unnamed (actually they do have names but they are just not too crazy about them, I guess) sources, two students tugged out, in Morse Code, across the room, a twelve page in class essay on "The Chemical Interactions Between Polar-Uncharged Molecules and the Phospho-Lipid Bilayer of the Physical Nuclear Membrane."

How utterly ignorant, and especially in Bio 105. You see, I am a Biology major (writing is just a hobby, thank goodness). To Biology majors, the 105 class is a "This is a frog, this is an aardvark; can you tell the difference?" kind of class. There should be no need to cheat in any class, much less that class.

Now I do remember once being accused of cheating on my final in an Advanced Basketweaving class. The final was a take home project and consisted of making a decent looking, functional basket. Nobody ever told me that I couldn't get my grandma to assist me with/make my basket. Anyhow, despite finding the "Edna's Country Crafts" price tag on the bottom, no one ever proved a case against me.

As far as the recent UNCW cheaters, I think they should be made examples of. In fact, they should find the little varmint, give them all an "F", run them up the flagpole for a day, and make them go to an Alternatives! seminar such as "Edna's Country Crafts" price tag on the bottom, no one ever proved a case against me.

Speaking of studying and the like, I have a little bone to pick with Randall library. Now I've never mentioned any type of a problem with the library, except

The Libertarians are unknown to most Americans. They've been around for 20 years and have a firm foundation in our national and local government. The Libertarian presidential candidate is on the ballots of all 50 states, and you'll see the names of local candidates on your ballot this November.

The Libertarian Party wants to make citizens of the United States feel like individuals living their lives for themselves, not cogs in a machine. Right now, the government is deciding for you what you can eat, drink, listen to, own, who we can have sex with, marry, and how much they should pay themselves.

"So what? We elected them freely and gave them permission to represent us, right?"

Yes, you did, but wouldn't you rather make these decisions for yourself? If you think about it for a while, it's easy to see how much control the government has over your life. They tax your earned money (or your parents' money, thus curbing your allowance), take music off the shelves-not even respecting you enough to let you hear it, tax the very necessities of life-food, shelter, etc. This list could go on and on.

for that time when they made me pay $21.00 for an overdue pamphlet that they got free from the government. This problem is not so much about something the library officials do as it is about the something they don't do. That something is MAKE PEOPLE SHUT UP WHILE I'M TRYING TO STUDY FOR MY MOLECULAR BIOLOGY TEST.

I know that it is the students' responsibility to keep relatively quiet in the study areas, but it looks like Barney would get out his bullet and silence some of those ingrates standing in a circle around a study swastika (they call them "carrels" but to me they look like wooden swastikas) rambling on about where they are going out on Thursday night. I hate to be so harsh, but I'd hate it even worse if I didn't study enough and was forced to have someone tap out, in Morse Code, the answer to an in class exam on "The Deleterious Effects of Cheating on A College Exam."

In a new feature of these NoBull Prize winning columns, I am introducing my "hats off" award for someone so deserving. This is a prestigious honor, not to be taken lightly. Winners will not receive wall plaques or even a gift certificate to Hardie's of Burgaw, but they will have the satisfaction of seeing their name in the paper (and not in the police blotter).

How will this change if you vote Libertarian? First off, let me tell you what the other political groups take out of context and will tell you about the Libertarian Party-they want to legalize drugs and end Social Security. Both true.

The main reason drug dealing is such a big business is that there's a LOT of money in it. If an ounce of pure heroin sold for $140 instead of $69,000 (Pakistan wholesale price compared to American street value), there wouldn't be as many people willing to kill for it. Also, approximately one-third of violent and property (theft) crime is related to illegal drugs. The high volume of crimes is a major factor in the population growth inside of prisons being nine times higher than that of the general population. Both the democratic and republican NC gubernatorial candidates believe the solution to increasing crime and overcrowded prisons is to build more prisons.

Now, to address Social Security (I know, my grammar is quite reprehensible. Sorry.) Social Security is basically in a way for the government to say that if you don't put the money in its piggy bank you'll scamper out and waste it on candy and toys. That's a Conversely, in the weeks to come, I will introduce my "Shoes off" award for people or agencies who do something that really stinks. This would not be a good place to find your name (even the police blotter would be better).

Anyhow, this week "Hats off" award goes to someone, in of all places, the UNCW post office. Now the UNCW postal service is not very high on my list of "Most Loved Agencies On Campus," but one of the workers of truly deserving of a "Hats Off" award. About a week ago, I accidentally dropped a paycheck into the mail box as I was dropping some mail in the slot. At the time I had no clue where the check was and by the next day I was frantic and faced the reality of not getting my money. Then out of the blue (actually out of my mailbox) came an "official envelope" from the US Postal Service. Inside was my check, along with a note from UNCW Postal worker, Margaret Beatty explaining that she had found my check and hoped its return would "make me smile." "Hats Off" to Margaret Beatty.

Well friends, it seems as if I'm at the end of my piece of paper and I have again neglected to write about my various adventures and travels over the summer break. Just remember, great things come to those who wait.

Until next time...keep your mind out of the gutter and your head out of the toilet.

fairly demeaning proclamation as far as I'm concerned. I'd like to think that I could be trusted to save, to blow, my money as I choose. Also, I'm sure almost everyone knows someone who's getting screwed by Social Security (your aunt with emphysema, somebody like that-can't get their own money out of the system that she's supposed to be benefiting them).

Repealing anti-drug laws and Social Security seems like such a terrible thing, doesn't it? We also (yes, I admit it-I'm a registered Libertarian. The FBI probably has a file on me now), would like to commit such vile acts as to de-bureaucrize the Postal Service, the Departments of Agriculture, Energy, etc. AND abolish the IRS.

Why?? I really doubt The Seahawk will give me enough room to babble on and on about all this stuff, and there's better people than me to say it. If you're interested in learning more about the Libertarian Party, there's a regular meeting every Monday night at Burrito Bob's Mexican Restaurant at 5901 Wrightsville Ave. You'll probably even get to meet Burrito Bob himself, it's a mystical experience let me tell you...

Starving Funksters Fed Fried Chicken

 BY SHANNON DAVIS
 A & E Correspondent

What did you do last Saturday night? Did you Rave at Metropolis, or go to the Monk again? Oh, I bet I know, you did your beloved homework... right?

Well, if you did anything besides going to Jacob's Run, then you should kick yourself in the well, you know where. SOUTHERN CULTURE ON THE SKIDS played! What were you thinking?

For all of you who did, you deserve a big greasy pat on the back and a nice juicy piece of fried chicken.

SOUTHERN CULTURE ON THE SKIDS is a rock-a-billy band from Chapel Hill. Every time I've seen them play (which is every time they've come to Wilmington) they've always had a huge crowd, full of poultry starved funksters.

They played all of their loved and popular songs off of Too Much Pork For Just One Fork, and some funky bo-didley tunes off their new album For Lovers Only.

It's fun to stand back and watch all the attendees of this Colonel Sanders feather fest, dance to the back hills sound. Everyone's in their own groove, but this groove is consistent throughout the whole crowd. It kind of reminded me of the way Granny Clampet danced around their palatial estate in them there Beverly Hills.

The predictable, but most faved part of the evening was when the singer threw out their pots and pans to the adoring crowd. The fans with the front row tickets got to rush onto the stage and dance to the infamous 8 Piece Box tune.

I highly recommend attending the next performance of these hill billy rock 'n' roll superstars. It would make Uncle Jed down right proud.

Able; Bill Chalk as Cain. The artistic stage includes Brant Vanhoy, composer/arranger/guitar; Amy Collier and Lori Probus, stage managers; and UNCW faculty members Doris Levy, Tom Macie and Toni Bruton are the choreographers and production designers.

Notes From The Margin: Divining Town And City

BY JEFF NELSON

In this one horse town of ours, the one town and the city often combine to form one.

This past weekend SOUTHERN CULTURE ON THE SKIDS brought it all back home — all the Fraken-Hill-Country-Porkchop-Applesauce-Pelvis grindin'—Billy—once again. Lots of sweat, plenty of fried chicken and a two legged goddess of a bassist even Bacchus would have loved to like a cow in the throes of biological passion.

Nothing more need be said, 'cept, S.C.O.T.S. (if you have not seen them already) should be experienced at least 5 times in order to appreciate the full-tilt boogie fervor that voodoos your flesh during their show.

Playing the same evening was the notoriously controversial, undeniably danceable, PUBLIC ENEMY.

Some bands come to life, others don't find their groove live. Rappers, while generally grooving as hard as they ever do, have a difficulty fulfilling sound quality expectations during live performances. PUBLIC ENEMY was no exception to this unwritten rule.

The show started at 7:30, with one act after another going on until DAS EFX took the stage in 40 minutes, playing fast and hard, and then staged at 11:15.

And the lights came on.

Vibrant colors everywhere. People raced to make use of the intermission as a tall, awkward woman could not stop dancing in her black leather fringed jacket, short shorts and Black Sabbath-like "Fairies Wear Boots" boots. She appeared to be more of the clogging type, aka a certain red head, but regardless of her true calling—she was dancing under the lights to the music in her head, warming up for PUBLIC ENEMY.

The lights dimmed and sputtered out at 11:30. A huge — kill the Christian! — roar went up from the crowd. Lights flickered back and forth (no this wasn't an ADCD concert). There were more people in attendance than the basketball team gets in a year.

Wasting American Currency

 BY NEAL KEEPER
 A & E Correspondent

UNCW's Trask Coliseum was graced Saturday night with the presence of a wide variety of rap star performers including DAS EFX, PETE ROCK and C.L. SMOOTH, and PUBLIC ENEMY for a show that promised to be an evening to remember.

The doors, or rather The door, opened sharply at 7:20, just in time for the announced 7:30 show time. Several thousand people were in a huddled mass trying to squeeze through the one entrance in front of Trask. After 20 minutes, we were able to make it through, only to find out the tickets we purchased in advance at the University Union had to be exchanged for assigned seats in another line.

After that situation was resolved, an announcement was made stating the crowd was too unorganized and loud, therefore, the doors must be shut and everyone must make a single-file line. The doors remained shut for an additional 5 minutes and finally reopened. Pushing and shoving continued as we finally made it inside the second door, only to find that one of the two metal detectors being used was not functioning properly. So, everyone now had to squeeze through one detector.

Finally, we made it inside the building and decided to go ahead and sit down. After all, we had been standing for nearly an hour-and-a-half in line; we wanted to rest the feet. Our newly exchanged tickets were designated on the west bleachers. And sure enough, the west bleachers were folded up against the wall, not a real surprise to us. Anyway, we sat elsewhere and awaited the concert of the century. Around 8:30 (one hour after the announced show time) two MC's and the entire 97.3 FM staff introduced themselves for 15 minutes. We were instructed to "turn it out" and "pump it up" as well as "get busy" for yet another 15 minutes.

45 KING was the first group to perform for the anxious crowd. I must state that for the hour they "entertained us," it made everyone more discontented. After several songs that sounded completely the same, as well as dedication(s) to the "ladies" (who can actually tell with the acoustics being so bad in Trask?) several members of the crowd threw their cups and popcorn boxes on the stage. 45 KING finally understood the crowd's feelings and left the stage. By this time it was 9:30, and no smiles.

After another "warm up" group, and a 15 minute intermission, PETE ROCK and C.L. SMOOTH

(And that's too bad, just imagine what the B-ball team might accomplish with 1500 screaming fans behind them). A noise like an air raid siren matched the din of the crowd, and then to the blinding fracture of white light that fractured the darkened coliseum, PUBLIC ENEMY hit the stage.

Flavor Flav flopping about, changing clothes, doing his freak dance, wearing a "Cat in the Hat" hat; Terminator X mounted atop a ten foot scaffolding, giving hard signals like a drum major; the SIW, standing guard and steppin' to the beat; Chuck D. barely able to contain himself as he leapt about the stage, throwing a furious verbal assault over the crowd, out the double doors of Trask and into the streets of Wilmington.

PUBLIC ENEMY's stage presence certainly lived up to the hype. Arizona was a bad song, (one of the few I can recall after that long-g-g night) almost rendered incoherent by the noise of the crowd, combining with the horrible sound-board production and the strange and misleading acoustics of Trask. Where as PUBLIC ENEMY's recorded work is crisp-clear-to-a-tech, their live sound is rife with the noise of the techno-belt machine clashing with more noise of the artificial rhythm machine, which makes for incredibly indistinct, incomprehensible vocals.

Now, there are bands, genres of music, that don't emphasize the high fidelity of vocals — various types of punk or even indie rock bands, but rap and hip-hop seem so heavily to rely on the rhyme as if it corresponds or contrasts to the rhythm — this is where PUBLIC ENEMY's performance faltered. I know most rap/hip-hop bands don't utilize traditional musicians — bands — in their recorded work, but what a difference it might make if they did — at least live.

But as the circle within the circle might illustrate, PUBLIC ENEMY put on a show all of energy, lights, power, enough vibe to send you MTV vibrations so hard that some erstwhile record representative might ship you off to the Bronx Zoo to alleviate their sexually frustrated elephants — and that's not something to bum about.

took the stage. From what I could understand, their message was strong and well received by the audience. The poor acoustics that Trask offered made the music and bass sound delayed and the vocals distorted. They played for 25 minutes and then left the stage. Set up for DAS EFX took place while the 97.3 FM crew took the stage and introduced themselves for the fourth time. As before, the audience was asked repetitive questions about the upcoming performances, told to "pump it up" and to get ready to "get busy." By this time, I was tired of hearing all this babble and ready to see PUBLIC ENEMY.

DAS EFX made their way on stage, and by this time, it was 10:30. The chosen selections were sung differently than on their album, and the sound was distorted, but for the most part, the crowd was pleased. They saved their best for last, They Want EFX, and the crowd went wild. I'm not sure if they were happy to hear the song, or the song indicated that PUBLIC ENEMY was next. As before, the 97.3 FM crew took the stage with their silly antics and "pump it up" propaganda.

As I took a stretch break I overheard a member of the UNCW campus police talking to someone about how the concert must be shut down at exactly midnight, due to contract agreements. And with it being 11:25, and PUBLIC ENEMY not yet on stage, I was a little distressed. Just as I walked back into the coliseum, the show began.

Flavor Flav, Chuck D. and Terminator X made their stand and put on a decent show. The sound was better, and the stage participants actually moved and danced. Hits performed included: Welcome To The Terrordome, 911 Is A Joke, and Can't Trust It. The show continued well past midnight, much to the distress of the campus police.

The whole fiasco on our beloved campus was brought to us by the Brother X Production group. After going to dozens of shows throughout the country, I have to say this one was the most unorganized, uncoordinated, inaudible and most boring of them all. The show lacked continuity and the delays were stretched out and obviously improvised. The crew of 97.3 FM seemed to do their best with entertaining, but was sad to see that they were stuck with the horrible job of covering for bad planning.

If you intended to go see the show, you really didn't miss much. It was barely entertaining, and in my opinion, a waste of American currency.

The 10 Commandments of Nutrition
Each week the Heart and Sole Fitness Section will list a nutritional commandment.

1ST COMMANDMENT

Thou Shalt Never Skip Breakfast

If you want to start your day with a boundless energy level, your metabolism in high gear, and proteins actively healing and building new cells, then, "Thou shalt never skip breakfast!" Think of your body as a campfire that dies down during the night and in the morning needs to be stoked up with wood to begin to burn vigorously again. Without stoking, the fire will die down with no flame or sparks. Your body is very similar; it awakens in a slowed, fasting state. You must "break the fast" with breakfast to rev up the body into high gear. If you choose not to eat breakfast, the body not only stays slowed down, but as in the case of the campfire, the metabolism will die down even more. Starving your body all day will keep it dragging through the day in a slowed down metabolic state and when the evening gorge begins, most of that food will have to be stored as fat. The food that comes in is like dumping an armload of firewood on a dead fire! Don't think for a minute that you are saving calories by skipping breakfast or your healthy by the higher metabolic

All that food can't possible be burned up because the body isn't burning energy at a fast rate because the fire has gone out. You're right! This means your body is working correctly. When you starve your body in the morning, waste products are released into your system that temporarily depress your appetite and allow you to continue to starve without feeling hungry for many hours. Unfortunately you are letting your body go into a low metabolic gear and setting yourself up for a gorge and as soon as you begin to eat, your appetite is really "turned on"! Not only will you overeat because your blood sugar has fallen so low, but like the campfire, your body will not be able to burn those calories well. Remember, your body just cannot use such a large intake of food at one time, it will be stored as fat and the nutrients will be wasted.

Healthy Goal:

Start your day with a boundless energy level, your metabolism in high gear and proteins actively healing and building new cells and NEVER SKIP BREAKFAST!

In Golf, as in life, it's the follow-through that makes the difference.

Warning: the following article may contain some ideas that are not suitable for all audiences. Some paragraphs are meant for immature audiences only. The material in this article is of a constructive, supportive nature. Any discretion on any part, be it the editor or reader should be avoided at all cost.

This week, "The Gutter" is once again a case study/application type whatchamacallit. This week we will be looking at a student/athlete's life.

"I am the great one!" is the battle cry of UNCW's very own Kevin Scott, sports enthusiasts.

Whether he is playing cards, Nintendo or pickup basketball, his undaunted confidence stands steadfast, even when placed face-to-face with reality.

I have seen him miss shots, make bad passes and other items that can be labeled as an unforced error.

I have also witnessed his haste, determination, and ability to think under pressure. Even though he may still turn the ball over, he never stops trying and giving one hundred percent.

I do not want to mislead you into thinking that Kevin is a terrible player, that would be incorrect. Kevin indeed has some valuable skills. He knows his strengths and weaknesses. This is the beauty of Kevin. What he attempts to make you do is play against his strengths as he works to improve his weaknesses.

Just like Kevin, the soccer team focused on its strengths and practiced to overcome weakness. It would have been easy for the soccer team being 0-4 to just give up. But they did not, they practiced and played on as a team to defeat our close rivals, East Carolina.

What I am saying is that is that there is a little Kevin Scott in all of us. There definitely is a little Kevin in our teams.

The great thing about this is that, like Kevin, I have noticed in the players a basic confidence in their teammates, coaches and of course themselves.

Our teams are like a solid block of talent, and the coaches are chipping the parts of this block away to make the best possible team. In making the players into a well-rounded, solid team, the coach has to have the hustle and effort from each player.

If the players do not have the confidence in the coach, our chances of winning are greatly diminished. Without this undaunted confidence of Kevin in the coach, any chance to turn a season around is minute.

Kevin has a positive attitude and a good outlook for the future.

So do our coaches, and so should our players, fans and sports editor.

Swimming and Diving Add Depth

BY SHANNON MCBRIDE
Sports Writer

UNCW's Swimming and Diving team is training hard for another successful season.

The women hope to match or surpass last year's record of 9-2, while the men look to better their 8-3 record. Coach Dave Allen said he is very pleased with last year's performance, and if the team can match its previous record he will be happy.

In order to accomplish this "the most important thing is to mold ourselves into a team so we are all working toward the same goal," said Allen.

To be successful, each individual must attain his or her personal goals, perform well during dual meets and at conference championships, he said.

Last year the Seahawks took the conference by surprise when they finished undefeated. This season, however, will be more difficult because other teams such as East Carolina and William and Mary, will know what to expect.

This year's team is the largest yet. Leading the women's team are captains Amy Lewis, Cameron King and Kelli Sutton. Along with them, other returning lettermen include Allison Hayden, Shannon McBride, Stephanie Plifka, Karla Zick and Lisa-Lee Gay.

Top returning men include co-captains Clifton Perkins and Mark Alford. Also returning are Burak Erdem, Mark Ruggiero, Robert Demer, Gerson Alaluf, Jamie Elle and Steve Burke.

Coach Allen is also looking forward to strong performances from this year's new comers. They include transfer Tonya Marshburn and freshmen Fathom Houtz, Wendy Lisman and Stacey Kilbiron.

New comers to the men's team include Murat Erdem, Drew Whorley, Doug Atkinson, Matt Collins and Nathan Clawson.

"Student and facility support is very important," said Allen, and he hopes to see more people at this year's meets.

The Swimming and Diving teams first meet is at UNCW in the Natatorium on Saturday, October 31, 2 p.m.

The team lost to Charleston Southern (11-15, 15-6, 15-9, 15-11) and to UNCA (15-9, 15-12, 15-13). The team defeated Davidson, for the second time this season, (15-12, 15-8, 15-8).

The Lady Seahawks earlier that week defeated Campbell and N.C. A&T.

UNCW swept Campbell in three games (15-5, 15-4, 15-7). N.C. A&T also fell to the Seahawks in three games (15-15, 15-13, 15-13). This was the second time this year that UNCW has defeated N.C. A&T.

UNCW Upsets N.C. State. The men's soccer team scored three second half goals to ease past nationally ranked N.C. State 3-2. All five goals of the game were scored in the second half.

UNCW scored first on a shot by forward Joel Myers. State's Kevin Scott scores, and Gabriel Okonkwo sat on a 2-1 lead midway of the second half.

UNCW forward Mehmet Kocer tied the game on an unassisted goal with 7 minutes left in the game. The game winner was scored by senior fullback Paul Cairney. Cairney from 30-yards out, shot in a pass received from mid-fielder Buckley Corbin.

UNCW now 2-4, will play William and Mary at home this Saturday, October 3 at 1 p.m.

UNCW defeats ECU. The Lady Seahawks, awaited conference rivals ECU Wednesday night in Trask Coliseum. They defeated ECU (15-13, 15-13, 15-11).

UNCW received strong play from junior mid-hitter Amy Chlasky with 12 kills she was one of the cornerstones of the Seahawk attack. Outside hitter Bobbi Pate had 13 kills of her own to help the offense keep the pressure on ECU. Senior Sheldon Plentovich had a good supporting game in unassisted 30 assists and 3 solo blocks. This team effort helped UNCW sweep ECU.

Debate Causes Doubt

BY AMY BRENNAN
Staff Writer

A UNCW professor picked Gov. Clinton as the winner of the first of the long awaited Presidential debates.

Dr. Frank Trimble, assistant professor of communications studies, was one of three pundits, or critics picked by the Wilmington Morning Star to judge Sunday's debate. "If you could have mixed all three of them, you'd have a great candidate and a great debater," Dr. Trimble said.

All three pundits agreed that Bush was the loser, winning only four of the 15 rounds.

The debate held no surprises, something each of the candidates could have used. The candidates said nothing new. Mr. Bush spent much energy trying to convince the audience that he could handle the country's domestic problems, and claiming the economy is not as bad as it seems. The rest of his energy was spent attacking Clinton.

Bush, who seemed on the defensive throughout the debate, pointed out that the other two candidates did not have his experience. Perot agreed, saying, "I don't have any experience in running up a $4 trillion debt."

Gov. Clinton probably benefited the most from the debate. The thing he needs most is to prove that he is capable of handling the presidency. His strong positive answers may have

The next debates are scheduled for Thursday Oct. 15 at 9:00 p.m. and Monday Oct. 19 at 7:00 p.m.

In more local politics, Lauch Faircloth said we need to stop federal spending and control the deficit. "The rest will take care of itself."

The conservative Republican candidate for Senate spoke briefly on Monday afternoon to a small crowd at the Republican Party Headquarters at Long Leaf Mall.

In order to control the deficit, Faircloth would cut foreign aid spending, oppose congressional pay raises, and use a line-item budget.

Faircloth's opponent in the race is Senator Terry Sanford. Sen. Sanford is recovering from heart surgery. Mr. Faircloth said the surgery would not affect the race. "The issues are still the same."

Faircloth said normal campaign advertising would resume now that Sanford is recovering.

Faircloth was escorted by his daughter Anne as he made his rounds, shaking hands and talking to all the small children present.

Lori Stephenson, a school board candidate was also on hand to show her support for Mr. Faircloth.

Rights of the Accused

BY EDWARD MOSELEY
Staff Writer

A campus Judicial Board hearing was held Tuesday Oct. 6. The student chose a closed hearing. No information about the results were released. This is because the hearing processes protect the rights of violators of University regulations before, during, and after CJB hearings.

Allegations referred to the Dean of Students, Pat Leonard, are investigated. This is the preliminary investigations. The preliminary investigation covers any violation of University regulations, not only the Academic Honor Code.

All students are "Presumed innocent until proven guilty by a preponderance of evidence" states Section II. 2C of the Student Handbook and Code of Student Life. This is a basic right afforded the defendant.

After the preliminary investigation the Dean may dismiss the allegation because of a lack of evidence. The Dean may meet with the student and dismiss the charges or follow disciplinary action.

If disciplinary action is followed the student has four choices. The student may plead not guilty and go for resolution before the CJB or the administration, the Dean. The Dean has the option to refer the case to the CJB. The student may also plead guilty. If so, he or she may choose to go before the CJB or the Dean for sanction. Again, the Dean may refer the case to the CJB.

A student, whether, in front of the CJB or the Dean, has many protections. Rights the student has, among others, are: all information on the case and witnesses against him or her, written notice of the charges, a choice of an open or closed hearing, and a choice of an advisor, according to Sections II 2D and II 3C. Section II 3A outlines the campus Judicial Board.

The Campus Judicial Board is the highest disciplinary body on campus.

It is composed of 6 students, chosen by the Student Senate, and 2 faculty, chosen by the faculty Senate Chairperson. The members of the CJB serve a one year term beginning and ending May 1.

UNCW Gets Good Report

BY HOLLY PRICE
News Editor

Yesterday, at the Board of Trustees meeting, Chancellor James Leutze announced that The University of North Carolina at Wilmington has been ranked 23rd among 147 regional colleges in the south.

UNCW tied with two other colleges for this position, Meredith College and Winthrop University. It was the first time UNCW ranked in the top 25. Wake Forest University ranked number one in the southern category.

The poll was released yesterday in an article done by U.S. News and World Report. Criteria for the ranking included S.A.T. scores, high school class ranking of freshman, percentage of professors with Ph.D.'s, and the student to faculty ratio.

"I am extremely proud of our achievements," said Dr. Leutze. "I am grateful to everyone that has contributed to our success."

UNCW was listed as having an average S.A.T. score of 910. Ninety percent of UNCW's faculty was listed as having Ph.D.'s. And 63% of UNCW freshman ranked in the top 25% of their high school classes.

Four regions were included in the survey: north, south, midwest, and west. Of these groups, 588 colleges were polled. According to U.S. News and World Report the colleges polled, "...occupy a vast middle ground of American higher education."

In Dr. Leutze's address to the board of trustees, he commented on how he would like to see UNCW's ranking grow even higher.

"We can and will go higher," he said. "The sky is the limit."

I.F.C. Talent A Hit

BY JULIE PODLASEK
Staff Writer

Last Tuesday night about 1100 people gathered to witness the 1992 I.F.C. talent show.

The pledge classes of eight sororities and nine fraternities competed in a lip sync contest for either first, second, or third place in each category.

Placing first for the fraternities was the Kappa Alpha Order, who performed a scene from the movie "Popeye." Sigma Nu, who came in second, performed to a classical song by Harry Connick Jr. Finally, Delta Sigma Phi came in third with their electrifying show "Greek Lightning."

First among sororities was Alpha Phi who performed, "An evening with Mary Poppins." Chi Omega ranked second with "A night at the movies," and Sigma Sigma Sigma came in third with "Leader of the Pack."

The two first place winners were awarded plaques for their efforts. All of the pledge classes are to be commended for the hard work and time they put into the show, which made it such a great success, said Michael Clifton, I.F.C. president.

Adding to the entertainment was the M.C., former D.J. and collegiate member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Chris O'Brien from Surf 107.

The show was organized by the Interfraternal Council headed by Michael Clifton and James Nicholas, who have been involved with the contest for several years. Clifton testifies to the fact that the show has quadrupled in size within the last three years. "This is attributed to the groups taking it more seriously, and putting much more work and practice into their performances," he said.

Admission was $3.00 per person. $750.00 was sent to I.F.C.'s philanthropy, the Hospitality House.

The remainder of the money was used to rent Kanan Auditorium, hold a raffle, and as a general fund raiser for the organization.

Judging of the contest was done by five members of faculty and staff, including the new Greek Advisor, Bob Smith. Mr. Smith was welcomed to the Greek system at UNCW during the talent show.

The UNCW Swim team recently spent time improving the library's magazine section. They washed the shelves and replaced the old stick-on labels with magnetic ones. Director of library services Eugene Huguellet said the two hours the 56 members contributed saved his staff six months of work. Graduation Application Deadline Today, Last Minute Rush Expected

BY CAROLE MEHLE
Staff Writer

Today is the last day seniors can apply for graduation in May. The fee is $50, a $15 dollar increase from last year, at the Registrar's Office in Hinton James Hall.

Paula Greene, records clerk at the Registrar's office said, "Most people like to wait until the last minute. We expect a lot of people have done that."

As of Wednesday, Greene said 490 applications were filed and there was a stack on her desk. That is lower than the usual 700 who register for spring, she said.

The process applicants have to go through is a simple one, said Registrar Ron Whittaker. "The student comes in, pays for the application and leaves it with the Registrar. They don't have to worry if it gets here."

The process is a new one that Whittaker hopes will be streamlined and simplified for the students and the advisors. In the old process, the student paid for the application, took it to be reviewed with the advisors and then returned. Greene and Whittaker said they would not always get the forms back.

"They (graduation applications) used to have to be hand carried by the student," said Philip Gerard, English department advisor and director of the Creative Writing program.

"The new process is better for the students, the advisors and our office," Whittaker said.

Gerard said the application period used to be stressful, but now that stress is delayed for a couple of weeks. That is when the applications will be checked.

One thing that Whittaker and Greene stress is that students pre-register on time. That could throw off the whole process if they are one day late. When the applications are filed, a degree audit will accompany it. This is a list of all the courses the student has had or for which the student is enrolled. The degree audit will be used to determine if the student is eligible for graduation.

Determining eligibility for graduation is the reason the deadline was moved up from Oct. 22. This will allow time to make adjustments and to work with the 10% problems that take place, Whittaker said.

Though the deadline is today, Greene said she will take applications until the original deadline.

Gerard said that the new process is good. "It's gotten better in the three years I've been here."

Greene and Whittaker said if students are unsure of whether they are eligible to graduate they should come to the Registrar's office. "We will check the file and insure them," Greene said.

Greene and Whittaker said if the student has a good rapport with their advisor and they know it's time to graduate they should "be prepared to spend some money."

Speed Bumps Make Mysterious Disappearance

BY AMY BRENNAN
Staff Writer

Where did all the speed bumps go? It is a question that has been asked frequently since last spring. UNCW's "missing" speed bumps were removed after an evaluation which determined that there were too many on campus.

Vice Chancellor Walden said, "After a year or two of having the speed bumps, we did an evaluation. We looked at some that could be removed. They were originally put there for safety reasons. We were being overly conservative at the time."

How exactly is a speed bump removed? Joe Hack, of UNCW Project Design and Management said, "As you can probably imagine, a speed bump is a hard thing to scrape off. We tried that first." After that initial attempt, the job was handed over to M&A Construction Co. of Wilmington. The bumps had to be sawed into pieces and then removed along with the asphalt.

There had been joking speculation around campus that the speed bumps were removed in order to catch more speeders. Chief Dawson of the Campus Police laughed when he heard that. "No, we didn't have anything to do with it. I decided which one's to take out, but the order to take them out came from the Chancellor." Chief Dawson said he left the speed bumps in areas of high pedestrian traffic, especially around the residence halls and academic buildings.

Chief Dawson also said the campus police have not issued any more speeding tickets than usual despite the fact that it is now easier to speed through campus.

"The big speeding areas are still Reynolds, Hamilton, and Wagner."

A speeding ticket costs $20 and it is only a campus citation which does not increase a driver's insurance or add points to your license. The money collected from speeding tickets goes to the parking office. Does it go into the same fund that provides money for the addition or removal of speed bumps? No one seemed clear on that. Vice Chancellor Walden said, "I don't really know off the top of my head."

Once recommended by the appropriate body the members are appointed by the Chancellor. A quorum of four students and one faculty is necessary for the hearing to proceed. The Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, William Bryan, advises the CJB. "I advise the board in the procedures involved in any charges that are brought against the students," Bryan said. I am there "to keep things fair," Bryan said he overrules irrelevant questions directed to the defendant.

Veto, Reprimand Tarnish SGA's Service Efforts

BY CAROLE MEHLE
Staff Writer

The Student Government Association has been keeping busy since the school year started. In a new feature in the Seahawk, highlights of the weekly meetings of the SGA Senate will be provided.

The October 5 meeting of the group is included as well as the October 12 meeting.

October 5 SGA Meeting

Executive Reports

Student Body President Joe Mitchell

Mitchell reported to the Senate that the "First Class Absence Policy" has to be approved by Provost Marvin K. Moss and that he would like feedback.

Mitchell also explained in his report why he vetoed a motion that was passed by the Senate concerning money for the Sailing Club to buy new sails for three of their boats.

"The sails are operational supplies," he said.

Mitchell, along with Senior Class President Jennifer LePage reported on the progress of the Senior Class Project. The project will be a walk starting at Randall Library and spanning to Wagoner Hall in the future. The project is that a student or their family buy a brick for the walk that will be placed in the sidewalk. The group is looking into the cost.

Student Services Coordinator Rob Oliver

Oliver reported on his progress on getting day care for on-campus students. He said that the group would have to provide a four-hour service at St. Matthew's Lutheran Church until they could get a license to run a day care center. Oliver added that he would continue his work on this project with Campus Minister Bob Haywood.

Oliver also mentioned a meeting scheduled with Dick Scott,

Vice Chancellor of Business Affairs, to discuss alternative funding for bins for SGA's paper recycling project. Funding for this project was rejected by the Budget and Planning Committee.

Standing Committee Reports

Budget and Planning Committee
Jennifer LePage, Chair

The Budget and Planning Committee as of October 5 had $6250 left to allocate for the semester.

LePage brought a motion to the Senate from the Black Student Leadership Network for funding for a total of $2500 to fund a leadership conference. Half of the money would go to pay Nikki Giovanni, keynote speaker at the conference, which will be held sometime next semester. The other half of the money would go to pay half of the $50 registration fee.

Senator Max Westland objected the motion and the Senate had to debate the motion on the floor.

During this debate, Sophomore Class President Roger Hyman used profane language. Senator Jeff Gurkin moved that Hyman be censured, but it was decided that he would be reprimanded for his profane comments.

Hyman's comments accused the Senate of racial discrimination.

The motion, despite debate, passed in the Senate.

October 12 SGA Meeting

Executive Reports

Student Services Coordinator Rob Oliver

Oliver reported that the organization's project for the needy of the area started last Thursday. The project is accepting food and clothes for distribution to local organizations. Anyone with a donation can bring it to the drop site behind the Information Center in the University Union between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. daily.

Treasurer Kathy Starnes

The SGA budget that is unallocated for the rest of the year stands at $11,954.

The election is less than four weeks away and there are still a lot of questions to be answered by all three candidates for the presidency. The debates are a good forum for the discussion of views and opinions, but the candidates are so rehearsed there is little chance of a major gaffe. The panelists are not asking the questions that need to be asked, and that needs to change.

If the debates were to discuss real issues that people want to know the candidate's answer to, more people would take note. Because the candidates are limited to two minute responses and one minute rebuttals, we are not allowed to get a true perspective of the candidate.

One of the issues that need to be addressed is, "why Gov. Clinton has been 'waffling' on his Viet Nam era activities?" Though what he did then is not an issue, his "waffling" is. He needs to set the record straight, even if it means explaining it in a day-by-day replay. If Gov. Clinton is to be elected president, he needs to set the record straight.

On the subject of "waffling," President Bush needs to explain why he was pro-choice as a Republican presidential candidate in 1980, and was anti-choice as vice-president. To change a view publicly to get a job is waffling to its highest degree. He has already said in this election that he will do whatever it takes to get reelected. President Bush's record should discourage him from making "waffling" an issue in this election.

The character issue is another that has arisen. President Bush maintains a "home" in Texas, his state of legal residency. That "home" is a Houston hotel room. When was the last time he went home to relax? He usually goes to Kennebunkport, Maine, to relax. Texas does not have a state income tax. Could that be the reason President Bush still calls Texas "home"?

The last issue that needs to be cleared up before November 3 is what was President Bush's role in the Iran-contra affair. Alexander Haig said on the "Later" program hosted by Bob Costas that the incident is as big as Watergate. The American people have a right to know what President Bush's role was in that affair. And we need to know before November 3.

These are issues that need to be brought before the candidates in a public forum, no more behind closed door antics. The United States is at a crossroads. Changes need to be made and we need effective leadership. Sound bites and political ads are not going to address these issues. We need the panelists at the debates to ask tough questions of these men, no more generic questioning.

It is getting late in the campaign and there are too many questions about the candidates that need to be answered. The American people deserve that respect.

They Said It

"I don't think that military service one way or another is a definitive character issue on whether you can be a good commander in chief or not."

Dan Quayle

"There are 112 [conflicts] in the world. Thirty-two are major wars. How many can you name? Maybe two or three. Why don't we know about them? They don't have oil. And they're not white folks."

Jimmy Carter

"It was fun watching the reaction of Clinton and Bush after Perot said, yes, he would push for a 50-cent-a-gallon tax over five years. The billions it would bring in would pay for so much of the rebuilding that this country needs. Both acted as if someone had put a dead snake on their dinner plates. They couldn't get away from it fast enough."

Mike Royko, syndicated columnist

"And I think America is seeing right now the reason this nation is in gridlock."

James Stockdale

"I believe that a woman owns her body, and what she does with it is her own business, period."

James Stockdale

"If you don't try to compare George Bush to Harry Truman, I won't compare you to Jack Kennedy."

One Reporter's View of the Big Show

I remember as a child how I use to go to the circus every year, and how much fun it was to watch all of the clowns make such fools of themselves in front of everyone. I was immediately reminded of the old three ring circus as I watched three of the presidential candidates advertise themselves on national television last Sunday evening. It was about the most entertaining media even since the Clarence Thomas Confirmation Hearings.

The "hit" of the night was Texas tycoon H. Ross Perot. According to all of analysts, pollsters, and the boys down at the College Barber Shop (Conservative as they are) Mr. Perot was the overwhelming victor of the hour and a half long fiasco. I also understand that Lorne Michaels has contacted Mr. Perot about playing "himself" on future episodes of Saturday Night Live. That way, Dana Carvey would be free to do "George Bush", and they would not have to resort to the trick cinematography used last week so that he could be both Perot and Bush.

Mr. Perot (by the way, if anyone knows that the "H" stands for, please let me know) did appear as if he were trying out for the Comedy Bowl instead of President of the United States. But hey, you've got to have a sense of humor in that office because you never know when you are gonna throw up on the Japanese Prime Minister and then have to come out with a quick one-liner to play it off. I guess that is what President Bush meant when he spoke of his "experience."

Speaking of our dear Commando-in-Chief, his performance was not rated too highly by any of the liberal news media. To me he appeared to be like the coach who refuses to admit his team is losing the game (by four trillion dollars) at half time, and just keeps on referring to how good he will do in the second half. He single handedly claimed credit for the end of communism (even though in China and Cuba it's still going stronger than the Energizer bunny), the collapse of the Soviet Union, and the discovery of electricity. When Perot insisted that our nation is in "deep doodoo", Bush insisted that there is in fact no "doodoo" to speak of. Evidently he hasn't taken a barefooted walk in the rose garden lately.

Governor Clinton's performance was rated a close second to Perot's by most polls. Most of his points came from his emotionally charged and well planned comebacks to various charges made by Bush. When Bush compared himself to the late George Washington, Clinton was to quick to say, "I knew George Washington, I was a friend of George Washington, and you Mr. Bush are no George Washington." Clinton also played to the hearts of the audience by mentioning something about his wife being a recovering drug addict, that his brother was once an AIDS baby, and that Sunday was somebody's wedding anniversary. Okay, so my note taking skills aren't the best in the world.

The candidates were able to agree on a few issues though. They all felt that no one had the right to rape or kill Kitty Dukakis. They all, including Ross himself, agreed that the cars are just too big, but that Perot would make a cool doll (perhaps Barbie's father). However they could not agree on just how to control college textbook prices, on what to do with students guilty of cheating on Biology 105 exams, nor on how to handle columnists who continually promise to write about summer adventures but never deliver. I can't wait for the next debate; maybe next time, they will invite the Libertarians.

Through the magic of AT&T, I was able to get an exclusive phone interview with former President Jimmy Carter and ask what he thought of the debate. "Well I spoke with my daughter Amy and she advised me that Mr. Perot won and that our guy was a close second. But what do I know, I'm just a poor old peanut farmer from Plains, Georgia (pronounced lawns)." In a similar interview with former President Ronald Reagan, he insisted "Well, I'll tell you like I tell everyone; I don't think Dukakis has a chance against President Ford, and that independent Anderson fellow isn't even a factor." That's politics for this week.

Now friends, it's time for the biweekly "Hats Off" award for someone to deserving. "Hats Off" awards, you will recall, are for people or groups that have done something recently to make my life better. This week's award goes to all my professors (like they really read this), because none of them gave me homework to have to deal with during the fall "vacation" recently experienced by some. It was the first time I have gone four days without touching a book since my fourth birthday. Hats Off to all my profs. (Who says brownnosing is a dead art.)

This week's "Shoes Off" award, for doing things that really stink, is given on behalf of a friend and faithful reader, who we will call Rob. (After all I don't exactly know his last name.) Anyhow, his fiancé recently gave him the shaft and ruined all of his plans for the future, and I think that stinks. Shoes off to Rob's Ex.

I guess that about wraps it up for this week. I hope you all enjoyed a pleasant Fall Break and a Happy Columbus Day. Keep on the lookout for the "What I Did So Great Last Summer" issue; it will come someday. As usual, letters, cards, suggestions and monetary gifts are always welcome. Address them to No Bull Prize winning columnist Phil Smith, care of The Seahawk.

Until next time...keep your mind out of the gutter and your head out of the toilet.

Bob Haywood

The Power of a Single Candle

My memory of Fall Break is dominated by the vision of thousands upon thousands of candles in the streets in front of me, and behind me, and at the end of the procession, gathered in front of the Lincoln Memorial and surrounding the reflecting pool which lay between the Lincoln Memorial and the Washington Monument. Closer to the Washington Monument had lain 20,000 panels of the most recent presentation of the AIDS quilt, each panel representing a loved one lost to the struggle with AIDS. It was the most awesome and poignant "graveyard" that I have been in for years.

We were in Washington over Fall Break with students to experience some of the programs providing food for the homeless and poor of DC and to encounter this tragic dynamic of our nation on a first hand basis. The fact that the AIDS quilt was on display was an added experience that enriched a beautiful fall weekend in DC.

One of the programs in which we were involved was delivering balanced, nutritious meals to people who are terminally ill with AIDS. There are over 200 such persons receiving these meals each day, scattered all over the DC area and served regularly by volunteers like us, but mainly volunteers who take their lunch hours once a week to carry meals to six or eight people whom they are serving or befriending.

All of the food service programs are church based and while reflecting different approaches to the plight of the poor and homeless, were united in their compassion and their commitment to the needs that surround them in DC.

The thing that moved me

besides that candles held over 1,000,000 people were the individuals that I met who had been coming to work in a food service program, some for 16 or 18 years. These folks had found a need, made a choice, and stuck with it week in and week out, year after year. Incredible!

I returned to my life and work here in Wilmington with a conviction renewed that it is important for each person who allows compassion to be any part of their life to choose a cause and a place to make the gift of self, of time and energy in however a limited way it might seem. Martin Luther King once said, "In order to live creatively and meaningfully, self concern must be wedded to other concern." I believe this. When I think about how little I can actually accomplish, it is easy to get discouraged. If the candle that I lit and held high in the darkness was the only candle, it would, likewise, make very limited impact on darkness. But when my single candle was held high in the midst of 100,000 other candles, the impact was incredible and immense and the sense of community was very empowering.

The needs in Wilmington are addressed by Good Shepherd Soup Kitchen, Habitat for Humanity, tutoring programs in great variety and on and on. The need is there. The opportunity to light your candle is present. The difference that you can make when added to all the other individual efforts, is significant and important. The old spiritual says it well: "This little light of mine, I'm gonna let it shine...let it shine, let it shine, let it shine!"

Bob Haywood is the Protestant Campus Minister. His office is located at St. Matthews Lutheran Church, College Rd.

Better Intramural Coverage Wanted

I love playing intramural sports! Last year I played football, volleyball, soccer, basketball, and softball. This year I'm playing flag football, and anything else I can make time for. My priorities of my daily routine are intramurals first, schoolwork second, and being an RA third.

What I want to know is why aren't stats kept for The Seahawk about our games? I don't mean junk stats like wins and losses. I'm talking about real stats like yards rushed, yards passed, 1st downs, and sacks. Alright, maybe I'm asking too much, the Intramural Department can leave off sacks.

We want stats, highlights, and write ups! The Intramural Department needs to get up with The Seahawk and write about how great our intramural teams really are.

Show us our stats and write about our games!

Arts in Action is presenting a display of artwork by Mark David Scott in the Union. The theme is "Dream Crisis," which evokes disturbing images with an air of familiarity about it which seems to summon up the dark side in all of us. Scott cites a full array of inspirations from Walt Disney to graveyards, to fire and toys. A very appropriate showing for the Halloween season. Scott's work will be displayed until Nov. 20th.

WLOZ Can Now Be Heard On Campus

BY SHANNON DAVIS
WLOZ Correspondent

For those of you who still haven't hooked up WLOZ to your stereo, you are in luck, because it is now broadcasting across campus.

Yes! I know you are all very excited. We are too. You are probably wanting to know who you can send thank-you cards to. Well, you can send them to Robyn Marshall, General Manager at WLOZ.

Yes, fellow Seahawks, thanks to Marshall, we can now hear the grungely glorious sounds of WLOZ in both the Union and the Center, including the Hawk's Nest and the Center Stage Cafe. Marshall is also working on plans to have WLOZ installed in the bookstore, Wagoner Hall, the dorms, residential suites and apartments.

This musical transformation of the campus took place over Fall Break while the rest of us were off gallivanting. It took a great effort, but Marshall finally coerced the cable company to bring our campus radio to the students. You should be able to hear WLOZ on any given afternoon or evening. If you don't hear it, ask why.

Remember, it's never too late to hook WLOZ up to your own stereo. Vision Cable will do it for free, with a monthly fee of $1.75.

There are many exciting things going on at WLOZ this year and I'd hate for you to miss out on any of them.

So get hooked up. Get tuned in. And stay tuned on... to WLOZ 89.3 Cable FM.

Notes Form The Margin: Standing Still Under The Strobe Light

BY JEFF NELSON

It is a scant 6 years and some 3 months away. Whether you follow the Judeo-Christian Calendar or mark your calendar starting with the Buddha's birth in 449 B.C.; the eve of a 1,000 years is about to dawn upon our lowered brows.

Imagine the men of a 1,000 years ago; China was close to developing gunpowder, the Roman papacy was struggling to maintain order over a dark and unenlightened Europe. Trobrianders watched the sea and searched for the giant conch and prayed to the God of the sky. If Jimi Hendrix had lived at the turn of the first millennium A.D. he would be a seller of poisons South of Sardinia, moonlighting as a troubadour singing laments to the waning moon.

"The world is not OK."

An utterance from Wim Wenders' 1991 release, Until the End of the World—both an incredibly visual and visionary film. A panoply of culture from the city shadowed purities of Lisbon, Berlin, Paris, Los Angeles and Tokyo, to the vivid scenery of China's lush interior, or the Australian outback, ranging rock formations, grassland plains and a desert oasis. Besides the Ansel Adams's like camera work, Wenders sets the film down to course in the technologically advanced tele-world of 1999, leading an eerie pre-apocalyptic milieu to your television screen.

A well-versed cast act out the extraordinary lives of people on the edge. The film stars William Hurt (Altered States, Body Heat), Max Von Sydow—Hurt's mad scientist father, and Solzweig Demarin as the woman, who, as the narrator attest, "changes the fate of the world."

Don't expect to see any sign of a certain Minneapolis musician or his femme fatale prancing about and partying in purple vinyl and spandex. As any of Wenders' past films have proved: either the very excellent and moving Wings of Desire, or the enigmatic and chilling Paris, Texas; the world is only as small as we ourselves design it to be.

Wenders captures the images of Tokyo at night—all neon lights and video junkie parlor; of a Lisbon cafe, bordered by sunny side streets; of cold and crowded Moscow, blue in the face from too much toilet; of dreams deferred upon the sea-ill screens of the future. The stunning camera work flows continuously along with the story-line, your mind constantly attempting to draw parallels between the colorful travogue and the increasing thickening plot.

Until the End of the World is a quasi sci-fi/detective thriller, that concerns the exploits of a man who has stolen a powerful new invention, a camera of sorts that enables the blind to see, and later, for mankind to watch their dreams materialize. The dreams can be projected onto a tiny hand-held monitor that produces visuals akin to old home movies shot on Super 8, only with more color, and greater risks than the claustrophobia of family reunions.

Wenders takes you around the world in roughly 2 1/2 hours. And in doing so, predicts that the man of the Nineties, like the man of the opium den 4,000 years ago, like the Marquis de Sade's lust for carnal pleasures, like the Spanish Inquisitor's lust for lies, like the characters of 1999 in Until the End of the World, the people of this world will always be caught—whether in a ball of white mass, or a fold of voluptuous flesh, or in the throes of...

North Carolina Writers Extend Invitation To UNCW Students

BY RAMONA HUPP
A & E Editor

The North Carolina Writers Network will hold their conference in Wilmington this year, making it easy for UNCW students to attend. Not only will students benefit from the close proximity, but also from a reduced rate procured by the university, which is co-sponsoring the event.

This year's conference theme is "Writing Across the Borders" and will be held November 6-8 at the Hilton.

There will be three days of activities designed to introduce, enlighten, and encourage area writers of all levels. Several different sessions—from screenwriting to technical writing—will be offered, with a plethora of established writers, including several UNCW professors, sharing their successes, mistakes and experiences with the audience.

Each author will lead a workshop session in their particular genre. For example, Carolyn Forché, whose first book of poetry, Gathering the Tribes, won the Yale Younger Poets Award, will teach a Master class on poetry. (The master classes, one offered in each of the main workshop categories, are intended for experienced writers only.)

Linda Beatrice Brown, a renowned area speaker and leader, will conduct a workshop in the fiction category.

John Kessel, noted author, will be talking about his favorite genre—science fiction.

And the list goes on... There will be 33 writers in total leading discussions in such disparate categories as nonfiction, broadcast fiction and multi-genre, and many more.

The North Carolina Writers Network (NCWN) has been servicing area authors for several years now, assisting with programs and workshops that serve writers and readers alike. The network also offers contests, newsletters, a critiquing service and Outreach Programs. To partake of NCWN's many services and privileges the annual fee is $25.

The cost for the three day event for UNCW students is as follows: $25 for all conference events except meals.

$65 for all conference events including Saturday lunch and evening banquet, and Sunday brunch. $25 for sessions plus member rate for a particular meal or meals.

If you are not a UNCW student the cost for full conference fee is $95 for members ($110 for non-members). (Full conference fee includes all workshop sessions and readings, plus three meals: Saturday lunch and dinner and Sunday brunch.)

Partial conference options are also available should you wish to attend only a portion of the activities.

There will also be a Friday night reading open to the general public for $10. (The cost of the Friday night reading will be included in your conference rate.)

A conference brochure can be found on the creative writing bulletin board directly across from Professor Gerard's office (Morton Hall 160). Registration forms can be obtained from the plastic rack also located outside Gerard's office. The forms need to be sent directly to NCWN as soon as possible in order to secure yourself a spot for the session(s) you're interested in.

This year's conference looks to be a banner year, and has assembled quite a cast of writers. The opportunity should not be missed.

PERFECT POSTURE

24 Hours a Day

It's true that good posture is a reflection of the way we look and feel about ourselves, but it's more than that—much more. Good posture is one of the simplest things each of us can do to prevent muscle pain, stiffness, and tension as well as back "aches," pain, and injury. Good posture is actually quite simple—it means keeping the three natural curves of your spine balanced while standing, sitting, and lying down.

Standing

Contrary to what many of us were taught, good posture does not mean standing with shoulders thrust back, chin forward, and straight as an arrow. Actually, you're using good standing posture when your ears, shoulders, hips, knees, and ankles are "stacked" in a straight line. (Note: Your shoulders should be relaxed and your knees slightly bent.)

Sitting

While sitting, you can keep your spine balanced by again "stacking" ears over shoulders and shoulders over hips. To prevent lower back strain, place a lumbar roll (or rolled-up towel or sweater) between your lower back and the back of your chair. Keep your buttocks resting against the chair back, and if your feet don't reach the floor, rest them on a footstool or box.

Lying Down

When lying down or sleeping, try resting on your side in a modified "fetal" position (knees slightly bent toward chest) or on your back with a pillow placed beneath your knees. Sleeping with more than one pillow under your head can exaggerate your cervical (neck) curve and can place undue stress on your lower back. Choose a firm mattress for adequate back support.

Intramural Sports

On October 6th, the Outlaws and Graham Hall battled it out in one of this year's best flag football games with the Hall pulling out the victory in an 8-14 shocker. The Outlaws (3-2) are playoff bound and were favored going into the game against their opponent (1-4 overall). While the Fraternity and Gold leagues wrap up their seasons, the Green and Blue leagues will begin the eight team playoff tournament on October 20th. Good luck to all eight teams!

The Spikefest Doubles Tournament was postponed until the 17th of October. There will be six divisions, so come by the office in Hanover hall and register. The divisions will be: Men's Open, Women's Open, Men's A, Women's A, Men's B, and Women's B. The deadline for registering is October 16 at 4:00 p.m.!

The roar of the motor, then the rush of the tow line as the boat powers ahead, and finally the pump of adrenaline as the skier is snapped forward by the force of the speeding vessel. This is only the beginning of a wet and wild ride that looks smooth under the practiced balance of an experienced waterskier. This is the UNCW Cood Waterski Club. A relatively new organization to UNCW, the club has a membership of 20 people, 10 of which have competed in 4 waterski tournaments so far this year. Each tournament consists of three events. The power of the slalom, the excitement of the trick event, and the high flying jump event. They are presently finished with their season, but will compete again in the spring. They expect to do well with their top skiers, Dennis Smith, Michael Pittmann, and Greg Austin returning to compete. If you want to get involved with the UNCW Cood Waterski Club you can call Dennis Smith at 256-2605.

Men's Ultimate finished 2nd place this past weekend in Club Sectionals. The Women's Ultimate Club finished 3rd. Congratulations to both teams! For more information on Men's or Women's Ultimate, call Nick Myers at 392-6198 or Susan Turner at 799-5706.

Just the other day some friends and I were sitting around discussing the upcoming basketball season. Starting from the Pro's our conversation managed to work its way around to the college level.

Our conversation led us to one central issue, what elements does UNCW need to thrust them into the upper echelon of the CAA and higher in the ranks of NCAA?

Not only did we narrow it to a few items, we have a way to obtain them. In a recession you can be amazed in what you can find in the want-ads.

Supportive Fans

Successful members will have a firm grasp of crowdphonics, functions and purposes. Wild, rany and totally self-motivated applicants only. Must have ideas ready and running by Nov.1.

Volleyball Team Sweeps Charleston Southern

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

The Lady Seahawks remain perfect at home this season, with an impressive showing over the Lady Buccaneers of Charleston Southern.

Charleston Southern, rode in to Trask Coliseum on a wave of wins. After winning seven of the last eight, Charleston Southern hoped to continue its winning streak on UNCW's home turf.

The Lady Seahawks' had other plans for Charleston Southern. With good solid team efforts on each play on the ball, UNCW quickly ended game one 15-5.

In game two, UNCW let a four point lead slip away early in the match, but manage to keep constant pressure on the Lady Buccaneers to go up on the Bucks... 2-0 with a 15-10 game two victory.

Game three was a bit closer than the previous two. The teams exchanged serves. With the teams tied at 18, Coach McDaniel called a time out to refocus the concentration of her players.

"You have got to want it," is how Coach McDaniel started her instructions in the time out.

The team proved their want in an impressive manner by overcoming Charleston Southern for a three game sweep.

Junior, Amy Beth Chilauksy, had yet another outstanding game for the seahawks posting 11 kills and 5 block solos.

The 10-12 Seahawks are home for five games. Next Monday the 19th the team will play Charleston followed by St. Andrews on Tuesday the 20th.

Despite Loss UNCW Has Good Showing

BY ERIC TOTTEN
Sports Writer

The 2-5-0 UNCW Men's Soccer team played 7-3-2 William and Mary on Saturday Oct. 3.

The first period was very close with the only goal coming 11 minutes and 50 seconds into the match off a hard shot by Eric Dumbleton of William and Mary.

Wilmington played aggressive offense the second period but William and Mary's quickness on defense held until William and Mary put it away with their second goal off

Despite the 2-0 loss, Coach Blackmore was pleased with his team's performance. On the heels of their upset of N.C. State Blackmore thought the team continued improving.

"With players coming back after being injured, I think we will be a very competitive team for the rest of the season," Blackmore said. UNCW's next home soccer game will be Saturday Oct. 17th.

UNCW Students Visit County Fairgrounds

BY LAURA KEETER
Staff Writer

Many UNCW students attended The New Hanover County Fair that was held last week and will continue until this Sunday.

Bubba Tritt, who's worked the Casino ride for five years, said, "there's been a few" UNCW students at the New Hanover County Fair this year. "A lot's probably bungee jumped."

Bungee jumping is an event soaring in popularity at fairs this year. Leland Musquire, one of the owners of the fair's bungee jump, said, "We hit some towns with colleges and it seems to go over real well."

The attraction college students have for bungee jumping is "basically...the unknown" Musquire said. "What's it like to fall 100 stories and not get hurt?" he asked.

I can answer that. Musquire weighed me, strapped me in bungee anklets, and rode with me up the 100 feet to the top of the crane. A crowd gathered and the World's Largest Maze next door blared "Jump," by Kriss Kross.

I was too scared to lean forwards and "just fall," so Musquire told me to fall backwards. "It's not as scary," he said. Before I knew it I'd fallen back into a feather mattress of cool night air, and couldn't even conceptualize falling until all of a sudden I was upside-down bouncing. And bouncing. And bouncing.

Back on the ground, I laughed hysterically and felt as if I'd been in a dream. Musquire later smiled and said, "I told you it's not as scary--but it is. Psychology plays the biggest part of what we do."

The huge air bag underneath the crane and the professional crew, wearing wind suits and headgear, part-time stunt men, also play a big part in the trusting process. They try to relieve fear and doubt by also telling people their year and a half record of 1200 jumps. "We've never had an accident," owner Bryan Pecof said. On the platform, I repeatedly asked about heart attacks.

"You have endorphins in your body which are 10 times more powerful than morphine, and they kick in when you bungee jump," Pecof said. "It's just a total natural high."

For UNCW students who want such a natural high, the crew is extending a $3 discount off the $35 cost to those who mention this article, and preferably bring college ID.

But for students who prefer the two-minute rush of the Octopus, as opposed to the two-hour rush after bungee jumping, the New Hanover County Fair still offers a lot.

The massive Graviton, Zipper, and Terminator twist or spin cars upside-down for the iron-stomach. The Sea Ray pirate ship plays "Bound for More" by Ratt while rocking its victims. "The rides were pretty good," senior Michael Williams said.

Texas Chili, Genuine Italian Sausage, and Funnel dough also wait for the iron-stomach. The smells of the food mix with cotton candy and hay, smells which "remind you you're at the fair," Williams said.

Traditional rides, foods, and fair activities also remind students they're at the fair. A double-wheeled Ferris wheel gives riders a great aerial view of

Patterson Named Vice Chancellor

UNCW NEWS

At its regular meeting in Chapel Hill this morning, the Board of Governors of the University of North Carolina approved the request by the UNC Wilmington for a title change to add a fifth vice chancellorship. The action changes the title of Jane Smith Patterson from Director of the Division for Public Service to vice chancellor for public service and extended education. Her salary and the position's salary range remain the same.

In requesting this action, UNCW Chancellor James R. Lutz explained that a major component of the university's mission of public service. The Division for Public Service is charged with taking the lead in fulfilling the public service commitment to the region and state.

The division, primarily funded by receipts from non-credit and non-degree extension programs, is also involved in the development of advanced educational technologies, regional economic development activities, and special cultural events. During 1991-92, the Division for Public Service registered 17,884 participants in 422 programs.

As director for the division, Patterson already performs work on the level of a vice chancellor and reports directly to the chancellor.

A native of Tabor City, Patterson came to UNCW in February 1991. She served as interim vice chancellor for university advancement until July 1, when she became director of

Career Day Offers A Chance For Jobs And Information Exchanges

BY CAROLE MENHE
Staff Writer

Career Day '92 is coming on Wednesday, October 28, to Trask Coliseum from 10:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m.

The main purpose for Career Day is not for job interviews, but for students to get information about employment prospects and for employers to size up prospective employees.

Some of the participants in the event are graduate schools; federal, state, and local government agencies; from retail and industrial programs.

Cathy Olson, assistant director of the Career Planning and Placement Center, said the reason that graduate programs are invited is that some careers do not start with an undergraduate degree, such as law or social work.

"They (graduate schools) want to select good candidates to come to their school. They may see the opportunity to entice good students to come to their school. Some students anticipate going to graduate school and this saves them a visit to the school."

Freshman, sophomores, juniors, and seniors are encouraged to attend, as well as faculty and staff. Olson said this is so students can develop a network of contacts and determine exactly what career they want to pursue. Students can also prepare for careers when they are freshmen. Student can prepare themselves for competition in the job market by investigating the grade point average needed to work for a company.

Olson said there are about 69 participants and that she is expecting three more to join in. If those three join in, that will make 72--last year's number. "That's a fairly significant number. I'm happy with it."

Some of the participants are: the Peace Corps, the Internal Revenue Service; the Employment Security Commission; North Carolina Highway Patrol; UNCW Human Resources Department; Foot Locker; K-mart Fashions; Corning; Appalachian State University; North Carolina Central University School of Law; North Carolina State University; the Armed Services;

Dr. B. Frank Hall Memorialized with Display

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

Two display cases in the University Center lobby were dedicated Tuesday in a ceremony honoring former UNCW instructor Dr. B. Frank Hall. Attending the ceremony were Adelaide P. Hall, widow of Dr. Hall, Dr. William Wagoner, Chancellor Emeritus, Mr. William Anyan, Vice Chancellor for University Advancement, Dr. Gerald Shinn, Director of the UNCW Museum of World Cultures, and Friends of UNCW, among others.

Mr. Anyan dedicated the display cases which will house artifacts and treasures from the UNCW Museum of World Cultures. Currently, the display contains the collections of Dr. B. Frank Hall and Dr. Bernard Boyd.

Dr. Hall, a Wilmington native, led an active life as a minister, professor, and columnist. He founded the Department of Philosophy and Religion at UNCW in 1963 and served as department chair for the first 12 years. During the early years of the department, he was the only faculty.

Dr. Wagoner told a story about how he was calling all department heads for their opinions on a policy. He wanted the department heads to confer with their staffs and get back to him.

When Dr. Wagoner asked Dr. Hall to do that once, Dr. Hall didn't say anything for a few seconds then said, "We have just met and we agree (or disagree)."

Dr. Hall was awarded the first UNCW Board of Trustees' Teaching Excellence Award in 1978. In 1986 the UNCW Alumni Association recognized his exceptional service to the Wilmington community and his inspiration as a pastor with their Distinguished Citizen Award.

Ms. Susan Collins, President of the Friends of UNCW, said the display cases were made possible from donations to the Dr. B. Frank Hall Memorial fund. Contributions in the form of artifacts and money were given so that they may be put to use by the Friends of UNCW to continue the teaching legacy of Dr. Hall.

Dr. Shinn said, "This is the only museum-style display case in the country that is displayed in a university center. The rest are in the department buildings, where no one ever goes to see them."

The University Center lobby was chosen for its location and heavy student traffic, Ms. Collins said.

Dr. Shinn also said the display case contents would be rotated periodically.

One of the prized objects in the collection on display is the, according to Dr. Shinn, "Playmate of the Year 2000 B.C." She is Anath, the goddess of fertility. She was found during an excavation in Beirut.

Dr. Shinn also stated that the collection on display is one of only a handful across the country that features both the god and goddess of fertility from the Canaanite tribe.

Cheating Scandal

Part III

BY EDWARD MOSELEY
Staff Writer

The Dean of Students Office oversees the process of Academic Honor Code violations, investigations and determines guilt or innocence.

Once the process is complete, however, what is the impact on a student during completion of college and after graduation?

The Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA) protects student records. FERPA generally requires written consent of the person concerned before personally identifiable information is released.

There are times this information can be disclosed without written consent. For example, information may be disclosed within the institution if it is for "legitimate educational interests."

Appendix A-III of the Student Handbook and Code of Student Life is a general statement of FERPA principle.

Appendix A-III says disciplinary information can only be released with the "express consent of the student involved."

Legal means or safety needs may override this requirement.

To further protect student records they are kept in separate places. Disciplinary records are with the Dean of Students and academic records are with the Registrar's Office.

James Braye, director of the Career Planning and Placement Center said, "This office does not receive punitive information or disciplinary records. We're not concerned with it. We try to keep that from being pivotal in your life."

Disciplinary records are not held with CPCC, but not consenting to release information to an employer may have a negative effect.

This often depends on individual employers, institutions, and organizations.

Paul Eaglin, Special Assistant for Legal Affairs said, "A student might be required by a school or employer to look into certain aspects of their records. Especially where trust is an issue."

It would be monetarily prohibitive for an employer to have to find the information.

If a student does not voluntarily release disciplinary records the employer may take the next applicant.

Candidates Spar In Final Debate

BY AMY BRENNAN
Staff Writer

The big bombshell the Republicans were hoping for in Monday night's debate didn't happen? The 15-18 point lead Gov. Clinton had over Pres. Bush going into the third debate may have widened even further.

Monday's debate was the most heated of the three debates. Bush saved his best performance for last, but it may not have been good enough.

Bush repeated his strategy of the second debate and attacked Clinton's record in Arkansas, saying that he "would do to the United States what he's done to Arkansas."

Clinton responded by saying, "We're a low-spending, low tax burden state. We dramatically increased investment and our jobs are growing. I wish America had that record."

In the next two weeks, Bush will make a last effort to save his presidency. $25 million worth of TV ads will air attacking Clinton on taxes and trust.

But that was okay. "I needed to get away from the stress of school," she said. "It was fun to laugh." Students can still experience the New Hanover County Fair, located on Carolina Beach Road, through this Sunday.

128 Bikes In Police Auction

BY JULIE PODLASEK
Staff Writer

On Saturday, Oct. 24, at 9:00 a.m. the campus police will be auctioning off 128 bicycles. These bikes have either been stolen and recovered or abandoned on campus and stored by the police department for safe keeping.

The bicycles are among the many items to be auctioned off on Police Drive, behind the UNCW campus police buildings. Various other merchandise includes an AM/FM radio, glasses, book bags and contents, assorted books, a surfboard, watches, and jewelry.

People interested in buying items may look at them prior to the sale from 7:00 a.m. The prices will range anywhere from $5 to $95 to the highest bidder, unless the item is claimed before the auction.

Lt. Charlie Willis said that most of the property to be auctioned off was collected at the end of last semester when students failed to obtain the merchandise before leaving the university.

Is There Life Beyond Wrightsville Beach?

Now is your chance. Did you know that you can study in England without paying any additional tuition? That your credit hours earned transfer to UNCW and that specific courses can substitute for UNCW courses? Yes, it is all possible. Interested? Read on.

I was approached recently, while working in Cameron Hall, by a business woman noticing my English accent, we got to talking about student exchange. It transpired that while at university some years earlier she had heard about student exchange. She and many of her friends discussed the opportunity but never quite got around to doing anything about it. Now, ten years later, she says "It's the biggest mistake of my life."

Why should this be so? Well, let's think about this for a moment. She is now a sales representative with more opportunities to travel than most business people. She travels the length and breadth of eastern North Carolina. Yes, from Raleigh to Wilmington, from Greensboro to Greenville. She has the opportunity to see quite a bit of eastern North Carolina. Once you get locked into a career with two weeks annual vacation, and then marriage, and then children, you may also regret not making the most of your opportunities now.

Many young people convince themselves that they can take some time out between graduation and starting work. However, the realities of the financial position of most students prevents this. The need to commence a career and start earning serious money becomes paramount. Incidentally, a year's study abroad will be of interest to many employers.

So how does student exchange work? De Montfort University (DMU) in Leicester, England, sends students to UNCW, and UNCW students go to Leicester. You pay your tuition fees to UNCW as normal, accommodation fees are paid to Leicester. Additional costs are air fare and insurance. You will also need some additional funds for sightseeing and travelling. The exchange has to be for a full year.

Leicester is 100 miles directly north of London in the region known as the Midlands. London is just over one hour away by train and Stratford-upon-Avon, Oxford, Cambridge, and Birmingham are between a 45 and 90 minute drive away. Leicester is an ideal location for seeing the country.

Credit hours earned at De Montfort transfer back to UNCW. In addition, specific DMU courses may substitute for UNCW courses if approval is given by the department before you leave. The best approach is to consider what you need to take to pursue your desired major, then check through the DMU catalogue to see if you can match courses to your desired program. Discuss the alternatives with your advisor and/or chairperson.

The courses available are in Business, Computing, Math, Physical Sciences, Languages, Psychology, English, History, Politics, and the visual and performing arts.

Probably the best years to take at DMU would be your sophomore or junior years. Even so, if you have just arrived as a freshman at UNCW, now is the time to start planning. It is possible to take your senior year at DMU, but a little more consultation with your department will be necessary.

Whether you are thinking about August 1993, or the year after, you should start planning now. An open meeting will be held on Wednesday, November 11, at 4 p.m. in Cameron 214. It will be repeated on Tuesday, November 17, at 7:30 p.m. in Cameron 214. Come by and meet the organizers and some of the English students now studying at UNCW. More information on the exchange program and courses is available from the Office of International Programs, University Union 103, telephone number 395-3685.

There is life beyond Wrightsville Beach. A year studying in England will result in new friendships and a cultural and professional experience never to be forgotten.

Bob Hartley is a visiting faculty member from De Montfort University, teaching in the Department of Management and Marketing.

Seniors Have To Pay Way Too Much To Graduate

Those seniors graduating in May came up against one of their first "real life" encounters last week.

Each and everyone of them had to pay a $50 fee to obtain a graduation application. Now kids, my question is, "What the heck for?" Is it not enough that we have paid a great sum to attend this university for the last four or so years? Wouldn't it be a fair trade to say, "We pay you to teach us for four years and you don't charge us anything to leave." Sounds fair to me.

But oh no, my silly children.

When the registrar's office was asked what this money was going to pay for (perhaps a trip to the Bahamas) they replied, "your gowns, diplomas, and the refreshments served in the individual departments afterward." Since when does Apple Annie's charge so much to make a cake?

The $50 is a large increase from last year's $35. The economy is bad, but come on. Graduation gown companies are hardly hurting. Somebody graduates every year.

The students, if anything, should be compensated for missing out on some of the experiences our brethren and sisterhood get to enjoy. Do we have a varsity football team? Greek Row on campus? Stadium? Marching band? A Health and Wellness Center that doesn't say you're parking? NO!

O.K., we have the beach, the battleship, and Mallock.

We pay the same amount of tuition as the other NC-system schools, but we pay more than some to graduate. What's wrong with this picture?

UNCW needs to send a letter to all seniors explaining exactly how each and every cent of that $50 is being used. It just seems like an awfully exorbitant amount to ask from so many seniors.

Now if the administration is planning a big senior party or other surprise then The Seahawk wholeheartedly apologizes.

Joy is One Of Our Best Inner Values

How good it is to laugh and feel the release that laughter brings. It is all too easy to get caught up in taking ourselves and all the heavy issues in our life so seriously that we lose the capacity for humor.

Laughter springs from one of two wellsprings in our lives - pleasure and joy, wellsprings which are quite distinct. Pleasure comes from all that we find in our world that appeals, that gives content to that illusive experience that we call "happiness." Think of all the places you'd like being, people you want to be with, activities that touch your senses of pleasure.

How do you play? When and where does the child in you get loose and "play ball" or "get hugged" or wander in the secret garden of your imaginations? We all like feeling good and spend a good deal of time figuring out with whom and at which point we can move into our environment in such a way that has the best chance of producing pleasure.

We seek a career that seeks pleasure. We look for relationships that do the same. Some of us even determine that a certain lifestyle or position in life will bring pleasure and therefore we work to those ends.

There's another wellspring of laughter that holds more promise, I believe, it is joy. Joy comes from within, rather than from without. Joy is the happiness of love, a deep inner feeling that can fill our being even in the midst of personal suffering; yep! even when we are in pain.

Joy emerges as we live in congruence with our deepest internal values. For me that means living lovingly, or to put it in other terms, to live under the heart of God.

Joy, then, has little to do with external world measured in terms of lifestyle, or affluence, or success. It has everything to do with discovering our deepest selves with all our yearnings and strivings, hopes, and dreams, fears and frustrations, and being true to that self. If we are true to our God-gifted self, we will know joy even if the outward course of events brings suffering, opposition, or injustice to our lives.

Even if the world seems to conspire to deny is pleasure, we still can live with much joy. I've known many who lack joy and seek frantically to fill that void with the pursuit pleasure. Much of partying, much of sexual activity seems to have that kind of franticness that speaks clearly of a lack of joy. Those others that have discovered the kind of loving that balances the needs of self with the needs of others also discover that a wellspring of joy that, no matter what the external circumstances, allows a smile, a sense of delight, a freedom to appreciate the smallest gifts and insights. We could all move beyond our search for pleasure into the deeper, more sustaining experience of joy.

Bob Haywood is the Protestant Campus Minister. His office is located at St. Matthews Lutheran Church, College Rd.

...Continuing Election Coverage

Well sportsfans, the election is less than two weeks away and time is ticking away in the ongoing race for the much coveted White House. I really don't understand all the fuss over one house. It is, after all, quite an old house, and several families have moved in and out over the years. It comes with a standard four-year lease (unless your name is Nixon), a beautiful rose garden, and a nicer dog house than Jim and Tammy Bakker had. The house isn't in the best section of town either, there are homeless people, unemployed people, drug addicts, and the like which "live" on the very same street as the White House. I wonder what that does for the resale value? Oh well, it isn't Kennesawport, but I guess it will do for a president.

Meanwhile, NoBull Prize winning election coverage continues...

Did you see that Vice-Presidential debate? The whole time I watched it (or at least when I wasn't on the floor laughing) I kept waiting for one of the characters to scream, "Live from New York, it's Saturday Night!" Honestly, I don't think Saturday Night Live could have done a better job with the debate/shouting match/mud sling/bearing aid demonstration. My time would have been better spent watching reruns of Rhoda.

It was estimated by some experts that Vice President Dan Quayle had a minimum of three heart attacks, two strokes, and a sudden attack of constipation (followed by a resurgence of his chronic case of diarrhea of the mouth). Democratic VP candidate Al Gore sounded like one of those little dolls that repeats, "Bill Clinton and I..." or "There you go again Dan..." or "Come on Dan, repeat after me..." At least he did not have that sudden attack of senile dementia as Ross Perot's VP candidate Admiral Stockdale (or was it Admiral Dimmsdale??).

Now I'm not the only one to go around blasting war veterans and high ranking military officials (Campus Rental cops maybe, but never high ranking military officials) or anything like that, but let's look at this. The poor fellow couldn't hardly get out a complete sentence, let alone a complete, semi-coherent thought. I realize that he and Perot are running on the "We are not filthy, lying, cheating, and otherwise distasteful politicians" platform, but they have got to be able to carry on a functional conversation with world leaders like Moashbar Quadraffi, Fidel Castro, and our very own Saddam Hussein.

One of the many tense moments in the debate was when Quayle accused Gore of "pulling a Clinton," which he defined as, "saying one thing one day to one group of people and then saying a different thing to another group of people." For a brief moment, I thought Gore was going to lash back and accuse Quayle of pulling a "BUSH," which is defined as "saying 'Read my lips, no new taxes' before an election, and then raising taxes soon after inauguration." Instead Gore merely mentioned something about Quayle cooking waffles, or something like that. Admiral Stockdale was unable to comment on the issue as his hearing aid was turned down at the time. He did get it on line in time to be told he was in fact at the 1992 Vice-Presidential Debate.

Moving on, we find ourselves at the most recent Presidential debate. I missed most of the second one and haven't had time to watch the tape. I hear it was boringly devoid of all of the good mudslinging attacks that presidential debates are known for, so we won't worry about it. Anyhow, I did get to see the debate Monday night, when the moderator encouraged the candidates to comment on each other. And comment they did.

Mr. Bush made it clear that he wished "certain Democratic candidates would admit their mistakes" like he has. Of course he followed that up with a full evening of admitted mistakes (four years worth to be precise) and seemed somewhat proud of each one.

He referred to environmentalists as "the spotted owl crowd," and I was immediately reminded of the time I played a spotted owl in a kindergarten play. But WHOOO cares about the spotted owl anyway? There's no money in them, so why bother? Perhaps if Saddam Hussein invades spotted owl territory we'll march in and save them from extinction.

When questioned on the economy, the President referred to a "Global Slowdown." I contacted NASA, NOAA, the National Weather service, and the producers of Globe Watch, but no one seemed to know anything about any slowdown associated with the Earth's rotation. If there were in fact a rotational slowdown though, I'm sure it could be blamed on the evil congress that somehow gets elected every few years.

Meanwhile, Ross Perot had his gold-plated stopwatch out during each exchange between Bush and Clinton. At one point he became "teed off" because the other two candidates had received 17.4 milliseconds more than he had received for one question. He immediately threatened to buy the remainder of the debate time and start with the flow charts again. Perot was much more critical of the other two candidates this time around. He once accused President Bush of coddling (or maybe it was fondling) Saddam Hussein and Manuel Noriega. He also told Clinton that the measly little state of Arkansas isn't worth the ink to print it on the map and that being a successful governor of such a state for twelve years was "totally irrelevant." I personally found it interesting that both Bush and Clinton seemed afraid to look at, speak to, comment on, or disagree with Mr. Perot. Maybe they were afraid he would "pull a Perot," which is defined as "having the guts to stand up to an establishment that hasn't ever been challenged." Food for thought.

Well friends, my fingers are tired of typing and you are probably tired of reading. There are no "Hats Off" or "Shoes Off" awards this week because I really haven't time to care. Look for them next week, along with continuing election coverage. I promise it will be over soon and maybe someday I'll run the "What In The World Did Phil Do This Summer" issue.

Until next time...keep your mind out of the gutter and your head out of the toilet.

Phil Smith is a regular columnist for The Seahawk.

Make sure you vote Nov. 3

Letter To The Editor

What Choice?

I am having trouble understanding why we are voting in November. In my opinion we don't need to be given a choice. The answer is evident, although indirectly it is clear. George Bush, the "Environmental President," by his title should be the choice; but in being so named, he is somewhat hypocritical. This is all, of course, my opinion. Sen. Al Gore has a track record which heavily leans toward the environmental problems of our day and their solutions. Unfortunately, he is not running for president. Maybe he will be able to influence his presidential running mate on some key issues.

I believe Thomas Jefferson once said (and please correct me Dr. Shim if I am wrong) to vote for the person who seems to agree with your ideals the most. For me Al Gore is the best choice, but we must all look at our own choice and decide if he or she is really the choice to make.

Student Government Association Fails Effectiveness Test

One might think that Student Government is not a real government. Boy are they wrong. The Student Government is acting like a real government more and more as time goes by.

SGA's current term started with a messy hearing process when President, Joe Mitchell, was disqualified for breaking Election Board Guidelines during the Spring elections. The Election Board had two hearings that found Mitchell guilty of wrongdoing. Mitchell took the case to the Senate. They overturned the Board's two previous verdicts and Mitchell got the office.

There are two other cases that display that there is some indecisiveness on the part of SGA. Three weeks ago the Senate ruled to give the Sailing Club money to purchase new sails, after promising them the money last year when they got three new sails. Mitchell vetoed this action as reported in the Oct. 15 edition of The Seahawk.

This time, when they had to vote on whether to override the veto during their Oct. 12 meeting,

Westland said that his actions were to make the Senators carefully consider what they were voting on, it was not meant to be discriminatory.

the Senate stuck with what they had originally decided—after some heated debate on whether to even consider the veto. This left some of the Senators who are still unfamiliar with how the body operates more than a little confused. Even some of the Senators who are familiar with procedures were confused.

It was also at this meeting that the Senators were faced with another sticky situation. The Black Student Leadership Network came before the Senate for consideration for special funding amounting $2500. Senator, Max Westland, objected to the motion, which meant that the Senate had to veto once again whether to hear the motion. At this point, Sophomore Class President Roger Hyman, said that anytime minority organizations come before the Senate for funding, it is faced with reactions like that of Senator Westland.

Hyman said the body was discriminatory one. Hyman was slated to receive a public reprimand for using profane language on the Senate floor. That reprimand is still coming and according to one of the Executive Board members, it probably never will come. The reason? No one has the guts to because of the discrimination charges Hyman made.

Westland said that his actions were to make Senators carefully consider what they were voting on, it was not meant to be discriminatory.

And Westland did just—he made the Senators carefully consider the motion on the floor.

Though it was a heated battle, the motion passed and BSLN received funding for a conference that will take place on campus next semester. $2500 gone. But at least it was not in the blink of an eye.

Another motion on which the SGA Senate changed a decision was one that was hastily made and improperly filed. The Historical Society asked for an extension on paying their Minimum Revenue Requirement payment (MRR). This is a payment all clubs funded by Student Government must pay to prove they are worthy of receiving SGA's financial support. These dates are well known and they must be met to avoid penalty. Under no circumstances are these to be delayed—unless the Senate sympathizes with your club.

By passing this motion, SGA had to suspend the Budget and Planning Committee's operating rules. The BPC is a standing committee that SGA formed to handle financial matters. "Suspend" mean ignore, take into one's own hands. And that is what they did.

On Oct. 12, SGA blindly voted to ignore rules and grant a two week extension. That decision was overturned Oct. 19. The Senate got a chance to change its mind because it didn't get it right the first time. Only two weeks before, this same group was charged by Westland of not thinking through issues.

Westland's word to the Senators must have gone in one ear and out the other as they changed their minds. He wanted them to think they wanted to be out of the 6pm meeting by 7pm.

This is the Senate, who in between the nine noise disruptions during the Oct. 19 meeting saw their own inefficiency as a governing body. A bond, clueless body—more concerned with getting out of a meeting in an hour rather than with the students they have been charged to serve.

One of the Senators during a one minute speech to the Senate said that the conduct of the Senators has been "childish." Another Senator suggested that they make sure and investigate issues before voting. That was followed by a lesson in tabling a motion, which means to put it off.

What does Westland have to say about this? He charged his fellow Senators to ask questions, find out information, and take it upon themselves to find out what the student think.

That is what the Senate needs to do. Table motions, investigate them, serve the students who put them where they are.

The Senators need take more than one hour a week to do it. Or else they will be ineffective...just like the real government.

IDEAS.....

It has been proposed that the University require that students have the option to take a class which is based on Multi-Culturalism. The class will count towards basic studies requirements.

SGA is looking into whether or not there should be pass or fail credit given to students when they take a course.

Let SGA know how you feel about all of this. The student grievance board is investigating these ideas.

!!STRESS!!

Stress is our body's reaction to change. Everytime we experience a new situation our bodies produce more adrenaline (a stimulant) which gives us extra energy to deal with the challenge at hand. This energy is "fueled" by the nutrients we store from the foods we eat. Too much stress can drain our supplies of nutrients, leaving us with little or no fuel for our energy needs. This can result in feelings of weakness, fatigue, and yes-more stress! The key to eating for less stress is to avoid foods that aggravate our stress response, and to increase our bodies' store of the nutrients we need to handle stressful situations. It's a good idea to follow these guidelines to reduce stress:

- Limit caffeine and alcohol
- Eat Vitamin C-Rich Foods
- Eat Protein and Complex Carbohydrates.

What you eat can affect how you feel. By following these nutritional tips for stress management, you'll be helping your body to handle stress more effectively, and you'll also be improving your nutritional health in general.

Riding at a gallop or at a trot, the feeling of being in harmony with a horse while traveling down a trail in the countryside is a special experience. A group of people who love this feeling have formed the UNCW Equestrian Club. The club now has 15 members who strongly encourage you to come visit the Cape Fear Equestrian Center in Pender County. There are 10 horses and a certified riding instructor presently at the Pender County site. The Equestrian club is trying to set up a riding school for new riders. So now that it's sort of uncomfortable to get a tan at the beach in this weather, you might want to check out the UNCW Equestrian Club and the Cape Fear Equestrian Center for horseback riding. THE Gutter

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

In this election year with many voters demanding change in the inefficiency of the status quo, I feel that UNCW, should adhere with the feelings of the nation today. Athletic Director Miller, and Chancellor Leutze remove Sammy Seahawk from his current position and start the slow gradual change toward prosperity. A change that is in the hearts of the American people and students at UNCW will escort in a era of long sought after change in the existing situation.

UNCW is in a recession and like this great nation of ours, it too has a debt. This is the debt it owes it self to implement change in any area, that can distance itself from an unlucky mascot.

Can we afford four more years of the same Seahawk? I say no!!!

In November, as we change leaders, let us follow suit and change the name to "Hawks", and start a new tradition.

"Why do you ask for such a change Mr. Sports Editor you ask?" The answer is simple. Sammy Seahawk is out of touch with the changing UNCW campus.

UNCW is on the rise in the world of academia. In the last couple of years there have been some drastic improvements in the quality of students that have chosen UNCW.

During all of this change we managed to slip in a new color and a new logo into the Colonial Athletic Association (CAA).

Amongst all of this change I would like to ask one simple question. Why did we not change the mascot all together? A change to a mascot that would command respect from the tongues of all who would.

Imagine if you will, Trask Coliseum filled well beyond capacity for lot to ask for but I did say imagine, Trask authorities are forced to break numerous fire codes to satisfy the masses making the pilgrimage to UNCW. Many make this blind faith migration hoping to just get a ticket, so they could see the hottest team on the east coast and the defending NCAA champions.

Then it happens, the immediacy of darkness sweeps over the Coliseum (again a lot to ask for but work with me on this one also), a lone spotlight is focused on the center of the floor. Earth shattering bass tones fill Trask as the announcer's fever pitched tone announces the starting line up "for your UNCW Seahawks."

With all of this generated hype, the name "Seahawk" leaves something to be desired in effect. I am not saying that the name "Seahawks" is bad, we could have a name like the UNCW Foodles or UNCW Guppies. I am not saying it was the worst choice in mascot selection.

What I am saying that if we are going to develop a new image, then let's go the whole way, color, logo, and mascot.

If we are going to try to separate ourselves from the ocean and not call ourselves UNC-by the sea, then why don't we drop the Sea in front of Hawks.

The UNCW "Hawks" would separate us from the losing reputation that the name Seahawk has.

Wilmington and Seattle are the only two cities that I know that claim the Seahawk for their mascots. In fact, Wilmington and Seattle could or should be sister cities for all of the things we have in common. We share the coastal environment, the name of Seahawks and we have both been rebuilding for the last decade or so. It is time for a change. As each of you eat dinner tonight ask yourself, your friends, spouse, loved one, or elders, "I am I better off than I was four years ago?"

Can we afford four more years of the same Seahawk? In November, as we change leaders, let's change the name to "Hawks", and start a new tradition.

Amy "Air" Chilausky demonstrates why she is one of the best in the CAA to St. Andrews during the UNCW win Tuesday night. UNCW will host a Colonial round robin tournament this weekend in Trask Coliseum.

On Sunday the teams traveled to Durham, N.C. for the North Carolina Collegiate Cross Country Championships.

McDaniel Receives 160th Career Win Over St. Andrews

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

After losing their first home game of the season to Charleston Southern on Monday, UNCW faced a hungry St. Andrews team on Tuesday. St. Andrews entered Trask Coliseum to play its first Division One opposition this season. Boasting a five game winning streak, St. Andrews was hoping to extend this streak to six wins in a row.

UNCW seemed stunned by the St. Andrews team, in game one. The reappearance of mental errors allowed the St. Andrews team to forge ahead to a 7-1 lead. UNCW after regaining its composure played well but lost game one 13-15.

Call game two a clinic for Saint Andrews, UNCW demonstrated what it means to play a Division One school. The Seahawks opened up the aerial show and the big guns to blast Saint Andrews while developing a 12-1 lead. The Lady Seahawks closed game two decisively with a 15-1 victory.

Game three was more of the same for St. Andrews, which put up a fight but with the Seahawk offensive attack gaining more and more confidence was simply overpowered. The collapsing defense of St. Andrews allowed UNCW to roll to a 15-7.

This was to be a long night for the St. Andrews team. Unable to get any their defense operative, UNCW tightened their play execution and went ahead 12-2. A late rally from Saint Andrews boosted the score to 14-9, before UNCW nailed the coffin shut when the closed game four 15-9.

Amy Chilausky had three blocks and services aces along with eleven kills in this outing. The team also had outstanding play from Sheldon Plentovich who posted 40 assists during the night.

This weekend the Lady Seahawks will host a conference round robin tournament with George Mason and American University. The matches start Friday at 5 and 7 p.m. and Saturday's matches are at 11 a.m. and 1 p.m.

The UNCW men's soccer team played reigning Colonial Athletic Association Champion, Old Dominion on Saturday October 17.

The game was hard fought the entire way with the one and only goal being scored off a cor-

Mock Election Results In

BY SHANNON DAVIS
Staff Writer

A mock election was held last Friday, Oct. 23 in front of the University Center. One hundred and seventy eight people participated in the election co-sponsored by The Seahawk and WLOZ. It lasted from 11-2 p.m.

Out of the 178 votes, Gov. Bill Clinton and Al Gore got 44.9% of the votes. Pres. George Bush and Dan Quayle got 26.4% of the votes. Mr. Ross Perot and Adm. Stockdale got 20.2% of the votes and 8.4% or 15 voters were undecided.

Michael Wood, sophomore, was one of 47 participants who voted for Bush. Wood said, "If anything like Desert Storm happens again, he is the only one who can lead us. I think there should be a prerequisite of military service."

Election Breakdowns

Clinton/Gore 44.9%
Bush/Quayle 26.4%

Perot/Stockdale
20.2%

Undecided/Other
8.4%

Bianca Hutchins, freshman, was one of the 80 Seahawks that voted for Clinton. Hutchins said, "I never kept up with elections before because I just turned 18. I like what Clinton said."

Jeff Boberg, sophomore, was one of the many Americans who is unsatisfied with either main candidate and is looking for a change. He is also one of the 36 voters for Perot. Boberg said, "There are three evils. Perot will do the most for me. I'm pretty sure I'll vote for him. I never liked Bush and Clinton doesn't appeal to me."

As the two main media sources on the campus, WLOZ, and The Seahawk tried to encourage students to vote in the real election, by promoting this mock one. Unfortunately, the turn out for the election was very low.

Some said they didn't care, others said they didn't have time, and a few said they didn't like any candidate, so they weren't going to vote. But the majority of students had an opinion and plan to vote next Tuesday.

The British Navy frigate HMS Coventry has been in Wilmington since Tuesday and will leave November 5.

HMS Coventry has a company of 275, including 26 officers. For the first time on a Royal Navy ship visiting here, this crew includes approximately 20 women. The ship comes to Wilmington after being deployed in the Caribbean.

Once again the popular Dial-A-Sailor program will be implemented. Families or individuals who are interested in hosting a sailor for meals, shopping, or other recreation are invited to call 762-2996.

This Saturday the ship opens for tours from 10 a.m. till 4 p.m. This will continue until Sunday. Sunday, the Micholob Soccer team will play a match with the ship's team at 3 p.m. on the soccer field here at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington. This will take place after UNCW's game with American University at 1 p.m.

HMS Coventry was launched to 1986 and accepted into service in 1988. A type 22 frigate, the ship's primary mission is anti-submarine warfare but she is also equipped for anti-air warfare and attacking targets above.

Campus Apparitions Sighted

College Press Service

Music students working late in the fine arts building at Nebraska Wesleyan University have reported hearing, in a vacant classroom, a piano softly playing and a woman's voice singing in the dark.

Scary? They swear it's true. The legend of Clara Mills, a popular music teacher who taught at the school from 1912 until her sudden death in 1940, stays alive through the years, said Mary Smith, a professor of English who spends Halloween Eve telling ghost stories in student dormitories.

"I myself have never seen her," admits Smith, who says she is the "keeper of the legend" because she was on campus in 1963, when Clara was first seen.

According to the professor, a campus secretary saw the image a slender, raven-haired woman in a long-sleeved white blouse and ankle-length skirt.

The sighting was investigated by Gardner Murphy, president of the American University of Psychic Research in 1964. Murphy claimed the secretary had been transported back in time, and had experienced a genuine phenomena.

Years later, when the building where Clara had suffered a fatal heart attack was torn down, Smith and a "raging" group of devoted Clara Mills fans went to the site, held hands, sang, and asked Clara to move to the fine arts building, where she allegedly has resided ever since.

Nebraska Wesleyan University, like many US campuses, boasts a benign resident ghost, often a faculty member or student who died quickly and tragically. With Halloween just around the corner, a rash of sightings is to be expected, say experts in paranormal phenomena.

Friendly campus apparitions such as Clara Mills usually have earned a certain affection from the student body, and whether making a Halloween appearance or not, generally don't terrify students.

Sunday At The Gazebo Second Rock The Vote Held

BY HOLLY PRICE
News Editor

The second "Rock The Vote" benefit concert called "Band Together" is going to be held this Sunday from 4-10 p.m. at the Gazebo. The Gazebo is located behind the on-campus apartments.

Information on candidates and issues will be discussed.

Bands playing will be "About Face", "Puzzlebox", and "The Inn". Donations and canned food will be accepted.

A contest is also being held by MTV. The ballots in this week's edition of The Seahawk are to be filled out by students and returned at "Band Together." Across the U.S. other campuses are doing the same thing. The campus with the highest student percentile will host MTV on election night next Tuesday. MTV will broadcast from that campus.

Money raised will go to Aids Awareness, homeless shelters and services, and services for abused children.

Students should fill out only one ballot.

Spooky Scoop Proves Timely

BY GHOU GBLIN

All Saint's or All Hallow's Day is Nov. 1 which according to pagan custom begins as the sun sets the evening before. A festival of the dead was made into a celebration of all the known and unknown saints and martyrs of the Catholic Church by Pope Boniface IV in the 7th century. Originally it was celebrated May 13, but was shifted to its present date by Gregory III in the 8th century. All Saint's Day is followed by All Soul's Day, Nov. 2, another Christian adaptation of pagan festival for the dead. This is a day of intercession for dead souls that have not yet been sufficiently purified, in the belief that the prayers of the living will help. It originated as a memorial in the 10th century.

Unlike All Saint's, All Soul's Day was abolished by the church of England, although it is recognized informally by many Protestants. Thus the two days have become combined in modern secular tradition. Mummings, pranks, bonfires, decoration of graves, belief in the return of ghosts or dead souls, fortune-telling and ritualistic games are associated with the eyes and days of both Nov. 1 and 2 in America.

"Trick or treat," the Halloween threat of little children, is apparently a recent American phenomenon, as distinct from pranks and mischief long customary on this holiday. It seems to be related to the Gaelic practice of giving cakes to the poor at Samhain or "summer-end," a seasonal festival that coincides with All Soul's Day.

They came to be called "soul-cakes," and in return recipients were obligated to pray for a good harvest. Somewhat closer is an English Plough Day custom. Ploughmen went about begging for gifts, and if they did not receive anything, threatened damage to the grounds with their ploughs. One sociologist observing the trick or treat custom in a southern college town saw little traditional in it. He explained it as a "rehearsal for consumer ship" in a mass society.

Police Offer Safety Tips

BY JULIE POOLASEK
Staff Writer

Recently, several thefts have been reported to Campus Police for larceny of personal property. For the most part, these incidents have taken place in office spaces of faculty and students, during normal office hours. Much of the property stolen consists of wallets, purses, jewelry, books and other personal belongings which are hard to replace. Investigations are currently in process.

The Campus Police would like to ensure safety by giving the following safety tips. When leaving your office or room make sure:

1. To keep all valuable out of sight. Remember, "out of sight, out of mind."
2. All doors and windows are closed and locked whenever you are not present.
3. All desks and files are locked.
4. All books have identification numbers in them.
5. Never leave keys in an unlocked door, file cabinet or drawer.
6. Lastly, report all thefts or property loss immediately to Campus Police. If a loss has occurred, try not to disturb the area.

By following these suggestions, it should greatly decrease your chances of being victimized.

Phil Smith

Vote Phil Smith In Tuesday's Election

In what has become one of the most interesting and yet nauseating presidential races this nation has ever seen, I now add yet another bizarre, complicating twist to the tangled web that the candidates have woven (or wove, or is it woved, or maybe weaved; no I'll stick with wove). I'm changing the parameters of this particular race, creating somewhat of a "fly in the ointment" for Mr. Bush, Mr. Clinton, and Mr. Perot. I'm going to end all of the question and uncertainty about who will win. I'm going to rewrite the history books, bring about political revolution, and answer questions like "Why does the cafeteria food cause bouts of diarrhea? Why does the UNCW Health and Wellness Center insist that the common cold is indeed sexually transmitted? And Why did young Dick Grayson live with adult millionaire Bruce Wayne and butler Alfred in a stately Wayne Manor?"

To make a long story even longer, PHIL SMITH IS RUNNING FOR PRESIDENT!!! Yes friends, if you thought Ross Perot pulled an "October Surprise" then hang on to your Seahawk boxer shorts. I know this announcement will come as a shock to both of my friends, as well as my family. (I guess they will want to come and live with me at the White House.)

Now you're probably asking yourself (as if you could answer), "Why in the world is Phil Smith running for President of the United States?" and even if you aren't asking, I'm going to tell you. I guess it all started last week as I was reading one of those "You too can be a winner" articles in the Reader's Digest and decided to give the Presidency a shot. I'm sure you could tell from past issues that I'm not very pleased with the choices this year and I've been disgruntled with all of the lip reading, draft dodging, and drooling (Stockdale) associated with the campaign thus far. It's time for a change friends and in the immortal words of someone who will always remain myself, "Ask not what President is right for you, rather ask if you can be President."

I've decided to run on my world famous, critically acclaimed, NoBull platform.

#1. First of all, I would abolish all future negative campaigning. If people want filth and sleaze, then they'll have to watch the daytime soaps and talk shows. The reason I would end all of the mudslinging is quite simple. I don't want MY name smeared across the headlines. Now I will confess, before Ross has my history looked up, that I once beat up the preacher's kid on the school playground in the fifth grade. I had a bad day and he was about the only person out there that I could beat up and so there it is, all out in the open, case closed, end of character discussion. Now wasn't that simple.

#2. I would reform the tax laws so the everyone paid their fair share, let's say 25% of each individual's annual income (that's 20% for the nation and 5% for the President). Now the only exception would be for people named Smith. After all, we've been here since the Mayflower came over. We've given the nation early leaders, scientists, a space shuttle astronaut, doctors, NoBull Prize winning columnists, and now offer a President. I'd say we have given our fair share already, and I think most Americans would agree.

#3. I would disband the UNCW Campus Police. With military cutbacks in Europe, there would be a lot of soldiers in need of jobs. Besides, they won't care where you park, or how fast you drive; they'll just be glad they're not chasing around some Third World dictator. And speaking of Third World dictators, we could send all unemployed campus cops to a Third World country to become (and I use the word "become" advisedly) dictators. Then whenever we have another Warhawk President we can march in and attempt to expel the evil

Third World dictators we have created. Oh, I can hardly wait.

#4. Education. Ah, who cares? Besides, I've got more important programs to spend the nation's money on. NEXT.

#5. I would change much of the legal system in this land. Judge Wagner would go to jail for being such a cranky old coot. I would name Judge Harry Stone as Chief Justice to the Nighttime Supreme Court. I would ban those Shaft, Shaft, Finagler advertisements from television. Finally, I would institute the "Barney Fyfe" award for the outstanding rental cop on a college campus each year.

Well fellow voters, the choice is clear. The vote is in your hands. I wish my opponents good luck, they will need it. Look next week for my "Aren't You Glad It's Over" issue and, soon to follow, the "Yes, I Still Remember What I Did Last Summer" issue. I hope to see you at the polls on Tuesday.

Until next time...keep your mind out of the gutter and your head out of the toilet.

Phil Smith is a NoBull Candidate in the 1992 Presidential election, and a regular columnist for The Seahawk.

Vote, But Vote Intelligently

This week in The Seahawk we have tried to present an over-all view of the major candidates running in the election next Tuesday.

In the past we have been accused of supporting the Democratic party and slanting our news stories in that direction. The Seahawk, like everybody in America has an opinion and we have kept our comments to the editorial page where everyone is asked to share their views. We in no way have ever slanted our news stories towards any political affiliation.

The Seahawk has deliberately left off political party affiliations on all of the candidates mentioned in our election preview on pages 4 and 5. Voters should vote for a candidate because they believe in what he or she stands for, not simply what party they represent. Don't just vote, make an intelligent vote. Because an intelligent vote is far better than just a vote.

The three issues we chose to look at are the three most important core issues in this election. They have been the ones most argued and most discussed in the media.

It has been a long cold election, as well as an historical one. Never has an independent gained as much support as Ross Perot has. The American public has never had quite so many choices. This has increased the numbers of people voting this year. People that didn't want to vote with either party, now have a reason to get out and vote.

We, as college students are tomorrow's future. Some of us are fast approaching the "real world" after college. By casting our vote next Tuesday we are deciding what kind of country we want to live in. Be an adult and cast your opinion.

The Seahawk challenges everyone to not just vote next Tuesday, but vote intelligently. Know the issues and who stands for what. Because if you vote blindly, that defeats the whole purpose.

The ballot on the right needs to be filled out by UNCW students only and returned to the Gazebo on Sunday, Nov. 1, between 4 p.m. and 10 p.m.

Please sign only one ballot, and only sign it once!!! It is not asking too much.

Light At The End Of The Tunnel

Stillpoint with Bob Haywood

Helpful "Sinking Down" Is Beneficial

While on an island off the coast of Maine this summer, a main sporting event was seeking flat stones and trying to skip them across the water. Five skips were all that I could manage and then the stones sank out of sight. In a reflective insight, it struck me that a lot of us live our days skipping across the surface of our lives from one event to another only to sink out of sight in exhaustion at night. Then we get up the next day, skip across life again only to sink again.

Now, somewhere past the midpoint of this semester, I have talked to student after student whose days are lived in just that fashion, maintaining friendships, keeping up with studies, doing papers, preparing for exams, and then sinking exhausted into bed.

To be so rushed and busy prevents any kind of helpful "sinking down" in order to plunge the depths of one's feelings and experiences in connection with the deeper dimensions of life. What makes it worse sometimes is that many young adults have never had any experience of "sinking into the depths" in order to be able to appreciate its value.

The essential element involved in such reawakening and sustaining times is to begin to make friends with silence and solitude. There is just not much of that going on in students' lives. I would suggest that the simplest way to get into such a space is by taking a walk by yourself and seeing if you can let all the inner noise begin to quiet, as well as, walking away from the external "noise" of dorm rooms, classes, cafeterias, and so on.

If you can ever turn off the inner noise of thought after thought rolling through your mind, you are going to find yourself suddenly experiencing increasing awareness of that moment and that place. There will be a stillness. You will find a sense of togetherness that can only be adequately defined by the experience of peace and trust.

To cultivate solitude and silence is to find a way to stand aside from your daily "skipping stone" experience. It will nourish your spirit as much as good food nourishes your body.

I think it is good news to discover that there is a means to feel grounded and good that does not relate to producing grades or pleasing people. There is a place of well-being that exists already in you. It only takes slowing down, quieting down, and paying attention. Peace be with you.

ELECTION 92

Gov. Bill Clinton

Where Bill Clinton stands on:

Abortion: Supports of abortion rights, he promises to overturn bans on counseling, fetal-tissue research and abortions at military hospitals. He says he would sign the Freedom of Choice Act, a bill in Congress to guarantee abortion rights. He supports parental notification.

AIDS: Promises to appoint an "AIDS czar," create a White House task force on AIDS and speed approval of new drugs to treat AIDS. He says he would increase funding for AIDS research, prevention, and education.

Economy: Favors a four-year, $80 billion program of public works and $60 billion of investment in education and job training. He would propose investment tax credits to expanding businesses and tax breaks to small businesses. He would raise the top income tax rate from 31% to 36% on those earning above $200,000, add a 10% surtax on millionaires and hike taxes on foreign corporations. He wants to cut taxes on the middle class. He pledges to halve the federal deficit in four years by eliminating federal jobs, cutting defense $50 billion more than Bush proposes over five years, and controlling health costs.

Health Care: Would move swiftly to offer a comprehensive proposal setting a national spending goal, requiring employers to cover all employees and setting up a private pool to finance help for the uninsured.

Supreme Court: Would name justices with a proven commitment to individual rights-which could translate into a more expansive view of the role of judges in protecting the rights of minorities and criminal defendants. He says nominees must pass the abortion litmus test.

Trade: Cautiously endorses the North American Free Trade Agreement, but would add companion legislation to protect U.S. workers and to require Mexico to adhere to environmental-protection rules similar to those in the USA.

Crime: Enforcement of the death penalty for capital crimes, put 100,000 new police officers on the streets. Create a national "police corps" that offers education in return for police services. Establish community "boot camps" to discipline first time, non-violent offenders. Expand spending for mentoring, counseling, and outreach programs so young people in trouble with crime, gangs or drugs have somewhere to turn for help.

Sen. Al Gore

On abortion: "Bill Clinton and I support the right of a woman to choose. That doesn't mean we're pro-abortion; in fact, we believe there are way too many abortions in this country. And the way to reduce them is by reducing the number of unwanted pregnancies, not vetoing family planning legislation..."

On the role of the vice president: "Bill Clinton understands the meaning of the words 'teamwork' and 'partnership.' If we're successful in our efforts to gain your trust and lead this nation, we will work together to put our country back on the right track again."

Quotes from the vice presidential debate in Atlanta, Georgia. USA Today, Wednesday, October 14, 1992, page 2A.

H. Ross Perot

Where Ross Perot stands on:

Abortion: Supports a woman's right to an abortion. His wife, Margot, is on the local Planned Parenthood board.

AIDS: Has called for increased funding to wage a "war" on AIDS. Perot has said the key to finding a cure is an intensified research effort.

Economy: Vows to wipe out the deficit in four years through up to 15% cuts in federal programs. He would raise the top income bracket to 33%, tax Social Security for the wealthy and raise the gasoline tax 50 cents a gallon over five years. He sees new jobs stimulating the economy.

Health Care: Suggests that he can cut costs by $141 billion, but offers no specific plan.

Supreme Court: Pledges to find the "best and brightest" to serve. He says he would require no litmus tests.

Trade: While not opposed to the North American Free Trade Agreement, he suggests the pact would result in a "giant sucking sound" of jobs going south to Mexico. He says the government should provide incentives for manufacturers to stay in the USA.

Crime: He would create a task force to evaluate programs that exist, scrap those that don't work and create ones that do. Establish a national strategy to combat crime and provide federal assistance to help communities with high rates of crime and drug use. Require life sentences without parole for people convicted of three violent crimes. Make literacy a requirement for release from prison for those convicted of violent crimes.

This information was originally found on pages 4A and 10A of the Monday, October 26, 1992, edition of USA Today. The crime proposals were compiled by Richard Benedetto for USA Today.

Adm. James Stockdale

On abortion: "I believe that a woman owns her body, what she does with it is her own business, period."

On role of the vice president: "My association with Mr. Perot is a very personal one, and as I have stood in and finally taken his running mate position, he has granted me total autonomy. I am sure that he will make me a partner in decision, in making decisions about the way to handle health care, the way to get this economy back on its feet again."

Quotes from the vice presidential debate in Atlanta, Georgia. USA Today, Wednesday, October 14, 1992, page 2A.

Pres. George Bush

Where George Bush stands on:

Abortion: Would remain solidly opposed to abortion, including opposition to government funding for poor women's abortions and fetal-tissue research and for bans on abortions at overseas military hospitals and most abortion counseling at federally funded health clinics. His administration has asked the Supreme Court to overturn Roe vs. Wade, the 1973 ruling that legalized abortion.

AIDS: Heavily criticized for failing to implement proposals of the National Commission on AIDS, he counters by saying his administration increased spending for AIDS-related research and other activities- to $2.5 billion a year from $1.1 billion. He also signed the Americans with Disabilities Act, which protects HIV-infected workers.

Economy: His vow of "never, ever" to raise taxes again means he would stay with his formula of tax incentives to lift private investment, including a capital gains tax cut, investment tax credits for businesses, tax breaks for the real estate industry and first-time home buyers. He would propose a voluntary check-off to force spending reductions. To reduce the deficit, he would impose modest cuts in the defense spending and limit the growth of domestic programs.

Health Care: Sent to Congress, but didn't push, reforms such as making it easier for small businesses to get affordable insurance for their workers and prohibiting insurance companies from denying coverage to people with existing medical conditions. He offered no way to pay for the tax credits and deductions, estimated to cost $100 billion over five years, to help people buy insurance.

Supreme Court: Likely to continue his pattern of appointing conservative judges who take a narrow view of the court's role in solving national problems. Because of the close division of the court on abortion, he would be under extreme pressure from his party's right wing to name a justice whose anti-abortion views are widely known. He denies he'd use a litmus test.

Trade: Hails the North American Free Trade Agreement as boosting jobs and the economies of the United States, Mexico, and Canada. Congress hasn't ratified the treaty. He claims the pact would create new outlets for U.S. products, expand financial markets and open agricultural trade.

Crime: Increase anti-drug money by $776 million, increase anti-crime spending by $1.2 billion. The death penalty for "horrible" murders, such as those committed by terrorists, assassins, and drug lords. Tougher laws against "carjackers," and raise penalties for "deadbeat dads."

V. Pres. Dan Quayle

On abortion: "This issue is an issue that divides Americans deeply. I happen to be pro-life. I have been pro-life for my 16 years in public life. My objective and the president's objective is to try to reduce abortions in this country. We have 1.6 million abortions.... Why shouldn't we have more reflection upon the issue before the decision of abortion is made?"

On the role of the vice president: "I've done the job. I've been tested.... But even as vice president you never know what your role is going to be from time to time.... You've got to stand up for what you believe in. And nobody has ever criticized me for not having strong beliefs."

Quotes from the vice presidential debate in Atlanta, Georgia. USA Today, Wednesday, October 14, 1992, page 2A.

ELECTION 92

UNITED STATES SENATE

Sen. Terry Sanford

A North Carolina senator since 1986

On Education: Supports programs like Head Start, programs that help children get ready to start school. He has also created programs for gifted children to provide the challenges they need to excel. Supports college loans. He believes no qualified individual should have to forego a college education for financial reasons. He believes the United States should invest in higher education if it wants to maintain its position in the global economy.

On the economy and jobs: Through his Honest/Balanced Budget Act, the United States government will no longer be allowed to borrow from the surplus Social Security funds to cover the national debt. He also has supported an increased commitment to job training and retraining programs.

On the environment: He helped write amendments to the Clean Air Act of 1990- the most significant environmental bill in the last decade- that protect the ozone layer and cut acid rain. In the past year, he took action that resulted in 5,000 acres of North Carolina lands being added to the state's wildlife refuges and national forests. He also introduced legislation protecting the Outer Banks from offshore drilling by requiring in-depth environmental impact studies to be completed before any exploratory action is taken.

Lauch Faircloth

Was a democrat until 1989. Left the party because of a difference in philosophy. "The principles I believe in- fiscal responsibility, less government, and low taxes- have been left behind by the democrat Party," he said while campaigning for Sen. Jesse Helms and acting as co-chair of the Democrats for Helms.

Served as Chairman of the State Highway Commission for four years and six years as North Carolina Secretary of Commerce. While Secretary of Commerce 180,000 jobs were created in North Carolina.

On Abortion: Opposes abortion on demand.

On the economy: "The most important issue we face today is getting the economy back on the right track, and creating new jobs. We can't do that until we elect a Congress with the courage and common sense to roll back big government- and cut wasteful spending."

Supports: Repeal of the Congressional pay raise, Workfare (requiring welfare recipients to work for their benefits), death penalty for terrorists who kill Americans, and a strong national defense.

Opposes: Higher taxes, foreign aid giveaways, Mass. Sen. Ted Kennedy's Civil Rights Quota bill, homosexual rights.

Attorney General

Mike Easley

"Our state, like much of the nation, is engaged in a life-and-death struggle against the rising tide of illicit drugs and crime. We must take a multi-faceted approach to this crisis. First, we need tough, well-funded enforcement programs to jail traffickers. Second, we need treatment and rehabilitation for users. And third, we must educate, educate, educate our children about the dangers of drugs."

"I am committed to vindicating the rights of victims in our society- whether they are victims of violent crime, discrimination, environmental pollution, insurance fraud or consumer rip-offs. And I number among the victims any woman who is denied her right to choose in this state."

Joe Dean

"It is time the State of North Carolina had an Attorney General who wanted to be Attorney General!"

"I don't intend to use this office as a stepping stone for my political ambitions. I intend to be the people's lawyer and the best one they've ever had."

"As attorney General, I will make the fight against crime my number one priority. I will start by putting victims rights before criminal rights and working as hard as I can to see that prison once again becomes a real threat for criminals!"

Vote On Tuesday!

And Vote Smart!!!

North Carolina Governor

Jim Hunt

Served as Lieutenant Governor of North Carolina from 1973-1977 and Governor from 1977-1984. Currently chairs the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards, a group which works to improve the teaching skills of educators across the country. Received his bachelor's degree in agricultural economics, and his masters in agricultural education at N.C. State University. He received his law degree from Chapel Hill.

On Crime: He plans to put more prisoners-especially dangerous and career criminals- behind bars for longer terms, build more prison work farms, where inmates work to earn their keep and learn personal responsibility. He would also build more military-style boot camps for non-violent and youthful offenders. He wants to launch an effective and coordinated offensive against drugs that includes special drug courts and a special facility for drug abusers. He also plans to expand drug education, treatment, and prevention programs.

On the economy: His plan includes providing the education and training that will equip North Carolinians to compete with anybody, anywhere. He will provide a long-term financial commitment to upgrading the community colleges, as well as the public schools. He would establish a Technology Extension Service to funnel technological advances to the manufacturing sector, nurture new and developing companies by creating an Entrepreneurial Development Board that will provide them with support services and assistance. Provide Job Training Vouchers and scholarships to attend community colleges.

On education: Raise standards for what all students should learn before graduating. These standards will clearly define what a student needs to know to be able to work in a world-class economy. Shift power away from Raleigh to the local schools and school systems. Raise teachers' pay and give them authority and professional status. Give employers who hire grads a money-back guarantee.

Jim Gardner

Is the current lieutenant governor, elected in 1988. Serves as Chairman of the North Carolina Drug Cabinet, Chairman of the Governor's Advisory Commission on Military Affairs, and a member of the State Board of Education. Attended North Carolina State University. In 1953, joined the Army and served as a private in West Germany until 1955.

On crime: Plans to build "no-frills prisons"- where inmates provide services to the citizens while they serve time (i.e. build their own prisons, grow some of their own food, and pick up trash on highways). Prisons will not have air conditioning, color television, or basketball courts. Wants tougher sentences passed for drug dealers and violent criminals. Wants to see the "Fair Sentencing Act" revised so that prisoners are virtually serving every day of the sentences they receive. Has asked for input from around the country for solutions to the state drug problem. Pushed legislation through that made "DARE" (Drug Abuse Resistance Education) a state-wide program.

On the economy: Improve the network of roads, transportation options, and infrastructure systems the state now has to improve the availability of the state's agricultural and manufactured goods and expand and create more jobs. Start reform measures for the state budget process, setting priorities to meet most pressing needs first, not spending "projected amounts" and then seeing if the money is available. Hold the line on state spending and creating more new taxes.

On education: Wants to offer educational opportunities to prepare students who plan to attend technical schools or move straight into the work force. Believes "Tech Prep" programs are a key to North Carolina's future. Wants smaller class sizes for kindergarten through the third grade (15 per). To re-direct school funds from Raleigh to the local school systems- without a lot of strings attached. Wants parents to choose which schools their children attend.

N. C. Lt. Governor

Dennis Wicker

Graduated Phi Beta Kappa from UNC Chapel Hill. Received his law degree at Wake Forest Law School. Has served as the Majority Leader of the North Carolina House Of Representatives since 1989.

On education: Against government cash "vouchers" for support of private schools. Supporter of the Basic Education Plan, the centerpiece of the state's effort to place every child on a level educational plain. Co-sponsor of supplemental assistance program to rural and poorer school districts.

On economy: Proposes new health care insurance reform for small businesses to group together and help reduce costs and extend coverage to more employees. Supported 1992 local-option economic development bond issue, which would give rural and urban areas better means of attracting new industry.

On crime: Demands overhaul of prison construction and operation programs at Department of Corrections due to gross inefficiencies and multi-million dollar purchasing scandal. Key sponsor-supporter of state anti-Racketeering law, tougher anti-drug legislation, victim's assistance fund, and requiring the parole Commission to notify victims and families prior to releasing criminals.

Art Pope

Graduated from UNC Chapel Hill and the Duke University Law School. Currently is a citizen-legislator in the North Carolina House of Representatives, and Republican Joint Caucus Leader. Previously served as a Special Counsel to Gov. Jim Martin. Martin appointed him to the state Goals and Policy Board and the Economic Futures Study Commission.

On education: Believes local flexibility and giving parents a voice will improve public schools. Proposed Public Schools of Choice to give parents a choice on the best way to teach children. Fought to increase funding for classrooms, while trying to reduce bureaucracy and waste.

On economy: Proposed Budget Reform to limit government spending to money already collected. Led fight against $750 million tax increase passed by 1991 General assembly. Successfully fought to repeal the $60 million payroll tax in 1991.

On crime: Wants to repeal current prison population cap law and begin building more prisons. Believes prisoners should serve their full sentence and work while they are doing their time.

Opinions

President Disagrees

At this time, I would like to clear up the inaccurate and out of context reporting presented about SGA in the Oct. 22, 1992 edition of The Seahawk newspaper. The article in question was entitled "SGA Fails Effectiveness Test" and was written by Ms. Carole Mehle.

I am not sure if Ms. Mehle or anyone else really administered an effectiveness test, but I believe if someone actually did, they would find the Student Government Association as a whole to be a quite effective, worthwhile, and beneficial organization. I feel that an "effectiveness test" would look at many aspects of SGA. It would take into account the work of the Executive Board, and it would look at the fact that the vast majority of the members of our Senate are very concerned about the quality of student life, and serve with the utmost dedication on Senate and University committees.

An effectiveness test would also take into serious account the service and programs SGA provides. These programs include Association for Campus Entertainment, student organization funding, a first class Challenge Course, a legal services program, a consignment bookstore, a fax service, Be a Faculty Member for a Day, and Take a Faculty/Staff to Lunch programs, as well as a comprehensive, university wide Aluminum Can Recycling Program. Just this year, Student Government has co-sponsored the "Rock the Vote" program, in sponsoring a "needy" program to benefit the Wilmington community, is working on a Senior Class Project, and is working on Daycare for UNCW students. SGA is also investigating the implementation of "Pass/Fail" courses and multicultural classes. So, as you can tell, SGA is working on many things which benefit the students. When you consider the long (and growing) list of SGA services and programs, it is hard to classify the Student Government as an organization which has "failed the effectiveness test."

In the article the author said, "the senators need to take more than one hour a week to (serve students)." I would like to point out that the SGA has Senate committee meetings before and after the Senate meetings, and this is where the work of SGA is done. So I would suggest to students and new reporters that even if as a group the SGA Senate may only meet for one - 1 1/2 hours each week, SGA Senate members work long and hard on committees outside Senate meetings. By serving on these committees, SGA Senators work much beyond the amount of time students and news reporters may observe, and are responsible for many beneficial SGA programs and events.

There were many instances in which the article reported inaccurate information.

Situations, issues, and events were also taken out of context. I will summarize these instances at this point.

The article began by discussing our past Spring elections. This was inappropriate considering it is 3 months old news. The Election Board operated independently of the SGA Senate, and the Election Board formed its own judgments of various occurrences. The Senate did not agree with the Election Board's judgment, hence they overturned the Board's ruling. Since the Election Board was operating independently of SGA, Student Government did not change its mind on this issue, as the article may lead you to believe.

In the instance of the Sailing Club, the SGA Senate allocated $650.00 for 2 new sails. I vetoed this motion and the SGA Senate overrode this veto. Despite what was indicated by the article, the Senate did not change its mind on this issue. As President, I had a right to veto and as a Senator, they had a right to override. They did this, which is no evidence of a lack of effectiveness, or lack of an effective system. In addition, despite what the article said, there was no "heated debate" on whether to "even hear the veto."

The next inaccuracy reported regarded the BSLN receiving $2500.00 for a black student leadership conference to be held at UNCW. It was stated, "Senator, Max Westland, objected to the motion, which meant that the Senate had to veto once again whether to hear the motion." What does that mean? The Senate did not veto anything. I am still unsure as to what this statement means. Also, despite what the article said, the BSLN did not have a "heated battle" to obtain funding. According to the SGA minutes of Oct. 5, 1992, only two senators debated against his motion. How could that have been a "heated battle"? Another inaccuracy? Absolutely. Later the article said Senator Hyman accused the Senate of being discriminatory. A reprimand was discussed but never passed. The article made the accusation that "no one has the guts to (file charges on Hyman) because of the discrimination charges Hyman made." This accusation was not backed up in any way by any type of fact. Just another example of the inaccuracy and unprofessional manner of this article.

The next example of misinformation was the statement that the MRR deadlines are not to be delayed "unless the Senate sympathizes with your club." This is again inaccurate. Oftentimes, there are very legitimate reasons for extending MRR's (these reasons have nothing to do with sympathy) and the Senate has the right to do this when the body feels it is necessary. Let me assure you the Senate is not an "inefficient, bond, clueless governing body" as this article inaccurately reports.

The author(s) of article about SGA, or any other subject for that matter, are responsible for accurate, fair reporting and discussion. The report in question was not the editorial page, hence I have every reason to conclude this was a news article. News articles are hardly supposed to be that biased.

I challenge the author to report accurately on SGA in the future and to talk to senators, committee members, and Executive Board members. There are news stories coming out of every SGA Senate meeting, and I challenge the author to find these and report on them. I also challenge the author to report on the benefits students receive from SGA if she is going to administer an "effectiveness test." Furthermore, I ask the staff writer in question to use better judgment, and accurate information in future article about SGA. If this cannot be accomplished, I would suggest the author give her job to someone who can accomplish the task effectively, efficiently, and fairly.

To close, SGA works to serve students and I feel the article which was printed in the Oct. 22 edition of The Seahawk did extensive damage to SGA, was unfair to the SGA and unfair to the student who read it. If any students are faculty members have any questions about SGA, such as the role we play on campus, the benefits we offer to students, or how SGA functions, I will be more than happy to respond.

Sincerely,
Joe Mitchell
Student Body
President

Dear Editor:

In regard to your article referring to SGA's ineffectiveness, I would like to clarify several incorrectly interpreted issues and address the several issues regarding The Seahawk.

First, regarding the proceedings involving Joe Mitchell, The Seahawk, as well as, the student body, should welcome the efforts of the SGA to insure that executives are brought into office in a fair manner. We should also be thankful that SGA is willing to take the initiative to follow up on the controversial matters such as those seen during last years elections. Justice is important in SGA, as it should be in any other organization, and those proceedings were held in insure that justice was upheld.

Second, sailing club was not "promised" new sails last year. They came up for special funding and the senate allocated funds for three of the six sails that they were requesting. At the time, the Budget and Planning committee advised that they return at a later time to request funding for the additional sails needed. This was done several weeks ago.

Jennifer LePage

Not "Gone"

Dear Editor,

Let me begin by introducing myself. My name is Ruby Brown and I am the chairperson for the North Carolina African-American Student Leadership Conference (NCAASLC) to be held at UNCW in February. This event is sponsored by the Black Student Leadership Network (BSLN), a program of The Leadership Center.

This letter is in response to the article written by Carole Mehle about SGA in the October 22, issue of The Seahawk.

The meeting she described took place on October 5, not October 12 as reported, and I was present. I was very shocked at what she printed in The Seahawk. I would like to ask Mehle just what did she mean by "$2500 gone"? From my observations at the meeting, I did not get the impression from any of the Senators that this was money just "gone." There were Senators that asked me questions to clarify any questions that they might have had. Such actions led me to believe that they had taken all things into consideration before making their decision on how to vote.

This conference will benefit UNCW as an institution in many ways. We have invited area high school students to participate, as well as students, faculty and staff from across North Carolina. We are also bringing Nikki Giovanni, a well-known poet. This conference is open to all UNCW students. $1,250 of the money I requested went towards Nikki Giovanni's fee, and the other $1,250 goes towards supplementing UNCW student registration fees. The $2500 is going towards a service to UNCW students. Mehle made it sound as if it was being used for something useless. If using $1250 of the moneys requested to keep UNCW student registration fees down is viewed as "useless," I'd hate to ask what she sees as "useful." In preparing registration fees for the entire conference, I kept UNCW students in my mind at all times. But I guess, according to Mehle, I was thoughts just "gone."

In conclusion, I don't feel that the Senate views their decision as "$2500 gone." If anything, they see it as providing a much needed service to UNCW students as well as means of improving race relations on campus, but by no means is it "$2500 gone."

Health

I would like to elaborate on a subject that was mentioned in last week's paper. In the article by the editor he stated something about the Health and Wellness Center that has been discussed very often, and that being their consistency to diagnose venereal diseases no matter what the problem. My roommate went in a few weeks ago with strep throat and they told her to go to the health department to get an AIDS test because she's been sick four times in the past year. Forge the fact that she's taking 18 hours of classes and works 30 hours a week.

My situation was a lot worse. I went in for an examination because of cramping. I was told that I had a urinary tract infection and I was put on antibiotics. Before the exam was over, I was informed that I had scarring on my tubes and I should make an appointment with my own GYN. I became very upset because that's the main cause of female infertility.

The doctor I was with was more concerned about seeing the next patient than answering my questions. It took me a month to get an appointment to find out the truth. Luckily, the Health and Wellness Center was wrong and I am perfectly OK (and $75 poorer for the unnecessary appointment).

I would like to say that I do not appreciate or understand the action of that physician and feel that the Health and Wellness Center should start treating the sick and stop making problems when they do not occur.

NOTES FROM THE MARGIN...

...And The Ship Careens

BY JEFF NELSON

I am living above Hell, directly over Dante's Inferno, in limbo, at the top of a white trash circle near downtown Wilmington. "Dancing with Mr. D.," an old Rolling Stones song plays sorrowfully, beautiful music on the beat-to-shit 1976 Radio Shack stereo/turntable, spinning, spinning, into a caged canary's warbling.

But the canary still sings. There is still life in the coal mine, and outside the leaves are falling. It's the crisp autumnal weather of football and fireworks lit up against the harvest moon sky, it's a time for feasts, and celebrations, for hibernation, and for putting on layers of fat in anticipation of the long frigid winter ahead.

The world series plays itself out with exhaustive wheezing breaths. My roommate wears a Toronto Blue Jays cap—it's an opposite luck kinda thing, like rabbit's feet and bobcat tails. The bike path running through my backyard captures bikers, toddling babies in wet diapers, estranged pets wandering with their noses to the ground, and my attention. I sit back, watching the path, and roll, roll this way to keep it from falling out (being careful not to roll it too tight), and then apply the flame; inhale, satisfied that Ian McKay might be a big jerk after all, and that all the losers throughout history really only played softball.

Here it comes, the first pitch. You're at a party—you have not been to a party in days (perhaps weeks), but it's a moot point because here you are. There's a beer in your hand but you are not drinking it. Someone asks you about the new Woody Allen film, Husbands and Wives; yeah, you've seen it—good for him—he's still living.

The first pitch was a strike. The second one whizzes down the pipe, clearing the plate over the middle like a sword clearing a breast plate, and all the red dirt of the infield pours through the rift like the blood of a thousand knights. The umpire, your best friend, places a rubberized Ronald Reagan Halloween mask across the split plate. It barely covers the corners, but it'll do. You notice the red dust glazing through the limp eye-holes as the third pitch sails out across the face-mask/plate and you swing.

Crack! Sound and motion combine. Your heart palpitates an African rhythm and then...

Blam! Your wondering what to do tonight. You want to plan things out—but plans "don't" work out. A little voice inside your head says, "Go buy the new John Spencer Blues Explosion single down at the Record Canteen," and you grin fully realizing that you have no money to buy anything more than a game of pool and a few stale crackers.

Who is John Spencer? Good question: John Spencer lays down some mean tracks. His old outfit, the loosely knit, PUSSY GALORE, was 85% attitude, and 15% musicianship. PUSSY G. was loud, raunchy, as disparate in their musical influences—going from Elvis, Little Richard rhythm and blues to fuzzbox distortion of MCS, BLACK PEARL and MOBY GRAPE. Combine that with a nihilistic sense of humor, incorporate 2 cups youthful angst, 3 cups anger, and a we're-going-to-stuck-this-steel-pole-through-your-front-door approach that would send Minnie Pearl jumping into the arms of Rick Rubin for protection—who would be covering himself, babbling about how he doesn't understand it, he's only a producer.

These days, John Spencer is a busy man. PUSSY GALORE is no more. Its unwashed, tighty-whities live on with his and the wife's Christmas project, BOSS HOG, more of the same but not as raunchy. In addition to BOSS HOG, Spencer can be heard on the even more impressive HONEYMOON KILLERS latest release, Hung For Low, a true blend of 50's rock and soul with live wire distorted guitar and reckless vociferation. But the JS Blues Explosion is a departure from the typical proto-noise of his earlier years. Not as noisy, but just as loud, combining horns (John Linnell of THE MIGHTY BE GIANTS guesting on trombone) and an infectious rhythm section (Steve Shell of SONIC YOUTH on the skins)—in what results in absolutely grove tracks.

And now, please, a moment of silence, for Charlie Ondras, the late drummer for BOSS HOG, and UNSANE (John's brother band), who passed away two months ago.

Two months ago... Tonight (the proverbial night of the journalist, in this case Friday, Oct. 23) JAWBOX is reigning the marquee at Jacob's Run; WRETCHED SUN, a local Wilmington outfit, is opening. As it turns out, I miss WRETCHED SUN and DOG POUND—young rockers from New Jersey, but I catch JAWBOX, with one eye open, the other glazed and baited.

There is purple haze obscuring radio waves and there is a haze throwing all the senses into a "water, water everywhere" careen...

Friday bled into Saturday. Remember Saturday night—the night the bass refused to close—making protracted love to the time change like a too drunk beast of worn out pleasure.

The time change does strange things to me. The time change makes me sing. The song goes something like this, "Bah!-be-bah-dop-BAH!- BE-BOP-BUH-OOP..."

The ship sails in "water, water, everywhere."

BILLYCLUB FEST will play at the Mad Monk on Halloween night. There will also be a costume contest.

Houdini or Elvis? You Decide

Don't know what to do for Halloween? Besides many local clubs sponsoring costume and Halloween parties, there are also several other community events to choose from.

Harry Houdini will be honored on the anniversary of his death, Oct. 31, in a fun-filled evening featuring a recreation of his favorite illusion: Metemorphosis, an exhibit of Houdini memorabilia and "The Great Houdini Seance," in which Houdini himself will (hopefully) make a guest appearance.

Since his death 66 years ago, seances have been held in hopes of contacting Houdini who promised his wife he would try to contact her from the other side.

"Magic 92: A tribute To Harry Houdini" begins at 8:00 p.m. with a fully staged magic show on the main stage at Thalian Hall, showcasing some of the area's best magicians.

The show offers fast-paced entertainment with a distinctly Halloween flavor. Following the magic show, an exhibition of Houdini memorabilia and demonstrations of close-up magic will be on view. Tickets are $8 in advance and $10 at the door; student tickets are $6.

The Great Houdini Seance begins at 10:00 p.m. in the studio theatre, and is limited to 75 participants. Marie Blood, niece of Harry Houdini, will begin the seance by sharing stories and recollections of "Uncle Harry." UNCW student, Line Dempsey and others will provide entertainment; tickets are $5.

The Greek organizations of Chi Phi and Phi Mu will be sponsoring their First Annual Haunted Forest on Oct. 29th and 30th. The Haunted Forest is located in the area behind 84 Lumber off College Road. Tickets are $2 for students and $3 for others; proceeds to benefit D.J. Wilcox.

Poplar Grove Plantation is holding their 10th Annual Halloween Festival. The festival will run Thursday through Saturday on the historic plantation located about 15 minutes north on Highway 17.

Events will include a good old fashion haunted hay ride through the deep, dark forest, a haunted barn, carnival games and food booths. The Country Store will also be open.

Thursday night will be Family Night, and all the haunted activities will be toned down for this evening only. All events are $2.

Wilmington Hilton is having a Halloween Monster Mash with THE EMBERS performing on Halloween eve. The party will begin at 9:00 p.m. and will last until 2:00 a.m. The big event of the evening will be a $1,000 cash prize for best costume; 2nd place winner will win a trip to the Bahamas, and a New Year's Eve package (for 2 at the Hilton) for a 3rd place winner. Tickets are $12 per person.

And if you're up for a road trip, you might want to investigate the legendary ECU Halloween weekend. Legend has it streets are blocked off and the partying is immense.

A perfect way to close the weekend will be another Rock the Vote event, called Band Together, taking place at the Gazebo on UNCW campus. THE INN and ABOUT FACE will perform during Sunday evening's events from 4:00-10:00 p.m.

The price of admission will be $1 w/ a canned good or $2 without.

The event will be collecting signatures from UNCW students. The college with the most percentage of student signatures will host MTV's election coverage on their campus.

Reading Successful

BY RAMONA HUPP

UNCW's Creative Writing Program, in association with Share Our Strength (SOS) and Bristol Books, is proud to announce the local participation of The National Reading: Writers Harvest for the Homeless was the fourth most successful in the nation. The reading took place on September 22 in over 80 cities, with over 200 authors reading.

Local writers, such as Clyde Edgerton, Tim McLaughlin, UNCW professors and other writers from across the state read selections from their works to a capacity crowd in King Hall on UNCW campus. The event drew over 200 people and raised more than $1500 for the organization SOS. All proceeds will go to help the homeless.

More holiday fun with MIKE EDWARDS & THE BANNED, who will play Locals Only (Giuseppe's) Oct. 31.

Charges Dropped

BY EDWARD MOSELEY
Staff Writer

The Campus Judicial Board dropped charges against 12 of 23 students accused of Academic dishonesty, Dean of Students, Pat Leonard, said Friday.

Seven students admitted they violated the Academic Honor Code in their response to the letter.

Decisions were made by the Campus Judicial Board in 15 of the 16 other cases.

"The Judicial Board heard three cases in Biology 105," Dean Leonard said Friday. "Two were found guilty, one was found not guilty, and there is still one pending. The remaining charges have been dropped due to insufficient evidence."

This is the first information released by the Dean on the number of students charged. The investigation began during Final Exam period in the spring of 1992.

"The Judicial Board dropped charges against the 12 students after an initial review of the evidence that would be presented and there was more evidence against those that were found guilty," Leonard said.

How the violations were discovered and reported and what disciplinary sanctions were imposed have not been officially released.

Ghost

At Rollins College in Winter Park, Fla., there's Annie Russell, a golden-haired actress who has floated, since her death in 1935, around a small campus theater named after her.

"I have never seen Annie," admits Rollins philosophy professor Hoyt Edge, who specializes in [paranormal psychology]. "But there are stories that students have told me. There is instances where they have caught glimpses of a form. It's a sense that someone is there, a presence."

Edge reported stories that the elusive Annie has tampered with stage lighting and scenery. "I guess she had ideas about how plays should be produced," he said.

Then there's mischievous Florence Lee, a spirit that has haunted the Phi Kappa Sigma's rambling old sorority house at St. Lawrence University in New York's Adirondack mountains for well over a century.

Florence, the daughter of John Stebbins Lee, lived in the house as a child until her death in 1860. Some residents claim to have seen Florence, in a flowing white dress, passing through the hallways.

Mysterious door slammings and unplugged stereos (particularly those that play rock and roll) mean Florence is around, say sorority members. The reports prompted a visit in 1979 by the investigators of the infamous Amityville horror house.

While Rosary College, River Forest, Ill., doesn't boast such glamorous ghosts, they do claim that the three-dimensional stone faces at the entrance of the college's Gothic social hall were once inhabited by spirits.

School legend is that the faces, now sanded blank, once possessed clear features and would speak out, make noises, and, the eyes would follow passersby. To rid the campus of the spirits, says the legend, the school's nuns had a team of workmen sand off their features.

Kerry Gaynor, a California hypnotist who has investigated 800 hauntings, said that a haunted building on a university campus rarely poses any dangers.

"It (the ghost) may be up to something mischievous, but not dangerous. We are just frightened of something we don't understand," Gaynor said. "I have, however, suggested that people move if they are uncomfortable."

Edge recalled organizing a hauntings investigation that entailed sending a Rollins student to spend the night in the gardens of an Orlando, Fla. art center, where a well-known apparition supposedly make his home.

Heart and Sole Fitness

TARGET HEART RATE

When participating in aerobic exercise, it is important to work within the THR in order to reap the benefits of the exercise. The necessary intensity and duration of aerobic exercise varies from body to body depending on conditioning level.

How do you find the proper intensity level for you? The specific intensity tailored to individual fitness levels is called the Target Heart Rate (THR) range. This range is the level at which you must work to gain cardiovascular benefits and fat metabolism. If you work at too low of an intensity, you will not receive the benefits of aerobic exercise. If you work harder than your THR range you will NOT receive any additional benefits and will put undue stress on your body. Here's how to calculate THR:

*220 - age = maximum heart rate
MHR X .8 = Upper limit
MHR X .6 = Lower limit
(MHR = Maximum Heart Rate)

The number of heart beats per minute should be within this range. Normally, heart rates are taken for a 10 second duration. This means that if you divide both the upper and lower limits by 6 you will get the exact number of beats you should count in 10 seconds.

Your resting heart rate should be calculated in the morning before you get out of bed. This will give an accurate assessment of your cardiovascular condition.

It is important to participate in an aerobic activity such as running, swimming, rowing, aerobics, etc. at least 4-6 days a week achieving your THR.

Fitness Fact: Your heels bear 60% of your weight, so make sure your athletic shoes have adequate heel padding.

Intramural Sports

Soccer registration deadline is today at 4:00 p.m. All teams must be represented at the captain's meeting at 4:30 today in Hanover Gym. Doug Smith, Rick Stinson, and Melissa Whaley were the big winners in the racquetball tournament this past weekend, winning the A, B, and Women's divisions, respectively. Congratulations to all three champions and thanks to all 22 competitors for participating.

The 1992 flag football season concluded this past Wednesday with the championship match pitting Lambda Chi, the defending champions and also the Fraternity league champions, against this year's Independent league champion, the Dead Soviets. Congratulations to Lambda Chi, this year's Intramural Flag Football champions!! The final score of this championship game was 38 - 12. Congratulations to both of the participating teams.

All students are invited to come out to see these two teams compete against 14 other university teams from Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia in the 1st Annual Southern Atlantic Flag Football Invitational Tournament. The tournament will be hosted by UNCW's Office of Recreation and Intramural Programs. It will be held on November 13th, 14th, and 15th. Good luck to both teams!

Club Sports

The UNCW Sailing Club with over 20 active members, has re-established itself as a competitive force in collegiate sailing. However, the primary focus is experimental learning gained through participation in the club. The club sails 6 Lasars which are small dingies. These boats have been repaired and are now in proper working condition. With the addition of 6 new sets of sails, the race team has been rapidly improving and is becoming a competitor among other Southeastern colleges and universities. If interested in joining the Sailing Club, please call Lee Matthews, at 763-1286 for more information. Meeting times are posted in the University Center by the Post Office.

THE Gutter

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

Respect is the name of the game, yes that's it, it is all about respect. If you want it, you have to earn it, exhibit it and demand it. Respect is what I want to see the Seahawk basketball team command from other teams. Being an underlying factor in team preparation, respect is all to often the driving force in upsets in many sports.

I am saying that a team which for many seasons has been searching for the antidote that will provide the antibody for losing seasons. Will find much of their cure in the many different facets of the word respect.

Respect in the coaches ability to lead and direct them in the methods and tools to perfect their game's.

Respect in their teammates decisions for as a team their is no room for selfishness.

Respect for ones body and mind, for these are the essential tools that are called upon to be constant and often to take the game to new levels.

These are all just one element or ingredient for what it takes to make the championship teams that UNCW is trying to build. But building is done in layers and respect is just a trick in the foundation in the hopes and dreams of a young and hungry team.

I do not want to be misinterpreted or misunderstood. UNCW Athletics is not in the abyss of eternal losing, nor am I saying that athletes here lack respect. In fact, UNCW is building in each sport extremely competitive teams and I have not spoken to an athlete yet that does not exhibit varying degrees of what I call respect. I commend the coaches and the athletic department, in having a vision and working hard to implement it.

It is tough on these young men and women, class work, practices and their needs to be included into normal student life all add to the pressures of being a student athlete.

But when their fellow students rag on them and their efforts to represent this school, it antagonizes the building process. For the players are out there in the two-a-day practices, swimming the laps around the pool or running to keep their bodies in top physical condition. As students, we have to give them our respect.

Lack of the key element respect starts small like a cancer and grows to the point of where it can potentially effect and entire program.

It can start for many, different sources, jealousy, low morale, swells in egos and of course plain stupidity.

Lack of respect has the opposite effect that the strong foundation of respect builds. Lack of respect kills and destroys the potential of a team.

Fighting the evils of lack of respect is often difficult and sometimes impossible. It often goes undiagnosed and untreated, until it stops effecting the internal cognitions of a player or a few athletes with the same problem and effects the team.

UNCW is about to open new seasons in its late fall sports. Last year swimming and diving, shocked the conference and proved it could compete, and be strong contenders in the conference.

Men's Basketball earned the respect of many teams and the coaches of opposing teams, but losing many close games at home lost a little student support.

The key for any team is to strive to take this type of total respect and add it to the proper mixture of fundamentals, guts, drive (the determination do what ever it takes to win), to develop the mental fortitude to withstand mental errors, and to improve not only yearly, but from practice to practice and game to game or meet to meet.

My final words in this weeks column will be to the students of UNCW. Even though it seems that I am the only person looking for a change in the world famous Sammy Seahawk. I will be at every game, meet I can cheer go hawk!! Where will you be?

UNCW Hosts Colonial Round Robin Tournament in Trask

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

This past weekend, the Lady Seahawk volleyball team hosted the Colonial Athletic Association Round Robin Invitational. In attendance were CAA members East Carolina, George Mason University, and American University. The tournament marked the opening of conference play for the Lady Seahawks.

To start the tournament ECU played George Mason in the first game, on Friday. George Mason (14-5 overall and 3-1 in the conference) won the first game. Their attack was lead by outstanding play from Andrea Smith, who finished the night with 27 kills, 10 digs and 2 aces, and Michelle Arnold with 58 assists and 11 digs.

ECU (9-13, 3-1) had a team attack that was spearheaded by Wendy Schultz as she posted 27 kills and 15 digs for her team to help them defeat a stubborn George Mason team in five games 10-15, 16-14, 15-13, 9-15, 20-18.

After a very exciting game between ECU and GMU, UNCW (11-14, 0-1) took the floor to meet American University (16-10, 1-3).

UNCW's offense was spurred by play from Amy Chilausky gathering 20 kills, 22 digs and 5 solo block, plus Jennifer Jamieson ending with 30 digs and 9 kills, and Sheldon Pientovitch, 49 assists and 27 digs. UNCW rallied from behind to take game one.

But the American team proved to be two strong for UNCW Friday night. American's Kristi Schott had 18 kills, Schott's fellow teammate Natasha Sylvian gathered 16 kills and Jennifer Klutznick acquired 37 assists in American's four game defeat of UNCW 14-16, 15-13, 17-15, 15-5.

Day two of the tournament proved to be just as exciting as the first.

ECU, fresh off their victory over George Mason, was ready to face American who just came off a victory over UNCW.

American's Jennifer Giordano and Natasha Sylvian combined to attempt to slow ECU's offensive attack. Giordano had 16 digs and 7 kills while teammate Sylvian added 15 kills and 9 digs in Americans efforts top stop a possible upset.

ECU again received good solid games from Wendy Shultz with 24 kills, 2 block assists and 17 digs. Along with Shultz, Leigh Wilcox for the Pirates had 9 kills, 15 digs and Melaine Richards had 14 kills, 16 digs in addition to 1 block. On their way to beating American University in a very hard fought five game match. East Carolina wins over American 7-15, 6-15, 15-8, 15-13, 15-13.

UNCW concluded the tournament with a three game sweep over George Mason.

UNCW's Chilausky led the way with 10 kills, 5 service aces, 8 digs, and five solo blocks. Also for UNCW Sheldon Pientovitch had 33 assists, 4 kills and 7 digs which in the frame work of team output ended up being an offense that was just too strong for the George Mason team.

With stellar performances by George Mason's Angie Smith, who mustered 16 kills, 2 services aces, and Michelle Arnold, 30 assists, the UNCW offense just proved to be too strong for George Mason. UNCW won 15-1, 15-5, 15-11.

UNCW boosts it record to 12-14, overall and 1-1 in the conference, as George Mason drops two for a 14-6, 3-2 record.

UNCW played Coastal Carolina last night and this weekend the team will be traveling to Harrisonburg, Va. to play in another CAA round robin tournament.

It's Bill Clinton's Turn

BY AMY BRENNAN
Staff Writer

Democrats Control White House

Record numbers of voters turned out to elect Bill Clinton the next President of the United States. 54% of registered voters turned out nationally. Locally, 75% turned out.

The Democratic ticket of Clinton and Al Gore carried the entire west coast and most of the east coast. They also carried the midwestern states and New Jersey, a state that hasn't been won by a Democrat since 1964.

The Clinton/Gore ticket campaigned on the promise of changes in America. The voters showed that they are looking for a change. Clinton won over 28 million popular votes and 366 electoral votes. This is over twice as many electoral votes as Bush received.

Clinton drew 50% of the vote of people aged 18-24. This probably had a lot to do with MTV's involvement in the campaign. Clinton and Gore both participated on forums on MTV in which young voters asked questions that concerned them. The Republican candidates were also invited to participate in the forums, but declined to do so.

Clinton also received 80% of the black vote. Bush won only 11%.

Clinton is only the 2nd

Democratic president in 24 years. Exit polls show that more than 1/2 of the voters are worried about the prospect of a Clinton presidency. Political analysts have commented that he will have to get a lot done quickly to reassure the country.

UNCW's David Rose, President of the College Republicans, said "it will be interesting to see if Clinton can fulfill his promises." He also said the economy is improving and will continue to improve. Rose feels that Bush is responsible for the improvement although Clinton will be able to take the credit.

Rose was quick to point out that Faircloth won the N.C. Senate seat and that Bush won N.C., although it was a close race. Republicans swept the NHC school board.

Clinton is the youngest person to be elected to the presidential office since Kennedy.

Matthew Lauer of the College Democrats was unavailable for comment.

George Bush is the 4th president this century to be denied a 2nd term in office. His future plans include the "grandchildren business." Bush graciously said that he will do his best to make the Bush/Clinton transition in the White House a smooth one.

Revolutionary Glass Artist

Chihuly Selected as First National Living Treasure

UNCW News Bureau

North Carolina Governor James Martin and UNCW Chancellor James Leutze will honor internationally esteemed Washington State glass artist Dale Chihuly as the recipient of the First National Living Treasure Award. Chihuly's experiments in blown glass led to international recognition of him as a leader of the studio glass movement.

The prestigious award presented by UNCW is designed to celebrate those Americans who exemplify the highest levels of creativity and execution in their fields. Chihuly will be honored with a banquet Tuesday, November 10, at 7 p.m. in the University Center Ballroom. He will receive a bronze medal designed by UNCW associate professor of fine arts Steven LeQuire, and a cash supplement.

The ceremony honoring American craftsmanship will be held biennially at UNCW. The National Living Treasure biennial award is an outgrowth of the North Carolina Living Treasure Award given annually. Dr. Jerry Shinn, professor of philosophy at UNCW and director of The Institute for Human Potential, founded the award. "It is time that we sought excellence in our country, and this is one small attempt to prize it," Dr. Shinn said.

Chihuly, a native of Tacoma, Washington, has been largely responsible for establishing the state of Washington as a center for the glass arts. In 1971, Chihuly founded the Pilchuck Glass School at Mt. Vernon, 50 miles north of Seattle. The school, which Chihuly calls "an international glass communications center," attracts teachers and hundreds of students from around the world each summer.

Chihuly's accomplishments have been recognized by museums world-wide. In 1986, he was honored by a retrospective exhibition at the Musee des Arts Decoratifs in the Palais du Louvre in Paris. Only four Americans have been given a one-man show. In 1989, Chihuly presented a survey of his work in the XX International Biennial de Sao Paulo, Brazil. This exhibit was shown in Santiago, Chile, in January and February, 1990. Other major exhibitions for 1990 include Azabu Museum, Tokyo, in July and the Museum of Decorative Arts, Prague, Czechoslovakia, in October.

More Woman To Be In Senate

BY AMY BRENNAN
Staff Writer

The political future of the United States is changing. Not only did voters elect the youngest President since Kennedy, but a large number of women and minorities have been elected to office as well. The 103rd Congress has the highest numbers ever of black, Hispanic, and female members.

Illinois made history on Tuesday by electing the first black woman to U.S. Senate. Carol Mosely Braun will take her place as the only black senator in the 103rd Congress.

1992 has been called "The Year of the Woman." A record number of women were candidates for Congress-106 for the house and 11 for the senate (of which 5 were elected). There are now 29 women in the 435 member House of Representatives. While 93% of the House members are male, that majority will continue to lessen. American politics has been changed forever. Never before have women won more than 6 seats in Congress in one election year. Analysts believe more women were encouraged to run for office in 1992 because of the Clarence Thomas/Anita Hill hearings and because of the Supreme Court rulings that would allow greater government restrictions on abortion.

Women no longer seem to be content to sit back and let men run the country and decide what is best for all people.

"There is an enormous grassroots political movement, composed of women candidates and their supporters, that is transforming American politics," said Robert Ferrik, co-publisher of a newsletter called "Political Woman." "By the start of the next century, women will be closer to equal representation."

Five southern states, Alabama, Florida, Virginia, and North and South Carolina elected their first full-blooded American Indian, Ben Nighthorse Campbell.

Analysts predict these new trends will continue to grow.

Faircloth Gets Sanford's Seat

BY AMY BRENNAN
Staff Writer

Faircloth portrayed Sanford as a big spending liberal.

Sanford believes he lost because of the ad campaign. "I spent 4 decades building a reputation and in 4 weeks of scurrilous misstatement a great many people believed the 4 weeks instead of the 4 decades."

In the race for governor of N.C., Democrat Jim Hunt defeated Lt. Gov. Jim Gardner, winning 53% of the votes.

Hunt's campaign commercials attacked Gardner's business failures. Gardner on the other hand, portrayed Hunt as an "influence peddler" because of Hunt's work as a corporate lawyer.

In New Hanover County the Republicans will control the school board with a 4-3 majority. The new members plan to give parents more options for their children's education through neighborhood schools and schools of choice.

building for safety measures. Faculty and staff were notified and students were then evacuated.

"Most of the classrooms were full," Major Riley said. "It was a lot of people."

Classes were then cancelled until 1 p.m. "My roommate came home and told me," said Alden Blake, senior communications major. "He told me we didn't have to go to class due to a bomb scare."

At 12:30 police re-entered the building and continued their search. "At this time we felt it was safe to go back inside," Major Riley said.

After a thorough search no suspicious looking or bomb was found and the police concluded that the call had been a false alarm, said Major Riley. Tuesday night, the female caller was apprehended. The police have asked to have her name withheld. No criminal charges have been made as of yet.

Last Friday the Science and Behavior building was evacuated for three hours after a bomb threat was made to the campus police.

According to Major Bob Riley of the Campus Police, at 9 a.m., a female called the police and identified herself. "She indicated that someone would be entering the building with a bomb in a bookbag," he said. "She said it would go off between 10 a.m. and noon."

In situations such as this, the campus police decide if they feel the threat is legitimate and then proceed accordingly. "We felt there was a legitimate reason for concern," he said.

Police immediately began to search the building for any suspicious objects. By 9:30 a.m., the police had found nothing and decided to evacuate the

SGA Readies For Spring Elections

BY CAROLE MEHLE

Staff Writer

The Student Government Association met on November 2. During the meeting Student Body President Joe Mitchell reported that he had attended a meeting of the Business Affairs committee, of which he is a member. Mitchell informed the Senate that Kean and King Halls are getting elevators.

Mitchell also asked that Jennifer LePage report on the progress of the Senior Walk. LePage reported that the sidewalk that was previously mentioned for the project cannot be done because it does not fit into the master plan of the University. Mitchell and LePage are exploring alternatives for the project that will better fit into the master plan of the University.

Mitchell also reported that the University Union is in trouble fiscally. Because of a fee problem, the Union is in debt. When University Center was built, the student fee to cover the two buildings was decreased to $9 from $15. Mitchell said that the administration of the Union is going into their sky fund, money reserved for special emergencies, to keep the Union and its programs open.

SGA was encouraged to look into ways of helping out the Union.

Dates for the Spring Elections are "nailed down." Election Board Chairman Mary Taylor told the Senate. Tentative dates for the elections are as follows: Registration-February 4-15; Interest Meeting, February 8; Candidates Meeting, February 18; Elections, March 16-17; and runoffs March 25.

Taylor said she is accepting ideas to make the elections run as smoothly as possible. Ideas can be submitted at the Student Government office in the University Union.

Judiciary Committee Chair Roger Hymen asked that the impeachment hearing for current Junior Class Vice President Kristy Barfield be held next Monday, November 9, in front of SGA.

Italy Comes To UNCW

BY AMY BRENNAN

Staff Writer

Viva Italia! October 26-29 was Italian week at UNCW.

Every year, the UNCW Museum of World Cultures pays homage to a different country. In the past, exotic countries such as Japan have been honored. This year, Italy was chosen in order to commemorate the 500th anniversary of the First Voyage of Christopher Columbus.

The week began on Tuesday morning with an art exhibition in Randall library, which featured Pre-Columbian and Colonial paintings. The paintings were done in the dark, somber, colors characteristic of the period.

Tuesday evening, Chancellor and Mrs. James Leszke hosted an Italian banquet in Wagener Hall to celebrate Columbus' voyage.

A quick history lesson reminds us that Columbus left Spain on Sept. 9, 1492 on a voyage sponsored by King Fernando and Queen Isabel of Italy.

He took three ships, the Nina, the Pinta, and the Santa Maria in search of an all water route to the far east.

When he struck land in the Bahamas on Oct. 12, 1492, he believed he had reached India. He called the people there Indians. It was not until many years later that his mistake was discovered.

On Wednesday evening, the owner of the world's most important private collection of maps and charts of ancient Italy spoke in Cameron Auditorium.

Emilio Moreschi of Bergamo, Italy is a European expert on 15th and 16th century maps. Moreschi's lecture was sponsored by the Museum of World Cultures and Interroll, a local company which make conveyor belts.

Moreschi is the managing director of Rullis Reimera, Interroll's affiliate company in Italy.

A far cry from map collecting, Moreschi is a member of the Italian Alpine Mountain Climbing team. He is the group's official photographer and has climbed mountains in countries around the world.

The UNCW Museum of World Cultures is responsible for the display cases that can be seen around campus. Dr. Shinn of the Philosophy and Religion Department is the curator of the museum. He sponsors programs like Italian week through the museum, and basically oversees all that goes on. He is also responsible for rotating the cultural artifacts on display in the cases. Although some of the artifacts belong to the museum, many are on loan from collectors.

Italian week wrapped up on Thursday evening with a lecture on Colonial art in South America. The lecture was presented by Paul Clifford in Randall Auditorium.

There are no Italian exchange students at UNCW. Ciao!

Southern Politics Topic of Forums

Two programs dealing with the dynamics of the 1992 elections will be held on campus in the next two weeks. On Monday, November 9, at 7:30 p.m., in Cameron Hall Auditorium, Dr. Merle Black will present a program entitled "Southern Politics."

Dr. Black is the Candler Professor of Politics and Government at Emory University and co-author of The Vital South: How Presidents Are Elected. He is also a political consultant for the Associated Press, the Atlanta Journal-Constitution, and the Cable News Network.

On Tuesday, November 17, at 7:30 p.m., in Morton Hall's Bryan Auditorium, Dr. Raymond Dawson, professor of political science here at UNCW and former senior vice president of the 16-campus University of North Carolina system, will present the Phi Kappa Phi lecture on the impact of the recent presidential election in North Carolina.

Both forums are free and open to the public.

Partner For Life May Be Hard To Come By

Most of us hunger for significant relationships. We want to find someone who will become our life-partner and we'd like to find those few people who will become and remain life-long friends. Such relationships are critical to our sense of well-being, but at the same time, good relationships are fraught with difficulties.

One of the main differences of developing and maintaining loving relationships lies in the expectations we bring to them. None of us come neutral or totally open to any loving encounter. We come with past experiences and dreams, both of which exert powerful influence on any encounter between two people. Past relationships with parents, friends, and persons who we have loved all have left us with a list of qualities that we want with someone new and a list of things that we do not want in our next significant relationship. We develop dreams of our ideal friend or life-mate. And these experiences and dreams become the expectations that we place on any new person that we meet in our lives.

We also develop similar expectations about experiences such as college, or church, or sororities, or fraternities. Sometimes we don't even know where we get the images from that become our expectations about how these groups are supposed to operate and what they are supposed to do for us; but we do have these expectations.

The problem is that expectations very rarely square with the reality of these experiences. We tend either to idealize any relationship or situation or we define what we want only on the basis of our own needs and desires.

The reality of our experience teaches us very quickly that nobody can meet our expectations, nobody measures up and disappointment, at some level, is inevitable.

There is good news! While bringing expectations into a relationship is absolutely unavoidable, we can learn to be aware of what we are doing and develop a relationship where they can be surfaced and challenged and modified. "Evolving beyond expectations one learns to find joy in what is bestowed..." In the process of discovering our own expectations and that of our partner, we can learn slowly to reshape them into a common vision that is nourishing and sustaining.

As in all good things, such work takes time and energy and commitment. But if you ever want to have a relationship that is sustained over time, it is important to understand that expectations must yield to a mutually determined vision of what decide we can expect from one another. And that vision, in turn, will itself be modified and reshape over time as individuals grow and change with life and circumstance.

The promise lies in the quote already stated and it bears repeating, "Evolving beyond expectations one learns to find joy in what is bestowed..."

Clinton is a Change For the Better

No matter who you supported in Tuesday's presidential election, you have to consider the prospect that Bill Clinton is good for politics.

About a year ago, when the race was still in the future, and the Democrats didn't have the slightest notion of whom they would send up against George Bush, experts on politics were predicting record lows in voter turnout. The opinions of 18 to 25 year olds were virtually negligible to political candidates, because we never got around to voting. And nearly everyone who did vote was disparaged and confused by past campaigns which consisted more of mud than of issues.

North Carolina voters could remember eight years ago when Jim Hunt challenged Jesse Helms for his senate seat. The two drew national attention as each spent millions to malign the other. They engaged in an air war so nasty it set a new precedent in dirty politics. Their debates consisted of little more than Helms spitting in Hunt's face while Hunt flipped him off. (Maybe it wasn't that bad, but the affair displayed as much class as a food fight in a high school cafeteria.)

More recently, we remember the 1988 presidential election between Bush and Dukakis. Bush campaigner Roger Ailes pledged that if they could make Willie Horton a household name, the Massachusetts Democrat wouldn't have a chance. They succeeded; Ailes was right.

Then, about a year ago, Bill Clinton came along. By the end of January 1992, he had lost the New Hampshire primary and his chances of winning the Democratic nomination were considered bleak by the optimists and dead by many in politics.

So Clinton did something crazy. He decided to base his campaign on something so radical that it made some of his own staff members squeamish. He would make specific plans for the future of America, and then he would lay them out for the press, his opponents, and the public to judge for themselves.

Today such a proposition seems fairly logical, even obvious. But only 12 months ago the conventional political wisdom encouraged candidates to be vague about their stands on the issues and stick to rhetoric on the stump. If you ask me, Clinton's was better.

Of course, had George Bush been re-elected Tuesday, that conventional wisdom would have proven to be true.

The president decided to take the low road in the campaign, especially in the final weeks. When people like me wanted to know a little more about what Bush would do for the inner cities, for health care and for the economy, we were left without a clue. Instead, he enlightened us with questions about Clinton's family values, or his draft record. I, like most Americans, couldn't care less.

When Bush talked about trust, he didn't tout himself as a man of integrity. He just tried to paint the Clinton as a scoundrel.

When Bush talked about family values, he chose not to define them in a way we could understand.

When Bush talked about taxes, he chose not to lay out a deficit reduction plan. He only reverted to the "no new taxes" pledge that got him elected in 1988, but betrayed him two years later.

Clinton talked about health care. He proposed publicly funded clinics to make care available to every social economic group in the nation.

Clinton talked about education. His plan includes a "national trust fund" to provide college loans to essentially anyone who wants one. Once a borrower graduates, his loan payments would be taken directly from his paycheck, or he could pay the loan off by working in public service for a yearly stipend of a $10,000, plus $10,000 per year off of the loan.

For talking in specifics while being called "bozo" and "the chicken man" by his opponents, Bill Clinton deserves credit.

Of course, all of the candidates engaged in mud slinging. Clinton ran television ads which I found objectionable. And while he was addressing health care in Ohio, he often had Al Gore ripping the Bush/Quayle ticket to shreds in Florida.

And anyone who has glanced at a television in the past three weeks knows that the issue-oriented campaigns haven't trickled down to the state elections yet. I sat down last month to catch the gubernatorial debate between Jim Gardner and Jim Hunt. I only watched for a few minutes. Seeing Hunt up at the podium lifting that middle finger toward his opponent gave me flashbacks to 1984. I decided not to give Gardner equal viewing time; I managed to get to the remote control before he had a chance to spit.

It's Time To Rally 'Round the New President

The American people have spoken and they want new leadership. The tactics of old-sneer campaigns and mud-slinging didn't work for the Republicans this time. The people are tired of working two jobs for one income, tired of seeing the upper-class get break after break, and tired of empty promises.

President Bush repeatedly told us what he was going to do. He was going to be the "Education President," then it was the "Environmental President." Because he tried to be the president for the moment and not for the long run, he got little done as far as progress. He was a reaction president, as far as the United States was concerned. He reacted to problems as they came.

But that is water beneath the bridge. It is now time to rally behind our new president and work together to solve the problems affecting America today. President Bush promised to make the transition between administrations as smooth as possible, and that is an example the rest of us need to follow.

Our government has for a long time ignored our own problems while playing a major role in global politics. We need to refocus on our attention on to our people and then to those around the world. Though we still need to play a major role in the world, we need, more importantly, to clean up our own messes. The "drug war," crime, health programs, AIDS, the environment, and the deficit are all problems that need attention now. We now have leaders who will put "America first."

President-elect Clinton has a tough road ahead of him. Changes will not come overnight, and maybe not come for a couple of years. Ask anyone who has money problems, it is far easier to go into debt than get out of it.

And getting rid of our incredible debt is the key issue for the new administration. President-elect Clinton and the Democratic Congress are going to have to prioritize problems and stick to that agenda. Change will not be easy, by any stretch of the imagination, but it is needed. We cannot maintain our current direction if we want to remain a global power (other than militarily). The Reagan administration threw money at problems, and failed to solve them. People, democrats and republicans alike, allowed greed to get the better part of them and we, the tax payers, as a result, were stuck with an incredible bill. One bill we can't wash dishes to pay off.

We now have to rally 'round the president-elect and talk to him. President-elect Clinton has said he will continue his "town meetings." This access, both ways, will be beneficial to America. The president will keep his finger on the pulse of the people and the people will be able to talk directly to our governmental head.

The time for bragging and/or complaining about the election is over. We need to focus all our attention on solving our national problems. Everyone must contribute.

Will that happen? No. Based on past observations, the Republican party will do anything to regain the presidency. Watergate and negotiations with the Iraqis have been the last two plays used by the "Grand Old Party" to reassure power.

We now have leaders who will put the country first, not their party, and it's time the American people rallied 'round their "novel" approach to leading this country.

Chicago Tribune America Embraces Bill Clinton

Americans didn't have to be urged to vote Tuesday. They poured into polling places across the nation in huge numbers, impelled by one of the most intensely waged presidential campaigns in many years.

They gave Bill Clinton a smashing, coast-to-coast victory and, in Illinois, made history by electing Carol Moseley Braun to the U.S. Senate.

On Braun's candidacy rode the hopes of many, many people who believe they have been shut out of power in Washington. A tough campaign is behind her; now six years of careful scrutiny lie ahead.

Clinton and Braun both deserve hearty congratulations - as do the voters. This campaign was launched as the exhilaration of the Persian Gulf victory was ebbing, and it concluded in the seemingly unbearable gloom of an economic slowdown. It would have been no surprise if more voters stayed home and sulled.

But Americans didn't turn away from democracy; they turned it in. In the wake of a bitter and often negative presidential campaign, they reversed the long-term trend toward voter apathy, and they voted.

The result seems to have been a repudiation of President Bush as much as an embrace of Clinton. Whether or not the Arkansas governor can claim a mandate for all of his policy proposals, he clearly has a mandate to, in the words of John F. Kennedy that he invoked so often, "get this country moving again."

Voters signaled that they want aggressive presidential leadership in domestic as much as in foreign affairs. If Bush had sensed that a year ago and used the political capital he earned with the Persian Gulf victory, he would now be headed toward a second inaugural.

What can Clinton do? One thing he can't do is single-handedly revive the U.S. economy. No president could. That is a job for the nation as a whole, but the president can lead and inspire the effort.

Clinton can help America find direction in the post-Cold War era. Like his idol Kennedy, he can call the nation to purposes larger than individuals and narrowly defined groups and challenge us to find ourselves by losing our self-absorption. Like Kennedy, whose election also marked a generational transition of leadership, Clinton can remind his constituents that they should seek not just what they can take from the commonwealth, but what they can give to it.

Clinton campaigned as a new Democrat; it remains to be seen if he governs as one. The voters seem to have indicated that they want a more active government; it's not at all clear that they want a return to old-style, big-government remedies for all problems.

Toughest of all for Clinton may be to shed the perception that his first law of governing is to please everybody, even at the expense of the common good. He'll need to make tough choices on a host of issues, especially budgetary ones.

Clinton has won the job he sought and an overwhelming expression of confidence from the American people. We salute his achievement and hope, for America's sake, that his presidency lives up to the people's faith.

Write a Letter to the Editor today!

Dear Editor:

The undersigned professional staff of the Student Health & Wellness Center wish to respond to the recent anonymous Letter to the Editor dated 10-29-92. We are striving to provide competent, compassionate medical care to students and have a true concern for students' well-being. We may need to ask personal questions in order to obtain the information needed to provide optimal care. It is important for us to know if a female student is at risk for pregnancy before we prescribe any drugs or even recommend non-prescriptive medicines. This involves asking about menstrual periods, sexual activity, and method of contraception. We have many students using condoms alone as a contraceptive method. Using an effectiveness rate of 80% means that 1 out of 5 of these couples will experience a pregnancy within one year. We would never want to prescribe a medicine which would cause birth defects or complications of pregnancy.

Student Health staff also feel it is necessary to consider the possibility of sexually transmitted diseases (STDs) in students. All it takes is one sexual encounter (including oral sex) to contract an STD. Condom use may reduce but not totally eliminate this risk. Since many students are at risk (according to the above criteria), and since STDs can appear in so many guises, we would not be doing our jobs if we did not at least consider the possibility. It would be upsetting to know that a student went on to have more serious problems (such as infertility, birth defects, or cancer) because we did not test for or treat an STD.

We apologize if the personal nature of our questions causes embarrassment or anxiety. We hope students become more comfortable discussing these issues so that they may receive optimal health care from ALL health care providers.

Our main goal is to provide quality health care for students.

Students who have questions or concerns about the Student Health and Wellness Center are invited to speak with the Director or other staff. In addition, there are three student members (Katherine Barwick, Ivey Graham, and Max Westland) on the Chancellor's Student Health and Wellness Committee who are your voice on health issues. We welcome constructive feedback from students.

Voters Heed Clinton's Call For Change

It was a short night. The voters wanted change. The victory fashioned by Bill Clinton and the Democrats spread rapidly across the country as the returns came in. President Bush's slashing attacks on Clinton's character did not in the end distract voters from their belief that it was time to try something different. But what? The answers are still vague, despite the amazingly high exposure of this presidential contest and the surging voter interest in the candidates and the issues.

Clinton won because he was a more moderate Democrat than his recent predecessors and because he vowed - time after time - to fix the national economy, and end the dismay and even fear of the future that had overtaken millions of Americans.

His test now as president will come as he goes about doing that. His campaign agenda was large, but he will quickly face the twin realities of the continuing budget deficits and trying to keep the pent-up desires of liberal Democrats in Congress from destroying his centrist posture.

It appeared last night that the president-elect will have an electoral-vote mandate. In raw political terms Clinton ran a smart, superb campaign. This obscure governor from a small state, Arkansas, announced for the presidency when Bush was so high in the polls that more prominent Democrats shied from the contest. And Clinton showed political stamina, beating back adversity and his own mistakes time and again. He appealed to the people, and they answered his call.

George Bush's defeat will be analyzed for years. Seldom has a popular incumbent's favorable rating stood at almost 90 percent after the successful execution of the Persian Gulf War fallen so swiftly and so far. The basic reason is that Bush lost touch with bread-and-butter issues affecting most Americans, and recognized his self-ambush far too late. And there was also the incredible political disarray of the Bush White House and the adverse reaction to the narrow-minded intolerance of the Republican convention.

Ross Perot was another unprecedented factor in this strange and uncertain political year - a billionaire spending as much of $100 million of his own money to joust with the nominees of the two parties.

Perot finished third, but his contribution was much larger: He educated the public about the nation's $4 trillion debt. He preached sacrifice and balanced budgets to create new jobs. He awakened the nation to the deficit problem, and he pushed both Clinton and Bush into at least discussing it.

It was often a mean, raw, nasty campaign, especially as Bush tried to struggle back. But it was also an election that drew far more substantive attention from more Americans than any in recent memory.

The debates worked. Americans watched and listened in huge numbers. And then they exercised their greatest right: the right to vote and they voted for change in the person of Gov. Bill Clinton of Arkansas. Now the country will find out how well he will do as president.

Laker Star's Re-retirement

Magic Johnson

Yields to Reality

One year after he retired from the game and little more than a month after he returned to it, Earvin "Magic" Johnson abruptly has retired again from professional basketball. This time, he says, it is for good, and nothing quite commends him and his illustrious National Basketball Association career so much as his reasoning in deciding now to leave it behind.

Johnson, who first retired when he discovered that he had contracted the HIV virus that causes AIDS, came to understand that he was becoming what he did not want to be: a distraction, a spectacle who would be scrutinized not for his skills on the court but for his mere presence. There would be too much focus on whether he was playing to his customary level and energy, whether a game under new NBA rules had to be interrupted if he suffered a bleeding injury, whether opposing players would shrink from him competitively out of caution about physical contact.

This, he reasoned correctly, would take away from the game and "the larger issue of living with HIV for me and the many people affected with it." Perhaps it should not be this way, but it is.

Johnson yielded to the growing controversies about his return. One was a rumor, which he denied, that he had contracted HIV through homosexual contact.

More persuasive was the emerging, vocal concern of other players about competing against Johnson and the risk of his transmitting the virus to them.

Medical experts say this risk is infinitesimal, but it is not zero. No one is sure, and while it is easy - as some of the more hyperbolic critics already have done - to condemn these players for squeezing Johnson out of the league, their concern cannot be scoffed at.

There is despair as well that Johnson - as he had hoped - cannot now stand as an example of living fully with HIV in the workplace. The reality is that an NBA stadium is no ordinary workplace; it is a violent arena in which players regularly are cut, scratched and blood, as happened to Johnson in a recent exhibition game.

What has evolved here is an affirmation of nothing so much as how little we still know about AIDS and its transmission and how much more we must know to judge circumstances such as these and treat them intelligently. Until then, as Chicago Bulls Coach Phil Jackson observed, it is perhaps best not to judge: "If something just is, let it be. We're always trying to decipher whether something is good or bad. It just is."

Notes From The Margin: Celebrating Our Yonic Heritage

BY JEFF NELSON

"My life is a box full of nuts," Nick Cave.

A gutted pumpkin rests atop a cardboard speaker with twin woofers and painted on tweeters. Three days have passed since All Hallows Eve and the pumpkin is now beginning to rock furiously of old potatoes left in a rotten sack, decomposing in a pool of liquid breakdown. Ah, the days of shag carpet, and hopelessly losing track of whatever happened to fall between its two inch (and rising) strands of fiber. The lamp above my head clicks like incessant insects copulating in the darkness on a linoleum floor laid by small grey hands.

Halloween has passed and left us with the various candidates grinning heads supplanting the costumes and pumpkins we once looked to for amusement. Costumes ran the gamut of extremes this year—unlike the views of the candidates—from 70's sex god man to safe sex man to Princess Lay-ah! to lesbian Gay Scout leaders to John Wayne Gacy "Ah-shut-your-cake-hole" killer clown wear to Black Eyed "Puh" to Ophelia decked out in garlands and black tresses to basketball teams practicing drills.

The evening took on the Bacchanalian proportions of an ithyphallic event. Bacchus' peeling laugh could be heard over the din of any party; the loud sound of garage, mudslinging rebirth, vampire sludge could also be heard. The sound of Greek pipes embedded in ge-hick guitars, the sound of SPERM DIABLO and the bluegrass, fuzz, groove of a so far unnamed band that could easily be called MARY, ZAC AND THE VULVA ATTACK—lots of waving guitars, a boy with a big stick (everybody's got to have their props), and plenty of canned beer swallowed like soda.

Speaking of props, looking around at the denizens of any Halloween costume party, one will usually notice that the key to most costumes is not the dress/ garb of the person, but the prop, which leads to strong associations between character and object. It is no small coincidence then that many of the props I observed people relying on were phallic in nature. [No this is not just another Freudian investigation into the subconscious pop of culture.] And by phallic, Webster's 3rd New International Dictionary would in part say: /fali/ adj, derived from the Greek, phallos—1 a) a vertebrate intromittent organ: penis clitoris. b) (is far too technical to touch on right now, and anyway, what is intromittent?) To get to the bone of the matter, we must focus on intromit: vb., to send or put in; insert or introduce. Therefore phallic could be construed as a vertebrate (that's us) organ of insertion or introduction.

Taking this further, the definition listed in Webster goes on to compare phallic with the Lingham or the Yoni. Two very useful words. Lingham (pronounced like Danny's last name with an "um" at the end—taken from Sanskrit)—n, a stylized phallic symbol often depicted in conjunction with the Yoni, connoting maleness, vitality and creativity. Yoni—/yone/ n. [skit, vulva]—a figure representing the female genitals serving as the formal symbol under which Shakti is worshipped. And one more step further: Shakti /Shak'te/ 1. See Yonic, Page 7

"The Partridge Family meets Jesus," is how one journalist described DAVID AND THE GIANTS. This religiously based rock group, which consist of four brothers, has been recording for over 15 years and have produced over 14 albums. They are a unique in that they were a pop band that eventually switched to contemporary Christian music, unlike Amy Grant and Michael W. Smith, who have found more success doing the reverse.

DAVID AND THE GIANTS almost found their way on the pop charts back in 1990, when a mislabeled disc thought to be a debut album of SOUL II SOUL was played for a music director of a large radio station. Imagine the promoter's surprise, not to mention embarrassment, when the radio station not only liked the mistaken track but decided to add it to their rotation list. That's how DAVID AND THE GIANTS' song, Here's My Heart made it onto Top 40 airplay.

DAVID AND THE GIANTS will play the University Center's Ballroom on Nov. 7 at 7:00 p.m.. Admission is $3 at the door and is FREE to UNCW students.

The Candy Man Can If You Say It 3 Times

BY D. NEAL LEPPER
A & E Assistant Editor

I have determined that director Clive Barker is a sick little monkey.

Actually, I came to this conclusion long ago, and after seeing his current project, Candy Man, it only strengthens my opinion of him. However, I must admit that he is very creative, clever, and definitely a directing guru.

In this suspenseful film, Helen Kyle (Virginia Madsen), plays a young college student at the University of Illinois, who is hard at work with her friend (played by Vanessa Williams) on a thesis paper on local unexplained homicides that are blamed on a mythical being named Candy Man. It seems that many murders are centered in low income housing areas (projects) all throughout Chicago, centering in one main complex.

Our clever Madsen focuses in on this mysterious area and begins to probe deep within the secrets of the Candy Man and his past. She discovers the horrifying history that this evil man possesses, beginning with his lynching in 1819. It is rumored that he was somehow placed in a limbo state that has carried his spirit and hatred into 1992. Needless to say, he enjoys killing innocent people.

After being summoned by Madsen's life, he finds it difficult to allow her to live a normal life. So to get her to fall for him, "Candy" kills all of her friends and places the blame on Madsen. It eventually gets so bad that she is committed to the mental hospital and undergoes serious evaluation. Her wonderful husband, Trevor (played by Xandier Berkeley), leaves his beloved wife for a freshman girl in one of the classes in which he lectures.

After breaking out of the nuthouse and finding her husband with the other woman, she is not too happy. Needless to say, things are not going too well for Madsen. To make a long story short, she finds the inner strength to kill the bad guy as well as herself. Great ending, huh...?

In summary, the film was entertaining. I was not bored through the course of the feature, however, guessing the outcome and predictability was a downfall of the film.

The effects were gruesome and the suspense was there. I am not a big fan of horror movies, but this one was not a typical "slash-and-slash" so I'd recommend it to anyone for a night of entertainment.

On the normal scale of 1 to 10, Candy Man will receive a "5.6." Until next time!

Yonic

negative energy of nature; life force. 2. the dynamic energy of the Hindu God personified through the lingam.

—So what does all this boil down to?

—Practically every prop used to carry off the costumes were somehow phallic in nature—that is, somehow Yonic in nature. Displaying thousands of thirty students lust for the creative spark that keeps the life force of us moving down those all too often, stilled tracks; Halloween as a cause for celebration, an opportunity to wave your proverbial lingam or yoni in the air. From the extended cigars and light sabers to canes and sticks and scythes to basketballs and Frisbees and halos to horns and top guns and heavily stuffed pantyhose to whips and red round noses and towering cat-in-the-hat hats, the yonic connotation found in the celebration of Halloween serves as a reminder, a refresher to all the participants and observers of this uniquely American aspect of All Hallow's Eve of what shapes our notion of being human—the creative energy poised within each of us like a light behind an attic door.

—Hell yes, Halloween is cause enough to celebrate the creative prowess of the human spirit, but did the music live with the mood?

—A recent release of classic BIRTHDAY PARTY tunes has just been added to the burgeoning shelves of WLOZ's CD library. A disc that would make any Halloween festivities complete—especially to drive unwanted guests out at the end of the night. This CD, entitled Birthday Party Hits, is a 19 song compilation put out by 4 AD Records, one of the most seminal bands to emerge out of Australia, or anywhere for that matter, in the early 80's.

Nick Cave, that infamous crooner of the tombstone blues and heart attack living, formed BIRTHDAY PARTY out of the nucleus of his old band, THE BOYS NEXT DOOR, whose recorded work is said to not do their live performances justice. That is not the case with BIRTHDAY PARTY however. Leaving Melbourne, Australia in 1980 to live and breed in London, the displaced band from down under began to rip new holes in the buttocks of the British post punk scene. The combination of heavy, hypnotizing, super-charged rhythms from the bass of Tracy Pew, with the jagged-edged guitar work of Rowland S. Howard and Mick Harvey (who later switched to drums), and the wildly fluctuating escalator voice of Nick Cave sounding of woe and impending nihilistic cacophony lent BIRTHDAY PARTY an unforgiving sound that barks and bites as savagely when listened to today. (And if you listen to JESUS LIZARD after a listen to BIRTHDAY PARTY you can hear the angry echo of Australian angry sons.)

The CD Hits, is loaded with what was to become the Nick Cave and the Bad Seeds sound, the band which emerged to carry on the outlaw tradition. Songs such as Hamlet (Pow, Pow, Pow), Big Jesus-Trash-Can, and Zoo Music Girl look you in the eye and stare down into your seething intestines, managing to pull forth your own angst ridden dream, your own version of the bad gone to seed. Listen to the CD. Call up the station, request a song. Listen to the confessional lyrics of Nick Cave breaking down the nature of "love" and "desire." Listen to Nick Cave wail, "Oh, no, it's the living end, and I'm still living..."

THE Gutter

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

It's election day and your friendly sports editor is sitting here in the office, wondering what is in store for us in the next four years... in sports that is.

Will UNCW finally start the plans to legitimize this university and beg, plead, steal or do what ever it takes to acquire a football team (beside the club warriors)?

Enough of the bull, onto the subject of UNCW, will we ever have a chance to have a football team. Lets make some real predictions that have a chance of happening or at least in part happening. The following will be what this visionary sees the future holds in the world of sports.

In college basketball, UNC-Chapel Hill will win their second NCAA title, and the "Dean" will retire. His replacement will be former UNCW Coach McPherson, and he will unveil his revolutionary new offense and defense. The offense, which he called the "slash and burn," will be banned by the NCAA because it involves a twelve pass rotation around the three point line, one offensive foul for every four possessions, and a motionless rectangular attack. The defense, which the aging Dick Vitale will call the perfect execution of the collapsed anemba, will give up an average of 141 points a game. McPherson fees for his life after losing to The Citadel for the first time ever.

In pro basketball, the Chicago Bulls will win their third title in a row, only to find out that Michael will retire. Scottie Pippen, burden by the pressures of scoring will start to crack under the pressure and refuse to play without his imaginary friend George playing in the starting point guard spot. Pippen being fined by the league for his constant temper tantrums, will finally be let go by the team when he loses control of his bodily functions in a game against the conference rivals the Charlotte Hornets.

In pro football (yes, here it comes) I see the classic match-up of the "Mighty Men of Steel" (Pittsburgh Steelers) and the group on the rise that is causing much controversy around this office, the "Boys of Dallas." These two teams will become the terror of their respective divisions. But I hate Dallas, so let's just leave it at that before I, too, get phone calls from immature Cowboy fans. (By the way guys, for the record Chris has call tracing.)

College football, instead of a formal play-off system, will shorten the season and implement a 1001 item list of criteria that will allow teams like North Carolina's own Elon College a fair shot at the national championship. The item in question that allows such unprecedented fairness was item 468, which states that, "any team with a least one water boy that has a time of 4.6 in the forty receive 20 automatic votes for champion."

In the Carolinas, local grocery stores will form their own football and basketball leagues. The Winn Dixie Warriors led by ex-NFL Quarterback Mark Rypien holds the series lead over the Piggly Wiggly Panthers in their division. While the Harris-Tooter Thunderhawks, led by Fran Tarkenton, has a heated rivalry with the Wilson Windriders. Even thought the Carolinas were expecting to have NFL football by way of expansion, fans intensely and passionately enjoy all the excitement.

The White Sox will win another World-Series as their opposition's plane will crash into the side of a Little Debbie billboard that was just a little bit above the regulation size. Although the sign was noted as the largest billboard in the world, it lost this honor soon after the crash. The survivors were buried in their uniforms and a memorial service is held each year at the same spot in honor of flight 1313 that went down over Plaquemine, Arizona.

Swimmers Open Season Against Old Dominion

BY ERIK TOTTEN
Sports Writer

UNCW Swimming and Diving teams opened their season on Saturday against Old Dominion. Both the men's and women's teams of UNCW had convincing victories over ODU. The men team out-scored ODU's men 75 to 37 and the UNCW women winning their meet out-scoring the competition 62 to 50.

The Seahawk men won 8 out of the 13 events, with the wins coming in the 400m medley relay, the 200m freestyle, the 200m Individual Medley, 1 meter diving, the 200m butterfly, 100m freestyle, 200m backstroke and the 500m freestyle.

The Seahawks had four double winners- Clifton Perkins won the 200m Individual Medley and the 200m butterfly, Mark Ruggiero won the 200m freestyle and the 500m freestyle for the men, with Cameron King winning the 500m and 1000m freestyle, and Pathom Houtz taking the 50m and 100m freestyle for the women.

The women also won eight out of the 13 events, with the wins coming in the 1000m freestyle, 200m freestyle, 50m freestyle, 200m individual medley, 1 meter diving, 100m freestyle, 200 meter backstroke and the 500m freestyle.

With many of the swimmers recording some of their personal best times it should be a very exciting season. The Seahawks next meet will be on Sunday, November 8, at William & Mary.

James Madison captured the men's title while William & Mary claimed the women's title for the third consecutive year. Brian Hyde of William & Mary won the men's 5 mile race with a time of 25:12 and Janice Brown, also of William & Mary, won the women's 3.16 mile race with a time of 17:10.

The UNCW men and women finished 5th and the women placed fourth. Senior Amy Jackson was named to the All-CAA Team coming in 9th with a time of 18:26. Also running the race for the Seahawk

Senior runner Sam Bobbit was the top runner for the UNCW men coming in 15th with a time of 26:08. The final meet for the cross-country teams will be the NCAA District III meet November 14 in Greenville, South Carolina.

Men's Basketball Walk-on Tryouts

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

It may have looked a bit helter skelterish, but somewhere out there on the court of Hanover Hall amongst all of the hopefuls that wished to become a future Seahawk was the newest addition to the UNCW Men's basketball team.

Last Sunday, on the first night of the walk on tryouts, twelve people with the dream and the vision of Seahawk Basketball in their hearts, assembled in Hanover Hall to display their talents and skills so that they might be selected for the team.

"We are looking for a person that has the talent, team skills and the attitude to adapt to our program," said Assistant Coach Samuels.

If asked, the twelve hopefuls on that court would probably give twelve different reasons for why they are trying out for the team.

Hopeful Patrick Boykin said, "It has always been my dream to one day play college (basket) ball. My high school coaches said I have the talent to play on this level, I just have to develop it."

With a scrimmage amongst the hopefuls, and offensive and defensive transition drills as the primary assessment of talent, potential or whatever the coaches were looking for, it was obvious that most of the participants could not relax as the mental errors escalated in time instead of diminishing.

At one point the play even got a little physical for no one wanted to be embarrassed by a person on the break, so instead of giving up an easy two points some chose to foul, hoping to save face.

The scrutiny from the coach was on, as the men slid from a scrimmage to the transition drill the strengths and the hopes of a few began to dwindle.

At the conclusion of the session the hopefuls were informed that their was to be one more night of drills before any decision was to be made.

With only ten players available for action this season for the men Seahawks squad, the person selected may see limited time in select situations only if the skills of this person can be quickly cultivated into a workable tool for the team.

Gov. Martin presents award

Chihuly Named National Living Treasure

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

Washington State glass artist Dale Chihuly was honored as the first National Living Treasure Tuesday night in the University Center ballroom. Governor Jim Martin and Chancellor Jim Leitz presented Chihuly with a bronze medal designed by Steven LeQuire, UNCW associate professor of fine arts, and a cash supplement. Delta Sigma Phi Fraternity sponsored the event.

The award was founded by Dr. Jerry Shinn, UNCW professor of philosophy and director of The Institute for Human Potential. The award, an outgrowth of the State Living Treasure award, will be presented every two years. Dr. Shinn, who could not attend the ceremony due to illness, said about the award that "it is time we sought excellence in our country, and this is one small attempt to prize it."

The first National Living Treasure Dale Chihuly's 'Venturi Window' display in the Seattle Art Museum.

Mr. Chihuly was deeply honored by the award and said, "It's a wonderful award to get... I'm sure there were many other qualified people. I got lucky, I would say."

Mr. Chihuly showed a video of his production techniques and slides of some of his finished works. He has been honored for his work in Paris; Sao Paulo, Brazil; Santiago, Chile; Tokyo; Prague, Czechoslovakia; and Honolulu. He is about to embark on a world-wide tour to open displays of his work.

Mr. Chihuly said he will donate one of his Macchia series pieces to UNCW for display. The Macchias are colored glass balls that defied all rules of color theory and yet worked brilliantly.

Steve Pence, president of Delta Sigma Phi, said the fraternity will stay actively involved in the National Living Treasure award. "It's good for us to be a part of it."

Minors Available to Dec. & Mar. Grads

BY LAURA KEETER
Staff Writer

Seniors graduating this December and May, may be the first to receive any of twelve minors now offered at UNCW.

"If the minor has been approved, even if it's not in the 92/93 catalogue, a student can still obtain that minor," Dr. James P. McNab, Department Chairperson of Foreign Languages and Literature said. "And that process is very simple."

To graduate with the distinction, students who are not in the same catalogue the minor is published in, if its published at all, must go to the department and find the minor advisor to sign a waiver form.

"These are designated advisors for minors in each department," he said.

Approved minors are: Chemistry, Political Science, Anthropology, Sociology, French, German, Spanish, History, Philosophy, Religion, and two interdisciplinary minors: Gerontology and Science, Humanity and Society (SHS), said Dr. Carolyn H. Simmons, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Students need 18 hours in the 200/300 levels to fulfill the requirements for a minor.

Interdisciplinary minors involve different departments working together to "offer as a package" related courses, Dean Simmons said. Faculty committees are now working on possible interdisciplinary minors in Latin American Studies, Caribbean Studies, and European Studies, she said.

The interest for minors came from the faculty, Dean Simmons said. The faculty Senate made the proposal for minors and then passed it in April 1991.

Chancellor Leitz signed the proposal in Sept. 1991 to approve it. After it was approved, she said, the faculty, "worked fast to develop Developed minors had to then be approved by Dean Simmons and the provost.

"I'm delighted that we have so many of these," she said, "I think the minors help students demonstrate that they have some comprehensive knowledge in a secondary area." This is helpful, she said, when students are applying for graduate school or a job.

School Board's Moves to be Scrutinized

BY AMY BRENNAN
Staff Writer

The newly elected New Hanover County school board is considering a program that could lead to segregation, critics say.

The Board, which has a 4-3 Republican majority has proposed redistricting that would create "neighborhood schools."

The board has also discussed the idea of letting parents choose the school they want their children to attend. The board believes giving parents this option is the first priority.

Dr. Bellamy, who was Superintendent of Schools from 1968 to 1981, is leery of these plans. He asks, "Does this county really want to step back and go to a segregated school system after the progress that was made at such a cost during the '60s and '70s?"

Dr. Bellamy said he hopes the board will think very hard before it does something that would upset the racial balance in the schools.

The new Democratic board members, who ran for election and won as a team, complained that Democrats are more concerned about social issues like segregation than education.

In order to attract students to the inner-city schools like Gregory, the board proposes "magnet" schools which would specialize in a particular subject. Board members believe this would clear up the school's "perception problem" which is due to its location.

Harry Tuchmayer, a Democrat who lost his seat on the board, is worried about the future of the county's schools. "My worry is we're not going to produce for kids... let's see what happens in two years. Let's see what direction our county goes in."

Union In Financial Trouble

BY CAROLE MEHLE
Staff Writer

The deficit is being felt everywhere these days, especially in the University Union and other fee supported organizations.

The Union is delving into its fund balance—money set aside for special needs—to keep the programs and services it delivers afloat. Linda Moore, director of the University Union, said that there is a 5% gap—about $40,000—in the over $800,000 budget.

The only way to solve the problem facing the Union and other organizations is to increase the student fees—something that has been denied at the state level for the past three years.

Moore said that the Union gets $50.50 for a full time student and that the fee was supposed to increase over three years when the University Center was built. If the fee raise had gone through, Moore said the problem would have never materialized.

The Union's Planning and Finance Committee is looking at ways to approach a reduction in the deficit facing the Union in two different ways: through a fee increase or a decrease of expenditures. "They are coming up with a plan from those two sides."

Some of the programs that the Union features are: the student employee program, room reservation and event hosting, the Information Center, the Student Activities Office, the Game Room, Arts In Action, The Leadership Center and the Discover Outdoor Leadership Center. As well as these programs, there are programs that are parts of these programs, like Emergence II, the Black Student Leadership Network, the Challenge Course, ACE and LEAD Consultants.

As well as sponsoring programs, the Union has other fixed expenses. Moore said, are things such as support areas of Administration, Computing, Campus Police, telephone service, and utilities.

Because these expenses cannot be cut, the Union is cutting corners to avoid taking any more money out of their fund balance. Some of the corners that are being cut involve the elimination of student positions, the printing of the Student Leader's Planning Calendar, computer supplies for student use, Arts-In-Action meet the artist receptions and cancellation of participation in programs.

Despite the fact that the Union has limited funds with which to work, the programs are growing. Moore said the progress is because the students are more active in university life. Moore said more paper goes into the process, more of everything must go around. Through September 1992, student organizations, volunteer programs, room reservations, LEAD workshops and Discover Trips have grown in popularity. Moore reported that student organizations are up 20% and room reservations are up 38%.

Moore added that 93% of the Union's fees that come from fees. "Because the Union relies heavily on fees, the fact that we didn't get our needs met in 1990 hurts us."

Alcohol Awareness

GAMMA Breathes New Life

BY ED MOSELEY
Staff Writer

This semester campus Greek organizations strengthened their membership and are encouraging the wise use of alcohol.

Greeks Advocating the Mature Management of Alcohol (GAMMA) is also redefining themselves and explaining their purpose.

The UNCW GAMMA chapter, was founded in spring 1990 by Chris Trefethen.

Diane Edwards, GAMMA representative from Alternatives! said the group, "wasn't terrible active in the formative years, but we're now trying to breathe new life into it."

Michael Pittman, GAMMA vice-president said, "At the beginning of the semester we had slim attendance, but now we have most [fraternities and sororities] coming to our meetings."

There is one representative to "70% of sexual assaults, occur when alcohol is involved."

Stephanie Hall

GAMMA from each fraternity and sorority. The Interfraternity Council, Panhellenic Council, Pan-Hellenic Council, SADD, Alternatives! and a GAMMA advisor complete the membership roll.

Pittman hopes increased membership will dispel the myth that, "GAMMA is a mother-club. What GAMMA actually wants to do is get people to be responsible, when using alcohol, he said.

GAMMA advisor and Assistant Dean of Students, Robert Smith said GAMMA is not, "Advocating abstinence of the use of alcohol. That is an individual decision.

"We are encouraging chapters to include alcohol awareness programs in their pledge education," he said.

Stephanie Hall, GAMMA treasurer said, "We're just trying to raise awareness right now, get more Greeks involved, so everyone will understand that our message is to drink responsibly and think about your decisions."

"Seventy percent of sexual assaults occur when alcohol is involved," she said.

Pittman said GAMMA is participating in Sexual Assault Week next week.

Also, Pittman and Hall are looking forward to developing a designated driver program which would be easy for each organization to establish and to practice.

GAMMA will be putting signs up on campus to gain awareness and a display case at University Center. They are hoping to have an Alcohol Awareness Week in the spring.

Raise GPA With New Policy

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

As exams loom in the distance, keep in mind the new policy that went into effect this semester. The "Repeat of Course" Policy is new and is to replace the information published on pages 78-79 of the 1992-93 University Undergraduate Catalog and on page 11 of the 1992-93 Student Handbook.

The policy notice sent to students past office hours says:

Students who receive a grade of "D" or "F" in a course taken at UNCW may repeat the course. The first five times a student repeats a course, the previous grade and hours of credit for the repeated course will no longer be used in calculating the student's quality point average and hours toward graduation. All grades shall remain on the student's transcript.

In interpreting the policy it is to be understood that:

- 1) the term "first five times" means (a) that the policy is automatically operative for a student the first time that the student repeats a course and continues through the fifth time a student repeats a course; and (b) that the five repeats may involve five different courses of fewer courses repeated more than once.
- 2) a student may go beyond five course repeats, but such repeats will not enjoy the privilege of the policy.
- 3) all students will be able to enjoy the benefits of this policy irrespective of prior course repeat activity.
- 4) this policy does not govern the repeating of graduate courses.

Carolyn Larkins, records clerk in the Registrar Office, says, "The policy affects only classes taken here at UNCW."

Classes taken at another college in which a student received a "D" or "F" must be made up at that college.

The policy says a student can repeat as many UNCW courses as the student wants, but only the first five repeats, beginning with the Fall 1992 semester, will be affected by this policy.

The policy says it can be any combination of courses. One class can be repeated five times, five classes repeated once each, or any combination in between adding up to five.

It's Over; The Fat Lady Sang

Those long lines seen last Tuesday were not to vote, they were UNCW students registering for classes.

how happy she was to get classes in "Creative Story Telling" taught by Professor Clinton, "Deceptive Communications" taught by Professor Bush, and "Good Business/One liners" taught by a new Professor Perot.

Three months ago, President Bush inferred that he didn't know exactly where the tiny little state of Arkansas was, but I bet he knows now. In fact, I'll bet he passes through there in January on his way to Mexico to look for a good paying job. Former Secretary of State/Tel evangelist Jim Baker said that it was real tough to lose "those squeakers." I think that's what Mondale said back in 1984.

President-elect Clinton must have taken a deep breath in relief that the campaign was over also (I wonder if he inhaled?). He promised a "new beginning" which was, by the way, the subtitle of Friday the Thirteenth Part VI. We will just have to wait and see if our new Commander in Chief will live up to all that he has promised to do.

And speaking of "Friday the Thirteenth," guess what tomorrow is (It ain't Arbor Day). Yes friends, this week happens to include that day of all days, the day Hollywood has made so famous with class B horror flicks, the one that has made "Jason" a household name, a day most Americans are so afraid of that they want to just stay home in bed. (Especially, if they have a fireplace poker driven through their skull by some crazed teenager wearing a hockey mask!) And in honor of this Friday the thirteenth, I'm reprinting, for your reading enjoyment, my TEN THINGS NOT TO DO IF YOU EVER STAR IN A CLASS B HORROR FILM.

1. Do not go to camp anywhere near a town called "Salem".

2. Do not open any door if blood is running out of the bottom of it.

3. Do not, when being chased by an ax-murderer, jump into the nearest Volkswagen; IT WILL NOT start.

4. Do not go into a room for which there is no exit or window to jump out of. There is nothing worse than being trapped in such a room by a machete wielding psychopath.

5. Do not, when walking through the woods, ignore the "...dun dun...ch ch...kill kill kill..." you may hear; run like there is a propane torch on your rear. (See also: Rule 9)

6. Do not keep saying, "John, is that you?," if John does not answer. If John's head was still connected to his body, he would answer.

7. Do NOT hide under the bed. This is not your mother you are hiding from.

8. Do not think for a minute that you can "whip" the ax-murderer. Ax-murderers are, by nature, very strong and not easily whipped.

9. Do not, while running from an ax-murderer, fall down. This simply is not the best time to catch a cramp.

10. Do not, under any circumstances, go BACK INTO the house in which your friends have just been slaughtered. You can bet your life (literally) that the ax-murderer is still in the house and waiting for you.

I sincerely hope that you never find yourself caught in one of these situations. But at least now you can know how to handle it and get away with your head intact.

This week's Hats Off Award is shared between H. Ross Perot and President Bush. Perot, in the face of utter defeat, called on his fellow Americans to "let the healing begin" and to band together to fix the problems of this country. No sour grapes from Ross. Also, I think the President is to be commended for the way he handled his overwhelming defeat. He used the same words, "The People Have Spoken" that he used at his victory speech four years ago. That indicates his full acceptance of the people's will. Hats off to George and Ross.

This week's Shoes Off award is also split, between two beloved campus offices. Firstly to the registrar's office. You guys should sign up for "Public Relations 101" if you can still get in. The rest of the award goes to the Health and Wellness Center for that cheesy letter to the editor last week. The fact remains that students go over there every day with eye infections and strained ankles, only to be told they have chlamydia. Shoes Off to the Registrar's Office and The UNCW STD/Birth Control center.

Well friends, that's about all for this week. Perhaps I'll get around to doing the "Can I Even Remember What I Did Last Summer" issues in the weeks to come. Have a safe and happy Friday the thirteenth. Until next time...keep your mind out of the gutter and your head out of the toilet.

Library Isn't The Monk

People throwing paper. People screaming. People chasing each other. Sound like a zoo? No, it could be one typical evening at UNCW's Randall library.

Remember when the library was a quiet place one went to get the best studying possible done. It was a place one would receive a very nasty look if talking too loud. Oh! ho! no more. The new status quo has changed quite a bit.

The library is now the latest hot new happening social scene. Forget the Zoo or the Monk. The new place to hang out and see everybody else that isn't doing anything either on a school night, is the library.

Sad as it is to say, I think the Greeks may be partly responsible. Several years ago many of them started having mandatory study hours for their pledges. Now, when you get a bunch of girls and guys, that socialize with each other most of the time anyway, in the same place, don't expect complete silence and a strict observation of library rules. The little pledges saw one thing, PARTY. In all fairness, everybody that whoops it up in the library today is not Greek, but they are just probably following suit.

More power to study hours, but just do it somewhere else. Some of us are here trying to get an education or simply graduate, whichever comes first.

There are several alternatives to using the library if you are a loud noisy group. No offense intended to those quiet unisnoisy groups. The student union and center offer rooms for groups. They can be reserved or in most cases are just available on a first come first serve basis.

Nobody is trying to put blame where it isn't due, but just go over to Randall on any evening, except Friday and Saturday. The parties are there, really at the Zoo and the Monk. What will meet you may scare you. It is hard to even think in there, let alone find a book or try and read a passage you wouldn't understand under the best circumstances.

A little courtesy is all it would take to make Randall a nice quiet place again. So the next time you feel the urge to ask so and so, in a very audible tone, what they are doing Friday night, DONT.

Long Live King Richard! Thanks!

A long reign comes to an end Sunday in Atlanta. Richard Petty, NASCAR's all-time leader in victories (200) and championships (7), is retiring. The familiar #43 STP Pontiac will make its final laps with "the King" behind the wheel in the Hooters 500, the final race in the 1992 Winston Cup season.

No single person has had as much an impact on his sport as Petty has had on his. Petty has seen and done it all for NASCAR, everything from winning championships to staying after races to sign autographs.

Anybody who has watched Winston Cup racing knows just how important to the sport Petty has been and how respected he is among drivers and fans. Dale Earnhardt, driver of the #3 Mr. Goodwrench Chevrolet, has said no one will ever equal the feats Petty accomplished in his career.

Though the sport's competition has increased so much that 100 wins in a career would be an accomplishment and there are only 29 (possibly 30) races in a season now, the King is more than a driver and car number to the sport and its fans. Tom Higgins, the NASCAR reporter for the Charlotte Observer says a news crew from Ghana, an African nation, has asked for press credentials for the race.

Though King Richard hasn't won a race since the Firecracker 400 in Daytona, on July 4, 1984, he has excited the crowd numerous times since. No matter which driver a fan is sporting on his shirt, hat, seat cushion, or any other device large enough to stamp a company logo on, when King Richard puts on a strong run for the lead, every fan is on his feet cheering wildly for Petty. It seems every fan has two favorite drivers, Richard Petty and ...

We saw his horrific crash at Daytona in the Daytona 500 in which his car got airborne, went into the fence protecting the spectators sending sheet metal all over the place, and did seven rolls before coming to a stop on the track in the front-struck. Then his car was struck by Brett Bodine's disabled car, sending him into another series of spins. He walked away with only a sprained ankle, and raced the next week.

King Richard is a living treasure, not only to the sport of NASCAR, but to the United States as well. He may be handing the steering wheel over to Rick Wilson, his driver for next year, but Petty Enterprises will still be around. The King will still own the team and be a fixture on the circuit for years to come.

There is only one word to say to King Richard, "Thanks!"

Hail, King Richard! Long live the King!

Bob Haywood

Exhaustion Isn't Answer To Balanced Life

Inner peace is key to successful life.

While on an island off the coast of Maine this summer, a main sporting event was seeking flat stones and trying to skip this across the water. Five skips was all that I could manage and then the stones sank out of sight. In a reflective insight, it struck me that a lot of us live our days skimming across the surface of our lives from one event to another only to sink out of sight in exhaustion at night. Then we get up the next day, skip across life again only to sink again.

Now, somewhere past the midpoint of this semester, I have talked to student after student whose days are lived in just that fashion, maintaining friendships, keeping up with studies, doing papers, preparing for exams, and then sinking exhausted into bed. To be so rushed and busy prevents any kind of helpful "sinking down" in order to plunge the depths of one's feelings and experiences in connection with the deeper dimensions of life. What makes it worse sometimes is that many young adults have never had any experience of "sinking into the depths" in order to be able to appreciate its value.

The essential element involved in such renewing and sustaining times is to begin to make friends with silence and solitude. There is just not much of that going on in students' lives.

I would suggest that the simplest way to get into such a space is by taking a walk by yourself and seeing if you can let all the inner noise begin to quiet, as well as, a walking away from the external "noise" of dorm rooms, classes, cafeterias, and so on.

If you can ever turn off the inner noise of thought after thought rolling through your mind, you are going to find yourself suddenly experiencing increasing awareness of that moment and that place. There will be stillness. You will find a sense of peace that can only be adequately defined by the experience itself.

You will also find in that moment, in that heightened awareness, something of peace and rest.

To cultivate solitude an silence is to find a way to stand aside from your daily "skipping stone" experience. It will nourish your spirit as much as good food nourishes your body.

I think it is good news to discover that there is a means to feel grounded and good that does not relate to producing grades or pleasing people. There is a place of well-being that exists already in you. It only takes slowing down, quieting down, and paying attention. Peace be with you.

closed-minded mentality will not only be denied positions in the White House, but the Senate, House, and the Supreme Court as well.

Until that day though, I suppose all we can do is hope the average American is too

On the matter of character, the last two presidents threatened with impeachment were Republicans, Nixon and Bush.

Covey Mitchell;

Editor,

As a transfer from Duquesne University, in Pittsburgh, Pa., my impression of UNCW was brought into clear focus last weekend in October. The occasion was a two-day visit of my grandparents from Hampton, Va. Having lived across the street from them since I was born, we are extremely close. At their request, I arranged for them to meet and talk with my professors, the A.D. (Mr. Paul Miller), basketball coaches and players, and student friends in the cafeteria.

Editor,

The display case in the foyer of the University Center is to be used for the promotion of various campus organizations. The latest poster on display in the case was in no way meant to promote the group that put it in there. The poster entitled "Stick Willie" did nothing but insult women, African Americans, Hispanics, gays, environmentalists, Catholics, and Jews.

We believe in the Constitutional right of free speech and freedom of expression, so it never crossed our minds to ask to have it removed. But being educated college students, we were never-the-less shocked at the lack of social consciousness exhibited by the College Republicans.

The sincere and friendly manner in which all these individuals greeted my grandparents and expressed their interest in me revealed the spirit and quality of a superb school. I am very proud and grateful for the opportunity of being here for the next three years and becoming a UNCW graduate.

As president-elect Clinton said, America is changing, and I, personally, am glad the CR's chose to exercise their 1st Amendment right in this manner. With more and more social, ethnic, and special interest groups finding their political voices, and extremist Republicans building themselves up by tearing others down, perhaps we will see the day when people with this type of

STAR to Kick Off Sexual Assault Awareness Week Monday

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

The UNCW Student Team Against Rape (STAR) will be sponsoring its third annual Sexual Assault Awareness Week (November 16-22) Monday. The team will offer programs and workshops to educate and make the university populace more aware of the problem of sexual assault.

Tina Gertsch, STAR Student Coordinator, said that though there is not a big problem of sexual assault on UNCW, all the information on campus assaults does not accurately reflect the true number of assaults that occur. "We are not sure of how big the problem is because most assaults aren't reported. On the national average, only one in ten is reported. Here on UNCW, the average has been one rape per semester for the last three years."

Because some victims don't want their names to become known, even to the police, the Campus Police has a "Blind Report" the victim can fill out. The form is the same as a regular police report, but the victim can leave the name off. The police then can use this report to accumulate statistics and build a case file for the alleged rapist. It is the victim's choice to prosecute. The police will cooperate completely with the victim's choices.

The purpose of Sexual Assault Awareness Week is to heighten awareness of sexual assault to the students and the rest of the campus. "It is a problem that affects everybody, male and female," Gertsch said.

Gertsch added that the team has given presentations to on-campus groups but not many non-traditional students. This week is designed to alert everyone to the problem and to the resources available in case an attack occurs.

The motto for this year's event is "Strength Among Us: Stand Against Sexual Assault!!!"

The team will have an information and resource table set up in the University Center from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. everyday next week. Representatives from STAR, the Rape Crisis Center, the Domestic Violence Shelter and Services, and Campus Police will be on hand to answer questions.

The team will also be distributing purple ribbons to wear as a display of care and awareness. The ribbons will be available at the table in the University Center and at Alternatives!.

On Monday, there will be a "Common Sense Self-Defense" course given by John Maynard from the Champion Karate Center, in the Hanover Hall Aerobics Room, at 7 p.m.

Diane Edwards, Coordinator of Alternatives!, will discuss "Sex, Drugs, and Alcohol: When is When?" at 7 p.m. in University Center Ballroom 3.

On Tuesday at 7 p.m., Peggy Thompson and Alysa Metzger, STAR team members, will present "For Love Not Fear" in the Suites Services Building.

Wednesday at noon in the Center Stage Cafe, Dating Rites: Gang Rape on Campus will be shown. This 30-minute docu-drama addresses the myths and facts about gang rape and its effects on the survivors.

At 7 p.m., Kris Shepherd and Tammy Richardson, STAR members, will present "For Love Not Fear" in Galloway Hall's 1st Floor TV Lounge.

Also at 7 p.m., Dee Hamilton, Coordinator of the Substance Abuse Counseling Services, will present "Beyond Survival: Dealing With the Aftermath of Sexual Assault/Abuse." This forum will focus on the issues that survivors of sexual assault or abuse confront.

On Thursday, The Accused will be shown in Center Stage Cafe at 5:30 p.m. Jodie Foster stars in this fact-based account of one woman's gang rape and aftermath. Kelly McGillis also stars. Free pizza will be available.

On Friday, the winners of the banner contest and logo contest will be announced.

New Feature

Greek Happenings

BY JULIE PODLASEK
Staff Writer

The Seahawk has decided to keep an updated column that deals with activities going on within the different Greek organizations.

Greeks on this campus currently make up 12% of the student body. According to Bob Smith, the new Greek Advisor, "The Greek system is working hard to improve itself and the development of its own members. Chapters are now developing new and positive pledge education programs, creating responsible social programs, and scholarship has become a higher priority."

Speaking Greek

With a combination of efforts from Alternatives!, LivWell and the Student Development Center, there has been a "Speaking Greek" series every Tuesday night at 7 p.m. Issues discussed are ones of interest to most students such as sex, drinking, academics, leadership, and much more.

Phi Kappa Phi, recently had their annual PUSH-A-THON where brothers pushed each other around campus in a wheelchair for 72 consecutive hours. The money raised by donations goes towards handicapped people around the United States.

Chi Phi and Phi Mu created a Haunted Forest for Halloween to raise money for a child in need of a bone marrow transplant.

Sigma Alpha Epsilon pledges help out at Crossroads, where they are a Big Brother to boys of high risk families. They play basketball, football, and other various activities.

Alpha Xi Delta sisters visit children at the Wilmington Boys Club every week. Over Halloween, they carved pumpkins. They also tutor the children in the after school program.

Alpha Gamma Delta and Phi Mu recently had their Aerobathon where they exercised for 48 consecutive hours. They raised around $2000 for three different philanthropies.

Sigma Sigma Sigma recently joined the Masonboro Society which buys out the land on Masonboro Island, the last undeveloped Barrier Island of the southeast coast of North Carolina. They also just adopted a Humpback Whale.

Alpha Phi also works with kids from Crossroads.

Alpha Delta Pi had its annual rock-a-thon last weekend to raise money for the Ronald McDonald House.

Intramurals
Another program the Greeks are also very active in is intramural sports. Throughout the school year groups have the option to play flag football, soccer, basketball, volleyball, and softball. You can currently catch them playing men and women's soccer and basketball. Congratulations go to the Sigma Nu who just won the IFC flag football tournament this past weekend, and to Sigma Alpha Epsilon who seized the championship in the regular season.

If you would like to see your organization mentioned in the next Greek column, please send us your news *

This Plane Is Definitely Worth Hijacking

BY D. NEAL LEEPER
A&E Assistant Editor

Several years ago, Hollywood produced a film that captivated audiences. This film, Die Hard, starring Bruce Willis, grossed millions of dollars in ticket and video sales as well as an equally magnificent sequel. This winning combination of action and suspense, as well as the use of popular actors and actresses, has spread throughout moviegoing in a variety of "cop/cyber" movies. Passenger 57, starring Wesley Snipes, is not an exception.

Snipes, an ex-anti terrorist fighter, is hired by Atlantic Airlines to train flight attendants on how to react during a hijacking attempt. Sounds like an interesting job, huh? He is somehow persuaded by company heavies to advance up on the corporate ladder to Vice President of the airline; head of security. On his trip across the country to the headquarters of the airline, unknown to him, he is placed upon a plane that is the Federal Bureau of Investigation is using to transport one of the world's most well known plane hijackers. You are probably thinking the same thing I am, "Why are they taking this PLANE HIJACKER by AIR across the country... Why not by train or chartered bus?" It's just like placing a little child in a candy store unattended.

Well, guess what this nice, charming terrorist does? Yes folks, he hijacks the plane. With the help of food service workers and flight attendants that are obviously working for him, he seizes control of the 747 airliner. While all the shooting and thrilling effects occur near the passengers (yes, I'm being heavily facetious), Snipes is using the restroom facility. After hearing the outside activity and understanding the critical situation, he reaches out of the bathroom, swipes his VISA card through the air phone, and calls headquarters. One of the hijackers sees Snipes closing the bathroom door and investigates. From there, the wonderfully choreographed, high action karate and "fightin'" scenes begin. Snipes is able to seize an innocent stewardess and descend to the plane's lower level. From there, they work as a team and empty the plane of fuel, therefore, persuading the plane to make an emergency landing in PO dunk, Mississippi.

From here, the plot progressively goes nowhere. Snipes is able to get off of the plane only to find himself arrested by the intellectual sheriff's department. After all, anyone that looks like Snipes is guilty, right? So, after dealing with the police department in his own special tactical way and joining forces with the State Police, F.B.I., and anti-terrorist snipers from the SWAT team, Snipes, after a long, boring chase scene through a carnival, is able to catch the bad guy and save the day. And in the very end, as most movies nowadays end, Snipes falls in love with the stewardess and lives happily ever after.

If you have not guessed it by now, I found this film to be a major disappointment. I actually told many of my friends that this film would be the one to talk about for months to come. However, it lacked plot, substance, and the effects and one-liners were extremely weak. If you were wondering how the movie got its title, when the passengers were being checked in by the flight attendant, yes, Snipes was the 57th person to be counted. Of course, the lady next to him (Passenger 58) thought he was Arsenio Hall. But, I know this was not true because Arsenio would not take such a lame roll. On a scale ranging from 1 to 10, this film will receive a 4, for "mildly entertaining." Until next time!

Isabella Opens

Opera House Theatre Company is proud to announce its presentation of an exciting new musical Isabella, with book, music, and lyrics by R.V. Fulk, Jr., a Wilmington physician and accomplished musician.

Isabella is the musical story of Isabella Stewart Gardner, the grande dame of the Boston art scene in the late 1800's. Lou Criscuolo will direct a cast of 35. Brad and Jennifer Moranz will choreograph, and Ellen Robinson will be the musical director and conductor of a 20 piece orchestra comprised of talented local musicians and musicians from the North Carolina School of the Arts. A large and talented ensemble completes the stellar cast.

Opulent costuming and sets will recreate the glitz of the 19th Century Boston social scene. The production promises to be worthy of its heroine, one of the founders of the Boston Symphony and the Boston Opera.

All performances will be held on the main stage of Thalian Hall. Performances are Nov. 13-15 and 18-22; all performances are at 8:00 p.m. For ticket information and reservations, call 763-3398 or 343-3664.

Entertainment Writers Wanted

BY D. NEAL LEEPER
A&E Assistant Editor

With the semester coming to a close and RahMona Hupp actually allowing me to advance to Art & Entertainment Editor for Spring 1993 and beyond, I have found myself with a big, new job with a plethora (my favorite word) of space for writers. So, with that in mind, hear my plea.

If you have EVER considered writing for a publication such as The Seahawk, now is the best time to apply for a position. I am looking for competent writers to review movies, video releases, albums, concerts, or whatever you want to comment on for the Spring 1993 semester and beyond. If there is something that you find entertaining or "artsy" and want to write about it, let me know! Experience is not necessary and I am willing to work with anyone that has a sincere interest in journalism. For those of you that have written in the past and want to come back, now is the best time. It is a fun thing to do and really does not take up much of your time. Besides, having your work in print for all to see is a worthwhile thing.

To reserve your spot as an Arts & Entertainment writer, stop by room 205-E of the University Union and pick up an application. If you have any additional questions on the position, you can give me (Neal Leeper) a call at 350-4621.

"What's extraordinary about Madonna is that she's made all these rotten records, and she's this awful, ugly, dull person who—by virtue of the fact that she's completely fearless and shameless and blatant and cheap and bad—has become successful."
—Roger Walters of the ROLLING STONES

The Streets Vibrated With Power Tools

BY JEFF NELSON

"Oh, God, how I love to hate." MUDHONEY, In 'n Out of Grace.

There is a void of meaning within each of us. Not exactly blackness, it could just as easily be blending whiteness. How easily we distort the angles of nature to fit our own idiosyncratic needs. The nature of hate playing within us like a subtle campfire in the middle of the pine barrens—and to hell with those trees and the warm-blooded animals if it is a dry season and the fire is left unattended (those cold-blooded bastards just burrow into the ashes and wait).

There are those of us who love to hate: hate your friends, hate the police, hate your parents, hate your enemies, hate your teachers, hate your lovers, hate the black, or hate the white, or hate the red spilling from our eyes. There's no end to what, or who, or how much you can hate these days; it's especially easy to hate the one you love the most, or had once loved, or still love, or will come to love. Yes, the beauty of hate surrounds us as the careful sutures of a world class surgeon operating on his father surround his time honored wounds.

Harry Crews knows some of hate. That man-hates-man antagonism grips the protagonists of his novels like a warm fist grabbing a block of dry ice—the feeling of warmth and icebergs coming to a head inside them.

A resident of Florida, and a teacher of English, currently at University of Florida, Harry Crews' novels draw comparisons from the Southern Gothic tradition of Flannery O'Connor to the film noir detective thrillers of Jim Thompson. The title of Crews' novels lead a sense of the impending turbulence waiting for the reader within their pages: Naked In Garden Hills, All We Need Of Hell, A Feast Of Snakes and The Knockout Artist among others, speak to the reader of the contrarities of life/death, love/hate, beauty/ugliness that dwell side by side within the rather small confines of the human spirit.

Harry's feature players are people who possess a certain aptitude for the various skills of persuasion. They are talented fighters, defenders, detectives, gospel singers, writers, or become so through the course of the novel. There is a Canadian view of nature as the dark mistress, arbiter of our fears and longings, where symbols of Christianity and popular culture, of apocalypse and apothecosis, transform the protagonist to antagonist in the role of celebrated Devil God wallowing in humanities need to worship the macabre and murderous threat of a world immanent with the suggestions of hate.

"I had elected in my fevered search for honorable adjustment to the America scene, not to submit and in doing so I had embraced the daily horror of anxiety, of tension, of eternal disquiet."—Richard Wright, American Hunger

Once again I can hear the sound of many shotguns whistling in the distance. The sound is coming as a whirlwind—a combination of tape loops, trash can lids, tinker bells, gong echoes, lost 50's TV soundtracks, blistering guitar distortions, the pounding of many drums, the wailing vocals of men and women hailing from San Francisco.

Yes, the THINKING FELLERS UNION LOCAL 282, with guests SUN CITY GIRLS, will be in town at Jacob's Run on Friday, Nov. 13. Oh, lucky day for all the faithful, for all the white noise addicts, for all groove mind meld freaks from the 60's psychedelict movement to the punk impression of the late 70's to the sonic boom/fuzz of the 80's to 90's eclecticism.

With the release of their 3rd album—which I suppose will be on Matador Records like their last release over a year ago, Lovelyville—the THINKING FELLERS have effectively blended the arcane elements of our music heritage with more accessible components: blues chord structures amped up to a heavy metal heroes Zeppelin intensity of songs like "2" x 4's or Sinking Boats, to a catchy ramblings like the cowpoke ditties captured in the "7" releases such as Hell Rules and Narius Spectre or the all out assault of anger marching to a harrowing voice as in Leaky Bag.

The THINKING FELLERS are young post college students with a penchant for feedback and chord progression expression that as one witness of their show last year in Chapel Hill recalled, "explosion" in my face like a burst water main in the heat of a Texas summer."

Their music may not fit in with the Top 40 radio charts—but that is certainly a debatable point (and do the majority really listen to those stations anyway, or do you just turn the knob and space out to the background music?). In continuing search for anti-mainstream means of expression both the THINKING FELLERS UNION and the SUN CITY GIRLS "embrace the daily horror of anxiety, of tension, of eternal disgust" and turn it into a moving kaleidoscope of our cultures many hidden facets.

There is dissonance, and then there is Stravinski performing dissonance in 1903 as the Rites of Spring. Stravinski is dead. Dissonance lives on; the THINKING FELLERS UNION LOCAL 282 throw the wood of decayed houses on the fire of discord and dissonance and wait for the flames to dance.

Daniel Nei's collection called Shanghai Fantasia is currently on display in Randall Library. Nei was born in China and went on for his MFA at American University and is now considered to be one of the leading Chinese painters in the nation. Nei is presently teaching at CFC. His artwork will be on display until Dec. 2.

THE Gutter

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

I am glad that when I see people out and about around campus or at social activities that you mention that you read "The Gutter", or like many of you, do voice your disagreement in the picks that we have selected for the week in the NFL. It is also nice to see that readers find something humorous, uplifting, and enjoyable in their student paper. I appreciate all your comments and support.

Now that I am finished kissing up to my devoted and hopefully increasing following, I would like to say a couple of things on the record and almost uncensored to set my position straight on a very trivial matter.

What is Alonzo Mourning doing? Shaquille O'Neal's monumental salary will increase the salary demands of incoming rookies to a level that will seem borderline X-rated, in the minds of fans like myself.

But for this rookie class I would like for my readers to know that even though I make more than an occasional error, I do know how to spell stupid. A-I-O-N-Z-O-M-O-U-R-N-I-N-G.

How tough could it be, to be faced with his decision, which is a decision to play for either $2.2 million (what the Charlotte Hornets are offering) or the $2.7 million (that he and his agent are asking)?

Somebody out there please give me the chance to suffer and carry the burden of this poor, troubled man. It is childish, is it not, some of us in the world of reality like myself, come spring or summer (when ever I graduate) look forward to the fun and exciting adventuresome world of unemployment (Vipeeee!!!).

I find it hard to sympathize, or empathize with a person (like Mourning) that has to toll with such a cumbersome burden of one of life's most pressing dilemmas. I can fantasize and unfortunately one day soon demonstrate the perks found in an unbridled and damnable world of unyielding unemployment. A world in which many of us will have to accustom ourselves, soon. After all of the joys, thrills, and comforts we have enjoyed in the plush sheltered lives of being a college student, we get to have the pleasure of being unemployed. (Yahoo!!) While this guy whines about the a $500,000 disagreement in whether to accept $2.2 or hold out for 2.7 million dollars.

Mourning's agent may have formed a destructive barrier by not letting his client even talk to Horner management. This may be limiting the chances that Mourning may have for playing this season. I wonder who is controlling who in this situation? I applaud the Horner management in sticking to their guns and let the good brothers decide what the next move for Mourning's future will be (decisions, decisions).

On the flip side of a similar situation to show the impact of holding out the Washington Redskins are being victimized by their own inefficiency to surround their team with top notch replacements. Rypien is getting paid for the success of last season, with an undogmatic salary of $3.5 million a season, while this season he anchors the worst of the worst in NFL quarterbacks statistically this season.

The only problem for me is choosing which Politician prize worthy piece to explore next week. What Phil Smith did on his summer vacation-the Arnold story, a full account as narrated by Boscar Willie, or a wacky look at statistics to be obtained off a new feature, "The Gutter's Hall of Shame."

A Conversation with Coach Jeri Whiting

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

The women's tennis team ended their season Saturday in Wilson. Coach Jeri Whiting in her third season sat down and explained the team composition.

SH: How many players are on the team?

CW: We have ten players, the top seven compete but we have three quality backups. The depth we have is our strength. Other teams have their top players and then the talent level suddenly drops off. We have a solid group of players, if one of our players were not able to compete then I have confidence in the person to step up into their place.

SH: What does your practices consist of?

CW: Today is the last day of practice for the fall. We will work on conditioning and areas that need individual improvement.

SH: Who is your toughest opponent this season.

CW: Division I play is tough, in the CAA the it would be William and Mary or Richmond. What makes it tough is that the NCAA has no set rules that govern conference play, each team must play 25 games. William and Mary being ranked needs to play ranked teams to remain being ranked.

SH: The Autumn Classic was a fledgling tournament. What is a fledgling tournament?

The Elements of Diving

By WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

Diving is a sport of concentration, grace, and determination. With these three elements as an essential part of a diver's internal composition, UNCW's diving team looks to plunge into the success in the Colonial Athletic Association.

Each dive is based on five criteria, which can be divided into two areas. A divers approach, take off, and elevation are three areas that involve the way, form and manner a diver handles himself on the platform or spring-board.

Execution and entry are the criteria that are to be judged after the diver has completed the elevation necessary to properly carry out the motions of a set dive.

Coach Ellington explains that, "in preparation for a dive the diver has to clear the mind, envision the dive in his head focusing on the movements necessary to complete the dive and the ability to repeat what the diver has practiced as they leave the board."

Good execution and good entry's are all dependent on four crucial interrelated areas for the diver.

The diver (after he or she have cleared their mind) will in one continuous motion do the approach, the take off, and elevation as efficiently as possible, so the diver can achieve what Coach Ellington explained as, "a good tight body position in which the diver comes out of to align themselves in to a straight (up-and-down) line with toes pointed to minimize the splash that can accompany any dive."

The body positions that Ellington referred to comes in four different varieties. The tuck is a position that is a rudimentary explanation can be said to be a ball like position. A pike is a position in which the diver is bent at the waist as if they are trying to touch their toes. The straight position entails no bend at the waist, but the diver may elect to slightly arch their back as a part of the execution. The fourth type is a combination of the tuck and straight, or the pike and straight.

A score of 5-6, constitutes a satisfactory dive, on a scale of 0-10, (0 being a dive to completely fail and 10 being perfect.) which lets a diver know that

From off the backcourts of campus to the intramural basketball arena, UNCW student Patrick Boykin was given a chance to be a member of the men's varsity team.

After one of the walk-on tryouts, then hopeful Boykin explained that "It has always been a dream of mine to one day play college basketball."

"On Friday, Coach Eastman discussed a few things with me. He went over my strengths and weaknesses, and we went over my options. My options were clear I

"It felt good to be given the opportunity to do something that you have always wanted to do."—Patrick Boykin

"The following Saturday, I informed Coach Eastman, that I was willing to make the commitment that he explained to me my role would be," continued Boykin.

The world of college basketball, in a Division I program is the newest level of play for Boykin. Moving up from Hoggard High School team he graduated to be on the 1992 UNCW intramural championship team, the Blackhawks.

On becoming a team member, Boykin laughs, it will not make my head swell I am the same Patrick that works in the University Center and plays cards in the game room.

"The play is more aggressive than one might think, of course it is loads more tenacious than high school. The offense is more involved than one might expect, it also is more complex than one might think," explained Boykin on the apparent differences in the game," said Boykin.

The team and Boykin will open exhibition play on the 19 of November at home.

Race Discrimination Hearings Held

BY HOLLY PRICE
News Editor

For two days this week, The University of North Carolina at Wilmington's hiring process has been on trial.

Last June, Kathleen Dorsey, a black secretary at UNCW, filed a complaint of racial discrimination with the state Office of Administration. She claims she was passed over for a promotion because she is black.

The job in question is that of administrative assistant to the chancellor, Dr. James Leutze. The position is now held by Lynne Goodspeed, who is white.

The hearing was presided over by Judge Fred Morrison Jr., Monday and Tuesday in Alderman Hall. Judge Morrison has 45 days to make a recommendation to the state Personnel Commission, which will rule in the case.

Throughout the hearing Dr. Leutze defended the university's decision saying, "Ms. Goodspeed was the best suited candidate for the job." This phrase became one of the major issues in the hearing.

Ms. Dorsey's attorney, Gary Shipman, stated that the "best suited" factor "has served as the means by which black secretaries have been unable to advance."

He added that a candidate should be "best qualified."

Dr. Leutze reacted to this by saying that the term "best suited" allows an employer to look at an applicant in a broad manner.

In the university's further defense Dr. Leutze said that Ms. Dorsey was not even a runner-up to the position.

He also stated that some people at the university had difficulty getting along with Ms. Dorsey. She was "sometimes tense, sometimes irritable."

Dr. Leutze added that this, however, did not come into play in his decision.

Ms. Dorsey, who testified for four hours Monday, said she was unaware of any problems with coworkers.

Another major issue in the hearing was Ms. Goodspeed's credentials. When she came to UNCW in 1989, Ms. Goodspeed indicated she had graduated and received a diploma from a secretarial school in New York. She never received a diploma, only a certificate.

Ms. Goodspeed stated that she never intended to deceive anyone. She said, "I completed the program. I don't remember a graduation ceremony."

When asked what she hoped to achieve from this hearing, Ms. Dorsey replied "fairness."

Ms. Goodspeed simply stated, "This case is not about me, but it is about the university's hiring process."

Jr. Class Vice Pres. Is Impeached

BY CAROLE MEHLE
Staff Writer

Politics hit home for the Student Government Association Monday night. They had an impeachment hearing.

Monday night during the Senate meeting Kristy Barfield was impeached from her office of junior class vice president on the grounds of non performance of duty. Barfield missed 13 SGA Senate meetings—11 above the allowed 2—due to a class scheduling conflict.

Barfield was also brought up on charges of behavior unbecoming of an officer since she not only missed every Senate meeting, but also every committee meeting. "That was for the senators to decide," said Attorney General Lee Person, who presided over the hearing.

Person said the situation did not have to come to impeachment. "She could have resigned because school is more important. It would have been the honorable thing to do."

"It was up to her to resign."

Judiciary Board Chair Roger Hyman had previously told the Senate he tried to communicate with Barfield several times by phone and by campus mail and he had received no response from her. He informed her by campus mail of a hearing required for her to avoid impeachment.

It was at this hearing that Barfield could have been impeached. Because of her failure to show for the meeting, the hearing had to go to the Senate for impeachment.

"It is unfortunate that it had to come to impeachment," Person said. "Anything that could be done has been done."

"I'm upset it had to be done this way."

Joe Mitchell, student body president said, "It was just one of those things. I was hoping that she would turn in a written resignation. But since it wasn't, the Senate felt it was best to have the seat filled by someone able to be there and serve the students."

Person said the SGA treated Barfield fairly. "The procedures are set to be fair to anyone who wants to be a senator. When was sworn in, she swore to do her best to serve the students. She didn't. We were more than fair to her."

"I just want her to know that there are no hard feelings. It was not a personal issue. They acted impartially and in a way they felt correct," Mitchell said.

See Impeach, page 8.

Dr. L. Worth Seagondollar (above), professor of physics and former department chair, North Carolina State University, and participant in the Manhattan Project at Los Alamos, NM, will be part of a roundtable discussion examining "The Legacy of Los Alamos: the First Fifty Years of the Atomic Age in America."

Also taking part in the afternoon (3 p.m.) and evening (7 p.m.) conferences on Monday, Nov. 23, in Cameron Hall, will be Chancellor James Leutze (UNCW), Provost Marvin Moss (UNCW), Dr. Ray Dawson (UNCW), and Dr. William Jones (Virginia Wesleyan College).

Dr. Seagondollar was a junior scientist with the Manhattan Project at Los Alamos Laboratory between 1943 and 1946. He helped measure nuclear cross-sections needed to determine critical masses, helped to measure critical masses of plutonium-239, and was less than nine miles from the first nuclear explosion in the New Mexico desert on July 15, 1945.

The 7:30 lecture will focus on "Nuclear Images in Popular Culture" and will include the film, "The Atomic Cafe." Dr. Jones will speak at this session and lead the discussion afterward.

Happy

Turkey Day

Thanksgiving Break Brings Theft

BY AMY BRENNAN
Staff Writer

Thanksgiving is always the fourth Thursday in November. It is a day appointed for giving thanks. Even more important for some, it means the cancellation of classes and the opportunity to eat a lot of good food.

Classes will not be held Wednesday, November 25 through Friday, November 27.

Thanksgiving has generally been a day that is spent with friends and family. In this day and age, traditions are changing. One student said she is a vegetarian so she does not eat turkey, but fills up on the rest. "You're not really missing anything if you skip the turkey," Anna Martin, a junior said.

Dave Edens, a sophomore, said, his family tradition is to pick a place that none of the family members has been to, and go there. "We've gone a lot of interesting places that way. Last year we went to Mexico. Sometimes I miss a few extra days of class, but I'm not complaining."

Shawn Prevattie, a junior, said his family has two Thanksgivings. "One with my Dad's mom in Red Springs on Thursday, and one with my mom's mom in Southport on Friday."

Over 5,000 students claim their permanent address is somewhere other than New Hanover County. Since on-campus housing will be closed over the holiday, many students will be traveling home or taking vacations.

Unfortunately, theft rates tend to increase during the holiday season when many people are gone. Officer Chris Slater, of the UNCW police department says the most important thing students can do while they are gone is move valuables out of sight. Small items are safest in a lock box.

Although it should be common sense, he said, do not forget to lock windows and doors. Slater said, "make it as hard as you can for thieves to get you stuff. Don't be easy prey."

The UNCW police department offers a program called Cooperation ID which gives students crime prevention tips and provides an engraver so valuables can be marked with your ID number. The next program is Monday, November 30 in Red Springs and Hewlett Halls at 7:30 p.m. Engravers are available from the campus police and students are encouraged to use them.

Everyone is reminded to use care over the Thanksgiving holiday, particularly when driving. The roads will be more congested and therefore more dangerous. Sadly, the number of traffic accidents and fatalities also increases during this time of year. Use caution and have a Happy Thanksgiving!

"Matlock" Calls Port City Home

BY EDWARD MOSELEY
Staff Writer

Andy Griffith, UNCW students, and Wilmington may have a lot in common now that the drama "Matlock" is filming here.

Thurston Edwards, a member of the "Matlock" production staff said, "The community, the beaches, the historic district, and the film studios had a lot to do with it, but, of course, Andy is from N.C. It was his decision to film in Wilmington." The series has already been on campus.

Over fall break they shot an episode called "The Class." "UNCW was the natural location," Edwards said. It is not certain yet, but "The Class" may run in January. Edwards said that is when the series goes weekly.

Carl Dempsey, associate Vice-Chancellor of Business Affairs, talked to the location manager about filming "The Class" on campus.

"We coordinate with the building so there is no interference with their function," Dempsey said. There is also an insurance policy. If they do any damage it is taken care of.

Dempsey said the North Carolina Film Office, part of the Department of Economic and Community Development, encourages use of state properties for filming.

Wilmington and UNCW benefit from the filming of "Matlock." "When they film on university property," Dempsey said, "they give the campus a generous donation."

The University owns the Wise house at 18th and Market Streets. Dempsey said the home has also been the site of a shot.

Mark Fincannon, of Fincannon and Associates, says making a shoot work takes the efforts of many people.

"Everybody is a free-lance contractor," Fincannon said, "doing different things for the team. Our job is casting the actors. Principle actors are cast a weeks in advance. Extras are cast that day." Pam Plummer casts extras from Fincannon and Associates.

"We do not encourage students to take time out of school," she said. "We do value education here and when students come down we have a great time with them."

Heart and Sole Fitness

Cross Training

The joy of one particular sport can be very addicting, but in a well-rounded fitness program, it is necessary to cross-train. Cross training is the alteration of a fitness regimen. It can be done by substituting one activity for another such as swimming one day and running the next. It has become a popular trend in the fitness world.

The idea developed because the performance levels of triathletes was exceptionally high. The benefits include increased energy level, fewer injuries, decreased recovery time, and increased performance.

Before beginning a cross training program, consider your individual fitness goals. Cross training can have both positive and negative effects. Do you want to gain strength, agility, speed, or cardiovascular endurance? You may decide you want to improve all areas. The activities will vary accordingly.

For the most part, cross training produces many benefits. By alternating your activities your body becomes challenged by the new exercise and develops various strengths. Also, it decreases the amount of stress placed on a particular muscle group. Sports performance will improve if the appropriate exercise is selected to enhance your personal goals.

When participating in a cross-training fitness program, examine what it entails. Don't do the "same old thing" everyday. Vary your exercise program and you will reap the benefits. Most of all, it will be fun and rewarding!!

Intramural Sports

The Men's Intramural Volleyball Tournament is currently under way. Students can catch the action in Hanover Gym tonight and December 1st at 8:00 p.m. Congratulations to the Hawks: the winners of the Women's Intramural Volleyball Tournament. Congratulations to Randy Davenport who has been invited to officiate a 56 team flag football tournament in Georgia this weekend. Randy was chosen based on his performance in the Southern Atlantic Flag Football Tournament which consisted of 14 teams. The tournament featured teams from universities in Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina, including 4 teams from UNCW. A team from N.C. State defeated Virginia State to claim the first championship of this tournament. Congratulations also go out to Tony Johnson and Tommy Harrington of UNCW: both of whom made the All-Tournament team.

Club Sports

The UNCW Surf Team opened its 92-93 National Scholastic Surfing Association season in Atlantic Beach on September 20th. Despite the small surf, UNCW managed to take places 1, 3, and 4. Mike Kirkly, Rob Cloupe, and Shea Dancy.

The second competition of the year was held at Cape Hatteras, N.C. The conditions there were spectacular with 4-6 foot high glassy waves. At this contest, UNCW placed in the top 7 slots. Coming in 1st was Eddie Crawford; 2nd was John McDaniel; 3rd was Jim Leone and 4th was Mike Kirkly. Congratulations to Shea Dancy, Bryan Stevens, and John Finn as well. The club looks forward to another excellent season next semester and encourages anyone interested to join. For more information, call the president of the club: Rob Cloupe at 256-7462.

Reminder Of Those Who Fought

I write this column for myself out of a need to put words to an experience. I'm not sure that you who read and who were not a part of the Vietnam years can relate to this.

Over a week ago I saw the names that are written on Vietnam War Memorial being read on TV one by one and found myself compelled to be present at the wall during its tenth year anniversary. Having rearranged classes, meetings and appointments, my fourteen year old daughter and I (she's a push over for new experiences and thinks her parents are crazy anyway) left Tuesday at 3:30 and arrived at the wall just before midnight.

I heard a Navy widow read the names of all of the Navy pilots who were killed during war. Probably a thousand people were there in the middle of the night as were a whole new range of moments, which included combat boots, flowers, and poems. For the past three days and all through that night all 158,183 names were being read. Ten years after the dedication of the wall and twenty years after the war, stories were still being swapped about Vietnam experiences and tears were still being shed. The next morning there was a parade and memorial service. Then we left and returned home. It was a long drive. I'm glad I went.

The wall is more than a place. It is an experience, even for those of us who didn't go to Vietnam but gathered in the streets of Washington to oppose the war.

Hands constantly reach out to touch names, and imprints are made again and again by rubbing pencil on paper overlaying a particular name. The living connect with the dead, and bittersweet memories gather in the mind with both sadness and thankfulness.

The wall has brought healing to thousands of people whether veterans or families of veterans or people involved in the peace movement.

There is something about this ill-fated war that will not let go of the people who were involved in that experience in any way. A kind of reverence has grown up around the wall, a reverence that for many has replaced the anger and frustration which so many veterans experienced upon their return.

What remains now is the holiest sacrifice of laying down one's life for one's country. The good and bad politics and policies about the war are no longer the focus of concern or interest. It is the names and the people behind the names which capture our reflection as we pass with our sad thankfulness. A lot of words were spoken that day during the memorial service, but the wall itself was the most eloquent in its speech. It spoke the names, the names, the names...I'm glad I went.

Phil Smith

What Phil Did Last Summer

Guys, you just would not believe what I did the other day. It had to be about the stupidest, most embarrassing thing I've ever done in my entire life. I mean I have done some stupid things, but this one had to top it all. Now I want to tell you all about it; and I will. You'll just have to wait until next semester for this "What Phil Did So Stupid" issue because this week, at last, I present HOW I SPENT MY SUMMER, BY PHIL SMITH.

It all began, innocently enough, with my answering a job listing I found hanging in DeLoach Hall. The job was full time summer employment as a lab technician at a local analytical chemistry laboratory. The company, we'll call it Quality Analytical Services, test drugs for some of the major pharmaceutical companies in the nation (i.e. Burghaw Pharmacy and Ogden Drugs International).

So I applied and interviewed for the job. "Don't call us, we'll call you," were the last words I remember hearing after my fifteen hour interview. It really wasn't that bad though; all I had to do was to take a ten page test on the thermodynamic aspects of cerberonuclear physics, give a detailed life history from the moment of my conception, and explain how I would react if there was a cryptonic (or maybe it was dolomite) fire in my area of the lab. I did okay on everything except that I said I would have attempted to extinguish the fire with an Ethyl-Methyl-Carboxyl deionizing fire extinguisher, which of course would have blown away a small portion of New Hanover County. After what seemed like six months (actually around the middle of May) they mailed me a contract. I was to begin work immediately! I really did not know what to expect. I was kinda looking to see a bunch of anal-retentive, mad scientist looking mongrels with pocket protectors. Boy, was I amazed. Aside from the pocket protectors, (I now have one of my own) they were pretty cool folks.

The first person I met was my trainer, we'll call him Ralph, who taught me the most absolute unscientific ways to do everything (ten grams? ten pounds? what's the difference?). He not only works there to earn his "gold money," because his wife is a general or something in the Air Force.

Another one of the analysts is a retired mortician. If only I had a dollar for every conversation we had about caskets, embalming, necrophilia (look it up), and the like. Actually, we shared the same warped sense of humor and I enjoyed the satirical exchanges we often engaged in. We played Pun Wars, Fun Trek, Puns of Our Lives, All my Puns, America's Funniest Puns, and Gone With the Pun.

For entertainment, we called and harassed the WGN Radio morning show host Craig Thomas. We played "stump the genius" on a daily basis until I finally won a tee-shirt. After that we called and I would do impersonations of people like George Bush, Bill Clinton, and Julia Child. In between our calls to the radio station we did manage to get a little work done. We stressed out our supervisor so bad that she had to quit. I hear that she is now running a mail order Star Trek paraphernalia business called "The Neutral Zone."

There was one lady who worked there who insisted that she is heirless to the Reynolds Aluminum fortune or something like that. At any rate, she had quite a fetish for names (like that new dude on Saturday Night Live). Without warning she would go on a rampage, calling me things like the Philmeister, the Philinator, the Philbarman (yes both of you), and shared 8,000 copies of The Seahawk. But if you ever get sick and your doctor prescribes you medication, you can rest assured that able hands (maybe even mine) have thoroughly tested, played with, rolled around on the floor, and/or spit on it.

Now my summer story wouldn't be complete without telling you all about my trip to New York. Hey, I went to New York.

Actually it was a pretty cool trip. I flew up on USAir (pronounced U S S Care), and sat three seats behind a bonafide celebrity. Yes friends Bob Denver, a.k.a. "Gilligan," was flying the friendly skies with me. I guess he just doesn't like to travel by boat anymore? I got his autograph, which I imagine is somewhere in Albuquerque by now, but he did not seem as if he wanted to talk much.

One of the neat things about flying into New York was all of the Limo drivers waiting at the gate for rich folks and the like. They must have been hundreds of them, holding up neatly printed signs that read "Dr. Livingston," or "Ambassador Hollingsworth," and such. And then there was my sister holding up "PHIL," hastily scribbled on the back of one of those carcard things you get out of a package of pantyhose. I was impressed, both with my trip and with my stay in the Big Apple.

Well friends, that about wraps it up for this week. I hope this was not too much of a let down, since some of you have been waiting all semester for this issue. Don't forget to tune in to this very same page next time (after Thanksgiving) for my final issue of the semester. Watch for my first ever printed public apology, as well as a possible remake of "Twas the Night Before Finals. Have a safe and happy Thanksgiving (unless of course you are a turkey).

Until next time...keep your mind out of the gutter and your head out of the toilet.

Malcolm X Worthy of More Than Film

With the opening of Spike Lee's Malcolm X last night, there is going to be much debate about the Malcolm X's message and the film. How much of his pre-Mecca orations should be carried over to his post-Mecca limited career? Did Spike Lee portray Malcolm X accurately?

Regardless of the debate, Malcolm X stood for what he believed in. He believed a black man has just as much right to America as a white man, and he should stop at nothing to ensure that freedom, that right, that respect. Anyone who argues with that is racist.

It has been nearly 28 years since Malcolm X was shot at the Audubon Ballroom on February 21, 1965, and there is still much work to be done to settle the trivial racial disputes separating us as a united people. Blacks, whites, yellows, reds, browns, and any other skin-pigment denominations need to try make change for the better today. Will there be total racial harmony in the next six months?

Useful, but any step in the right direction is that, a step in the right direction.

Commentary on Malcolm X:

From the November 16, 1992 issue of Newsweek:

"What's superficial is people running around with X hats on who ain't gonna read the autobiography, who don't know anything about Malcolm, who embrace him as a figure of rage. They've emptied him of his complexity. They see him like Ice Cube, the ancestor of the most, page-filled rap." - Harvard professor Henry Louis Gates

"What Malcolm did was to help empower black men to speak up, to challenge whites in ways that were not done before... These guys could stick their chests out because Malcolm was articulate, he was a revolutionary leader in prison, and on the streets, and he knew what the real deal was." - U.S. Rep. Maxine Waters

From The Autobiography of Malcolm X:

"Assassin's bullets ended Malcolm's career before he was able to develop this new approach, which in essence recognized the Negroes as an integral part of the American community... He no longer inveighed against the United States but against a segment of the United States represented by overt white supremacists in the South and covert white supremacists in the North.

"It was Malcolm's intent to raise Negro militancy to a new high point with the main thrust aimed at both the Southern and Northern white supremacists. The Negro problem, which he had always said should be renamed 'the white man's problem,' was beginning to assume new dimensions for him in the last months of his life." - M.S. Handler

"The young whites, and blacks, too, are the only hope that America has. The rest of us have always been living in a lie." - Malcolm X

Misinformed

Editor,

As a proud conservative and registered Republican, I was shocked to see the "biased b.s. propaganda" letter sent in by some obviously misguided and misinformed liberals. First of all, I do not understand why you people feel the need to further alienate minorities and others by the comments that you make. The "Slick Wilkie" poster is no way insults anyone other than "Slick" and "Owl" themselves. It pokes good-natured fun at political candidates, which is nothing new to you liberals.

The comment about Republicans being closed-minded was an outright lie. At the now infamous GOP National convention, a pro-choice speaker was allowed to voice his opinion concerning the party's platform. We all heard very little about the pro-life Democrats, who were hushed as if they didn't exist. To "deny" people of differing opinions than your own a place in government, as you speak of, is closed-minded in itself. Shame on you for such hypocrisy!

By the way, your last paragraph was outright lie #2. At no time was President Bush EVER threatened with impeachment. Please, before you write another letter to the editor, learn the facts. Neither you nor Mr. Clinton seem to be able to separate fact from fiction.

Steve Chriscoe

Editor's note: Rep. Henry Gonzalez (D-Tex.) introduced House Resolution 34 calling for the impeachment of President Bush and Vice-President Quayle.

Library Noise

Editor,

I do sincerely agree with your point that Randall Library is not the place for social interaction such as you would find in the local clubs, but I do take offense the characterization of Greek organizations as one of the main problems.

All Greek organizations have required academic standards which are enforced to keep a high level of grades for their members. When pledges are going through their pledgship period, they are required to go to study hall to insure proper study time.

You state in your editorial that it is nice for us to have study hours, "...but just do it somewhere else" is a typical example of how well accepted the Greeks are in this university and this community. Do you think it is easy to have a study hall in a room in the UU with no reference material around?

It would be a lot easier for you to push something beneficial to the Greeks and not be so anti-Greek. If you are so concerned about having us cut study hours in the library, why not suggest a Greek Housing area?

Patrick Kay
Kappa Sigma

Editor's note: The editorial would not have been written if the library were being used strictly for studying. The editorial also said the Greeks were a part of the problem, not the entire problem. As for being anti-Greek, in the same issue as the editorial, The Seahawk featured "Greek Happenings."

Editor,

I want to thank you for the editorial pertaining to the noise problem in the library.

It was excellent; and I think that it will certainly raise awareness that everyone needs to help us maintain an appropriate atmosphere for studying and research.

Director of Library Services

Student Groups

Editor,

Over the past year, we have noticed that the issue of student apathy has been a topic of discussion again and again. Students need to fight apathy with leadership, friendship, and service. This dreaded disease can only be solved by students joining together, making a goal, forming a plan, and going for it!

Student organizations can be your biggest force for change on campus. A prime example is to join a fraternity, like Alpha Phi Omega, which accepts all men and women who are interested in helping the community and campus through service projects. Apathy is contagious, so be a part of this change and make a difference, not just in your life, but in another's as well.

Justice System?

Editor,

Now that exams are upon us, I have one small test on the justice system that I would like each of you to take.

Which of the following are true?

A) When approaching a yield to pedestrian sign on campus, you do not have to slow down or yield right-of-way to pedestrians.

B) If witnesses do not show up at court, you do not have to postpone the case until they have been contacted. You can go ahead and try the case anyway.

C) If you have a high-price attorney and you are a professor, a judge will find you not guilty of running over a mere college student in a crosswalk.

D) If you have a "Dr." in front of your name, you can even tell the judge that you do not feel obligated to stop or even slow down at a pedestrian crosswalk in the busiest intersection on campus.

E) All of the above are true. If you answered E, then you too can blatantly disregard traffic laws and feel good about yourself, even when the college student is stuck with over $2,000 in medical bills and losses.

I, a victim of such injustice, feel just the contrary. I would, however, like to thank the Campus Police for doing their part to try to make the justice system work. They set themselves apart from the rest of this debauchery.

Hopefully, now that I am graduating from college student to professional and have hired my own high-priced attorney, I too may reap justice in civil court.

Spike Lee Talks about Malcolm X

BY IAN SPELLING
College Press Services

"My previous five films were works of fiction, so I could do whatever I wanted," says Spike Lee. "With Malcolm X, I didn't have that liberty. This is a person who lived and breathed on this earth. That was the challenge for me, and it was an interesting challenge: How was I going to make this a personal film, put my stamp on it without betraying the legacy of Malcolm X?"

Lee, who was seven when X was assassinated and didn't read The Autobiography of Malcolm X until junior high school, took a script by Arnold Perl and the late James Baldwin, and fine-tuned it. Then, with Oscar-winner Denzel Washington as X, Lee headed to Harlem, South Africa, Egypt, and Mecca to film his $34 million biography.

"We didn't want to put Malcolm into sainthood. That was a great concern of ours. We wanted him to be human. Denzel didn't want to do a caricature. He understood that would not be right," says Lee, 34. "At best, all Denzel could do was get the essence of the man. We did not want this to become a standard bio-pic. We did not want to soften or dilute Malcolm's message. And we didn't want this to be a two-hour television movie."

To accomplish his goals, Lee, who attended Morehouse College in Atlanta and earned a degree in film production from New York University, stuck to the facts. Malcolm Little was born in Omaha, Nebraska, and soon headed to Boston, where he hustled on the streets. Not long after moving to Harlem, NY, Detroit Red, as he called himself, wound up in jail, where he learned the teachings of Elijah Muhammad. As the leader of the Nation of Islam, Muhammad taught restraint from cursing and fornication, as well as a philosophy that deemed blacks superior to "white devils."

Upon leaving prison, the newly dubbed Malcolm X studied Muhammad's teachings and became a force to be reckoned with. His powerful words, spoken angrily, threatened whites and attracted blacks, especially one Sister Betty, who would soon become his wife. Soon, however, X learned of sins committed by Muhammad, and despondent, he left the Nation. A trip to Mecca revitalized his belief in Islam, and he returned from the Middle East no longer preaching hatred.

Malcolm X was a changed man, ready to cooperate with such leaders as Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., in improving the lot of black Americans. It wasn't meant to be. X had alienated the Nation of Islam, the U.S. government, and though the hows, whos and whys are sketchy, X fell victim to a hail of bullets in February 1965. No one would ever know what effect Malcolm X might have had, not just in his race, but on America.

"I didn't want this to come off as a historical document, a museum piece. I wanted to show that Malcolm is still relevant today. There are things Malcolm talked about that still exist today. We as a people, for the most part, still are second-class citizens. The Rodney King videotape," says Lee, referring to the beating footage included in the film's opening sequence, "and the cops getting away with it is an indication of that. In some ways, things have not changed that much."

Lee says what he thinks, which often gets him in trouble. However, the media also has a tendency to misquote the director, worsening matters. During the development of X, Lee was in the news several times. He demanded a black director to make the movie, then he went over budget. Then he battled over the rights of the King footage. He was also quoted as saying he would only do interviews with black journalists and that black kids should skip school to see the Malcolm X film.

Though Lee has a rebuttal to each of the situations, he perhaps sums up his thoughts best when he says, "A lot of stuff I say gets twisted around, attributed to me, or it wasn't my intent, or I never said it in the first place."

In the end, the hoopla doesn't matter to Lee. X is finished and out there in theaters. "We're not saying, 'You've seen Spike's film, there's no other information on Malcolm. You don't have to read The Autobiography of Malcolm X.' If we are successful, this film will make people want to read the book before they see the film or run out to the bookstore right after to read the material they missed," Lee said.

"If their image of Malcolm had been narrow, limited to one they got through the white media, hopefully their idea of him will be changed. I just want other people to come out of the theater inspired, motivated and spiritually uplifted by what they'd just seen."

Marijuana: Is it Making a Comeback on College Campuses?

BY KAREN NEUSTADT
College Press Service

While college pot smoking has taken a dramatic plunge over the past decade, marijuana has made a political comeback in the past five years as some students battle for its legalization for political and health reasons.

The 90s may see the return of bell-bottoms, tie-dyed T-shirts and peace symbols, but it's not likely THE WEED will ever be the life of the party that it once was in the 60s and 70s, researchers say.

"Marijuana use is going down a lot among college students," says Joyce Buchanan, a research assistant at the Institute for Social Research at the University of Michigan, where extensive studies on college drug use are conducted.

There have been, however, a resurgence of festivals and rallies where student activities, between sets of rock 'n' roll, extol marijuana's virtues as a plant that relieves symptoms of AIDS, cancer, and glaucoma. Hemp can also be used, they remind audiences, to make paper, clothes, and textiles. But politicizing pot doesn't necessarily mean smoking it.

The Institute for Social Research found that pot smoking among college students has dropped almost by half since 1980, though it has shown a slight increase between 1990 and 1991.

In 1980, for example, 7.2% of 1,000 college students surveyed admitted to smoking pot on a daily basis, while in 1991, 1.8% of the same number admitted daily smoking.

Also in 1980, 34% of the students admitted smoking marijuana 30 days before the survey, and in 1991, only 14.1% admitted they had.

The survey reflected that in 1980, 51.2% of college students surveyed said they smoked pot in the year before the survey, while in 1991, 26.5% said they had smoked pot in the past year.

Another recent survey from the Parents Resource Institute for Drug Education (PRIDE) reflects that drug use among young people rose slightly last year, reversing a three-year trend, and that pot usage is up among high school seniors.

Pot's overall drop in campus popularity may be because it is so costly, says Doug McVay, an activist with Cannabis Action Network and the Hemp Tour, which arranges festivals on college campuses and had a popular booth at the recent Lollapalooza tour.

"For the past 10 years, the price has gone up, though the quality has never changed. In 1982, commercial-grade pot went for $50 to $60 an ounce, and now it is $140 to $200 per ounce, $400 to even $1,000 for the finest," McVay said.

McVay said marijuana, once thought of as a "lower-class drug," has now achieved some status among young people, probably due to its high price. Cocaine has lost status now that crack has become a street drug, he said.

"We have a former pot smoker in the White House, too," McVay said about President-elect Bill Clinton. "He made a bad joke about it, but both he and Al (Gore) have smoked the weed."

People "started coming out of the closet" about pot in 1983, when Alan Ginsburg lost a spot on the Supreme Court after admitting he had used the drug.

Many college students also are aware that cigarettes and alcohol, which can destroy health, are legal, and they don't understand why marijuana is not available to sick people.

In spite of numbers showing the contrary, some say that pot is making a comeback on campuses.

"The government says that there are 20 million pot users, but we say there are 40 million," says Steve Bloom, senior editor of High Times magazine, a New York-based publication that touts the virtues of hemp.

"Pot is making a comeback on college campuses. The times are changing, there is a shift in the political environment. This is a new generation coming up who are rebellious. They're not the status quo like the Reagan kids," he said.

Bloom notes that today's college students are more aware of the political issues surrounding marijuana because of the educational efforts of activist groups such as Cannabis Action Network and the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML).

"College kids have embraced a lot of information. They find it interesting, enlightening and worth pursuing. They go to a rally, and really learn something," he said. "Not everyone smokes it, but the majority who attend rallies are users."

Ben Masel, a former student at the University of Wisconsin at Madison and now the Wisconsin state coordinator for NORML, says campus pot users and alcohol users fall into separate camps.

"It's not the same crowd smoking pot as there were in the early 80s," Masel said. "You have one crowd drinking and one crowd smoking, although in the early 80s, they were doing both."

McVay agrees. "Pot smokers are more health conscious. You don't see fights, you never hear of people abusing their spouses or kids on pot like you do on alcohol," he said.

McVay also noted that college students are particularly responding to the idea of legalizing marijuana for medical purposes. "There has been a political comeback for pot," he said.

But Dr. Gloria Bertacchi, a Roseville, CA, psychologist who specializes in drug abuse, does not think marijuana is as innocent a drug as student activists are attempting to portray it.

She has news for students who think the worst thing pot can do is leave you with a case of the munchies.

"No drugs are safe and casual," she said. "Pot can induce a state similar to paranoid schizophrenia. In fact, it mimics it in some cases. Every drug has a side effect."

Bertacchi noted that, unlike alcohol, the effects of marijuana have not been studied in depth. She said that alcohol continues to be the No. 1 drug of choice on college campuses in the 90s.

Bertacchi also cites studies that associate marijuana with low birth weights and psychiatric disturbances other than schizophrenia.

Though students are smoking pot less, many campuses throughout the nation had some type of rallies or programs during Marijuana Week, which was celebrated Sept. 21-26 throughout the country.

At Penn State, Robert Kampia, the president of the undergraduate student government, was elected on a platform advocating the legalization of marijuana.

At Harvard University Law School, a conference on the legalization of marijuana was held last May.

Dr. Janet Ellerby, Associate Professor of the English Department, will lead discussion at the colloquium on Friday.

Feminist Colloquium Scheduled

BY RAMONA HUPP
A & E Editor

"When Feminism fails to defend social and economic changes that can ensure decent lives for all people, the rights of women collapse into privilege for a few and exploitation for many," — Elizabeth Fox-Genovese.

For many Feminism is a complicated and ambiguous term—even for some who claim to be Feminists, and opinions seem to vary wildly on the goals of Feminism, some not too flattering. If you have questions or opinions on the subject Dr. Janet Ellerby is inviting you to come to the Feminist Colloquium at 3:00 p.m., Friday, Nov. 20, Room 104 in the University Center.

The colloquium, an informal meeting for an exchange of views, was set up by Dr. Ellerby as a way to bring more of a "sense of community to the women on this campus." A sense of community she hopes will go beyond the monthly meeting and become instrumental in forming a Women's Coalition.

Ellerby would also like to make the subject matter interdisciplinary so that those involved would apply the topic to other areas of study. The colloquium is by no means exclusive to women, men are also invited and encouraged to attend, discuss and explore what Feminism means to them.

The main focus of conversation will be Elizabeth Fox-Genovese's Feminism Without Illusion, which is roughly a one chapter read on reserve in Randall Library. Dr. Ellerby also encourages all to bring related articles and arguments.

Fox-Genovese asserts the "bonds of sisterhood entwined and empowered women, who sought understanding and support for other women like themselves." A unity which seems to be a thing of the past. Sisterhood being the force behind women's power which seems to be diminishing in a society that isolates women from each other.

Women who are trying to keep up with their ladder climbing colleagues often dismiss the strength and camaraderie of other women. Perhaps women should be working on developing a Sisterhood Club rather than cracking the glass ceiling of the "All Boy's Club."

The colloquium will also take time out to decide on the final content of their constitution. This is the second colloquium to take place, another is tentatively scheduled for Dec. 11.

Dracula: A Film That Really Bites

BY D. NEAL LEEPER
A&E Assistant Editor

I learned more about the history of the evil vampire Dracula than I ever thought I would be able to tolerate in Francis Ford Coppola's recent film, which is based on the novel by Bram Stoker, Dracula.

The midnight showing on Friday the 13th was packed and we made sure to purchase advance tickets and arrive early. After fifteen minutes of thrilling previews, the feature began.

A quick introduction to the history of Dracula commenced which focused on the Transylvanian Prince of Darkness, Count Dracula. It seems that the Count was a leader in the battle against the Turks, and some false information made its way back to home. It seems that the rumor stated that Count Dracula was killed in battle. Since the Count's number one love could not handle such a shock, she killed herself. Not only did she kill herself, but she did it quite violently, by jumping off the castle wall. Oh wow.

When Dracula got back home and found out the bad news, he vowed to rise from the dead and do mean, nasty, horrible things. With this vow, many religious objects in the sanctuary began to bleed, making it quite sickening for people to watch. I guess that the majority of the $42 million invested in this film went to blood packets and blood squirt effects.

Anyway, time progresses to the 19th century. Yes, our 400 year old vampire is still alive and kicking in Transylvania. Dracula, played by Gary Oldman, now decides that he wants to purchase land in London and move his evilness there.

With the help of some zombies and a major law firm in London, he begins his transition. Dracula calls for a consultant to travel to Transylvania to bring the necessary paperwork for the land purchase. Jonathan, a young attorney, played by Keaton Reeves, makes the voyage. Soon after arrival at the castle in Transylvania, Dracula acquires a certain "taste" for him. Anyway, Jonathan is persuaded to stay and assist Dracula in his work.

Since Jonathan was almost married before he left London, he carries with him a picture of his fiancée, Mira (played by Winona Ryder). Dracula took one look at this picture, noticed that Mira resembled his lost love of 400 years, and immediately fell in love with her. With Dracula's sick love in full force, he began to haunt her in her dreams.

The movie basically continues on that note. Dracula haunts a lot of people and his hand of female zombies suck a lot of blood. This happens over and over for the rest

Notes From The Margin: Shooting Panacea Through The Holes Of Monday's Arm

BY JEFF NELSON

It is Monday morning—the day following Sunday—and yet I need no reminder of the week's chronological order. It is nine o'clock on Monday morning, and I don't want to wake up. Don't need to wake up, but the Beatles happy-go-prancing-through-the-fields-of-opium-poppin' Good Day Sunshine is playing loud and annoyingly clear from the tiny plastic alarm clock that unfortunately lies out of reach of my flailing hand. If only I had a shotgun to blow the Fab Four away. A nice cold black and blue metal sawed-off baby with the power to shut all the alarm clocks off that I could take from beneath my pillow and simply aim in the general direction.

But I don't own a gun—and it's probably some form of providence that I don't. Rising from the bed nakedness falls from me with the last warmth of the three blankets dropping to the mattress. I stumble into the kitchen searching for coffee—yes, there is coffee—but no sugar. Aaargh—forced to be a real man at 9:05 in the morning with no sugar for my coffee. I wall into the cold linoleum tiles as if my life were this rough-edged square slowly evolving into a circle.

The coffee is ready by 9:10. I find myself, tongue burning, sitting in the plush decadence of a mustard-colored chair straight off the Archie Bunker set. A Dr. Sues book, "I Don't Want To Get Up Today," atop the pseudo-mantel piece we've erected in the house. The phone rings—there is no way I can answer without breathing death and odium through the line.

Is there no end to this pre-class, post-dawn torture syndrome?

I've got it. Since my John Coltrane tape went and since the evil Iggy tape was stolen and since all the other tapes have scarlet letters on them and just because it plain reeks of jet fuel and a thousand tons of methane released cool flatulence. I'm going to pop the DIDJITS new 5 song e.p., Little Miss Carriage (Touch & Go Records) into the tape deck and let it blister over my headache with the malevolent guitar and drug induced amped up rhythm tracks. This is obviously one of those mornings where no other drug will do, not that I have much of choice in the matter—due to monetary, legal, and those oh so bothersome ethical issues.

Who exactly are these DIDJITS? The DIDJITS are a power trio descended from the early, early pariahs of rock 'n' roll—from Bane Vincent with his all mighty blue suede shoes to the maniacal rantings of BLUE CHOIR. The songs usher in out of near killing floor decibel range knocking my headache to the floor where it jerks in epileptic seizures knowing that it's not met its powerford overload match.

The singer/guitarist, Rick Simms screams "going down the road doing 145. I don't care if I make it dead or alive." ??? this from another DIDJIT's album but it fits Rick like a blue suit and red power tie suits politicians. Doug Evans bass is thumping lizard tail of Tyrannosaurus Rex going in for the kill on tracks such as The Man and the drumming of ex-Scotch Acid warlord Rey Washam sets the stage for the return of Caligula on Dirty County Road on the very humorous cover of the 1973 power anthem Rock Nation—unfortunately I am much too lazy to tell you who originally performed this classic— Hell, I can barely get out of bed.

The DIDJITS are fine, like sugar in your coffee, like bees in your flowers, like back-up shoelaces when your old ones break. These guys are all over the White Trash scene and they know it, lampooning Americans from Evil Knievel to Hippies to George Bush. Hailing from the windy city area (Chicago and Mantoon, Illinois) the DIDJITS are yet another band to climb out of the sausage and fake fur and tombstone voting pits of Chicago.

My head is now thumping along to the DIDJITS, the Dr. Suess book has fallen off the shelf. I am so unprepared to prepare a Turkey, it is ridiculous. I will drive home and eat one instead forsaking vegetarian for the sake of tradition dressed up in stiff starched white collars and black suits. I will ask for a second helping with my plate extended before me and give thanks to myself for making it this far.

I will soon be a different age according to calendar of man, and in recently celebrating a dear friend's birthday I discovered a few songs of significance for those of you who might be nearing these ages.

For that 18 year old, why not bliss out to heavy metal angst and turn up the ever-classic Alice Cooper hit 18. Surely we can all identify with that "not a man, not a boy" sentiment. And to get into a really rollickin' mood there's always the superb URGE OVERKILL tune from their Super Sonic Storybook. Today is Blackie's Birthday, for all those folks turning the tide of 21. (?? was Blackie's 22nd!) But of course the kicker to anyone's 22nd year would be the BUTTHOLE SURFERS' mega top ten hit 22 Going On 23 from their Locust Abordone Technician album; at no time has a song so powerfully summed up an age—a time in a person's life—especially those of us graduating, then 22 Going On 23.

The heavy almost drudging bass, the weepy strained voice of the unknown female caller starting off the song, the bill of straddling the world, with one foot in the nebula of books and pedagogy and one foot slammed in the door of corporations and insurance premiums and heavy brows straining over "what next?"

Here is a toast to all of you about to pilot your own ship (hold your tongue when you say that). A toast to your landing gear, and a toast to your wings and a toast to air turbulence and the notion that the world was once considered flat.

Empeach

"They enforced the attendance policy. We have a policy and they felt it important for students to be there."

"Vice President Ziggy Nix, commented 'I'm glad the seat's open so we can get someone who will be active.'"

Hyman said during the November 2 meeting of the SGA that Barfield, felt SGA was coming down on her.

Barfield could not be reached for comment.

Person said that the impeachment should have taken place weeks ago, but because the Judiciary Board got a slow start, it took longer. "It should have been done long ago, but I don't blame them."

Mention of the impeachment came up at the October 5 meeting when it was noted that Barfield had reached the danger point. From that point until her impeachment, senators had time to think about their decision on the topic.

Person said, "They had good questions. They listened and thought ahead. They asked questions outside the Senate meeting. I'm pleased with the way they responded."

Mitchell said the senators voted as they felt was right. "They did as they thought was correct and I support them."

Person and Nix said that there had not been an impeachment since they have been in the Senate and Mitchell said the last one he remembered was two years ago when he was a senator and Ken Lyman was Student Body President. "An impeachment is not a regular thing."

"They enforced the attendance policy. We have a policy and they felt it important for students to be there."

Vice President Ziggy Nix, commented "I'm glad the seat's open so we can get someone who will be active."

Hyman said during the November 2 meeting of the SGA that Barfield, felt SGA was coming down on her.

Greek Happenings

BY JULIE PODLASEK
Staff Writer

Many of the Greek organizations are planning special events for the upcoming holiday season.

Chi Omega is going Christmas carolling the week after Thanksgiving break. Everyone is invited to join in the festivities! They are also playing BINGO on December 6 at the Katherine Kennedy Home, a retirement home for the elderly. Any voluntary gifts would be appreciated to use as prizes for the game.

Delta Sigma Phi and Phi Mu are dressing up as Santas and Elves for a Christmas party they are having at the Northside Center, where they will be giving gifts to underprivileged kids of the community.

Sigma Sigma Sigma is holding a "Holiday Extravaganza" December 1-4. With a $10 entry fee, each sorority will be given a Christmas tree to decorate and display in the union. Students will then be asked to drop change in the one they like the best. The money goes to the Robbie Page Memorial who has "play therapy" for terminally ill children. Good Luck to each sorority!

Kappa Sigma and Alpha Xi Delta will be having a car wash this weekend at the East Flare by Independence Mall. Kappa Sigma is also selling $1 raffle tickets for a 1992 Chevrolet truck. The money will be going to the Hospitality House.

Phi Beta Sigma invites everyone to join them to see the movie "Malcolm X" this Friday evening. They believe it would help to improve race relations among the organizations.

Alpha Gamma Delta will be selling their annual "Men by the Sea" calendars, which feature a different fraternity guy for each month. The cost will be $5.

Alpha Delta Pi would like to extend their congratulations to their newly initiated sisters.

Groups celebrating the holiday season will be Alpha Xi Delta, Kappa Alpha, Phi Mu, Kappa Sigma, and Alpha Gamma Delta by having a Semi-formal or a Christmas Party in the near future.

Lastly, congratulations go out to all Greeks who donated at the American Red Cross Blood Drive last month. There was a record number of 153 donors who were gracious and brave enough to help in this needy cause. Thank you and have a safe and happy break!

SPORTS

THE Gutter

By WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

Well friends, next week this time your friendly sports editor will be eating his weight (202) in a nice home-cooked meal and as the saying goes, "with all the fixings".

As I am feeding my face like a champ, I will enjoy all of the sporting events that I will have to select from. Unforgettably, I am not talking about the NFL, NBA, or any college event-basketball or football.

I will be partaking in an annual event that happens each year when all of my sporting foot friends return home from their perspective colleges. It all starts when we compare the circumferences of our ever enlarging bellies, which we all have named. Then we segued into a nice "remember when" type story's session, which by the way are the same stories we have pondered over every since I came to college some umpteen million years ago. But these stories get better each and every year, as we add details that may or may not of happened to be relevant to the story.

What does this story have to do about sports, Mister Sports Editor, you ask? Well, I will explain. It all starts the night before Thanksgiving at the infinity annual, in your face, I am better than you scam, card game of the century. After what most decent law abiding individuals would consider a marathon game of cards (spades of course), the survivors will manage to limp home and acquire five or less hours sleep before getting up for what may be called in sports infamy the Turkey Bowl World Championship.

At noon, we assemble on the ball field that NFL legends would be to timid to play on (they would lack the stamina and the fortitude to clash with my friends). The field we prefer is about 160 yards in length in an unresistible direction. This vast wasteland of a playing surface is a cross between death valley and a pure unyielding bedrock slab of bone crushing fun. We play a super hard-hitting, get up you little mamas boy and cry on the sidelines, because we are playing here, type football.

The type of football we play really takes a lot of heart, courage, and stupidity. Our style is based on Indo-Afro-Asian-Latin combat rules set forth in NATO PACT #2611 which states: at any given time in combat situations, those who don't have the firepower to mount a true offensive, onslaught are advised here, now, formally, to run. Based on this mandate, we have devised a system that gives each team six plays (all running) in which to score. We will play this type of suicide ball for two hours before we go home for lunch (which for most of us our lunch consumption would happily feed a family of ten for about a week).

If you thinking what's the big deal, I will explain, that this is only the pre-game warm up. The real game takes place one hour and a half after "the meal", when we unleash probably the most awesome air and ground assault this side of anywhere stuffed, bloated, happy men are allowed to play. If one is not careful and run out of bounds after a catch, or after a good gain on the ground, he will project his lunch at his friends who will now be running a fly pattern away from him.

After a good hour of running for your life, we all find ourselves tired to even think about the next play and end up taking a nap on the field of unyielding pain. The rest will revert back to the "remember when" mode of thinking as we prepare for moving our poor aching bodies back to college.

By the time our bodies heal from the shock of being rammed into that bedrock slab of pleasure, it is Christmas, and time to do this all again if we are men enough.

Blackmore Resigns as Head Coach

By WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

After coaching the soccer team for the last seven years, Jackie Blackmore has resigned.

A player and captain for the Seahawks from 1969-1972 had a long line of Seahawk pride and experience in his composition and scope for direction as a coach. Blackmore, now 41, became headcoach in 1986 and including this season managed to amass a 40-64-6 record.

The soccer team concluding its season 3-12 this season was not the reason that Blackmore, stated for stepping down from his post. The reason

Blackmore stated for his resignation is that there are things, he wanted to personally attain in his life and the direction the athletic program is going, he felt it was just time for him to move in the direction of other opportunities that he wishes to pursue.

The university press release quotes Athletic Director, Paul Miller, as saying that, "Blackmore indicated a desire to pursue other interest."

The release also indicated that the search to replace Blackmore will begin soon.

The Student Activities Office is offering a game package to NC State on Dec. 1. For $20, you get a ticket to UNCW vs. the Wolfpack, transportation and snacks. Bus leaves at 4:30 p.m. Call 395-3827 for more info.

CAA Volleyball Tournament Starts Saturday

By WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

The Lady Seahawks Volleyball Team will face the ECU Lady Pirates this weekend, in the first round of the Colonial Athletic Association Volleyball Tournament in Greenville, N.C.

UNCW 2-3 in the CAA this season, will have to face the Pirates of East Carolina without two key players. Senior, Leslie Knaus, suffered a career-ending ankle injury in the Saint Andrews game and Senior, Jennifer Jamieson, tore ligaments in the team final home game last week.

UNCW has defeated the Lady Pirates twice this season and the team comes in on a streak, having won five of its last seven matches. Ranked high in the CAA in many categories such as blocks, digs, and kills UNCW will bring complete game to the tournament.

The winner of the UNCW/ECU contest will face William and Mary in the semifinals.

Eastman Adds Depth To Future' Hawks

By WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

Continuing to build the men's basketball team toward a very prosperous future, Men's Basketball Coach, Kevin Eastman, has added three players to next season's roster.

Lamont Franklin, a point guard from Crossland High School of Temple Hills, Maryland, signed a letter of intent to play basketball at UNCW next season.

Listed as a 6-1 guard, Franklin averages 12 points, 4 rebounds and 9.0 assists.

Press releases state that Eastman was looking for a point guard that can push the ball up the court and play defense.

Power forward Kenny Avert 6-5", has signed a letter of intent to play at UNCW. A senior in high school this season, Avert has averaged 19 points and 17 rebounds.

"We have liked Kenny since the first day of our recruiting period, he is an athletic perimeter player. His strong school program should help him adjust to the college game", said Eastman.

Bill Mayhew, a 6-7 forward from Tremper High School of Kenosha, Wisconsin, also signed a letter of intent to play for UNCW next season. Averaging close to 18 points a game and 8 rebounds, Eastman said that Mayhew's versatile inside outside playing ability makes him perfect for our program.

14

Kim Bush

Junior, Guard
Coshocton High Sch.
Coshocton, Ohio

Bush, in her third year as a Seahawk player, has started the last two seasons as point guard.

Bush had her career best game against Charleston Southern, last season with 27 points. Leading the team in minutes played, she has proven her stamina for the Lady Hawks this season. Bush has proven to be a solid player in the Seahawk camp.

Last season Bush played in 27 games and started in 23, finishing the season with 129 points. Bush averaged almost 5 points a game, 2 rebounds and 3 assists.

#35

Pat Martin

Junior, Forward
East Bladen High school
Elizabethtown, N.C.

Martin started 25 out of 27 games last season, more than any other player. Averaging 8 points, 5 rebounds, Martin will be another who will have to step up and fill the void left by Cordway.

Her career high came last season against American where she scored 19 points.

#24

Amy Seagroves

Junior, Forward
Chapel Hill High School
Chapel Hill, N.C.

Last year's walk-on showed much promise for this young Seahawk team. Scoring 21 points against Western Carolina and 11 points against Princeton, should earn Seagroves more playing time this season.

The Veterans

#44

Hannah Grady

Sophomore, Center
East Duplin High School
Seven Springs, N.C.

The lady in the middle is listed as a strong, aggressive, inside player. Starting in 18 out of 26 games as a freshman, Grady will almost certainly be called upon this season to assert herself in a major way in establishing the inside game.

Averaging 3.9 points, 5.1 rebounds Grady began to come on strong in the latter parts of the season. Grady's career high 12 points at UNC-G and 16 rebounds vs. Charleston came in the latter half of the season.

#15

Zandra Harris

Junior, Guard
Waycross High School
Waycross, Georgia

The leading returning scorer for the Seahawks this season, Harris, who last season averaged almost 12 points, six rebounds and an assist a game, will have to be one of the key players this season to fill the void left by the nonreturning Lorraine Cordway. Last season Harris had a career high 24 points in a losing effort to American. Starting 21 out of 26 games last season, Harris has the reasoning to lead the Seahawks to victories this season.

#33

Myra Horton

Sophomore, Forward
Mount Pleasant High School

Selected on Colonial Athletic Association All-Rookie Team, Horton led the team in field goal accuracy and shot 80 percent from the line last season.

Her career high 19 points was against James Madison last season. Averaging close to 10 points a game plus adding 5 rebounds and an assist last season, Horton will definitely be one to watch this season.

#4

Amber Blank

Freshman, Guard
Lower Richland High School
Eastover, S.C.

One of the top recruits to Coach Tyne. Listed to play at both point guard and shooting guard spots. Averaged 14 points and 5 assists on her way to scoring 1,414 points and having 436 assists.

Editor's Note

The UNCW Lady Seahawk Basketball Team will be looking to improve on these statistics this season.

On offense, shot selection will be crucial. Myra Horton of the returning players had the highest percentage in field goals made with 45.1%, the team will have to improve on the quality of shots taken. The team does not necessarily have to score more points this season, but they will have to close the gap of scoring differential between their opponent and themselves (last season the seahawks was outscored by an average of fifteen points). Coach Tyne's newest additions should help the Seahawks rebound from a disappointing season.

The Rookies

#10

Denise Marsh

Freshman, Guard
Rhea County High School
Dayton, Tenn.

Another player who can swing from both the point guard and the shooting guard spots. Listed as a "outstanding" long range and free throw shooter. Averaged 17 points, 5 rebounds and 4 assists in high school. Shooting 54 percent from the field, 64 percent from the free throw and from three point land, makes Denise a treasured acquisition for this young Seahawk club.

#34

Heather Starck

Freshman, forward
Pickerington High School
Pickerington, Ohio

Mystery and intrigue will follow this talented walk-on for the Seahawks this season. Starck was a member of USA Today's sixth-ranked team in 91-92. In fact she was the team captain. She is listed to of had set game, season, and career records for shooting the three and she shot 88 percent from the three point line.

#32

Tiffany Johnson

Freshman, Forward
Spring Valley High School
Columbia, S.C.

Johnson is listed as a multi-talented player, who in high school scored 11.5 points per game, and close to eleven rebounds for her team. Shooting 30 percent from the field, makes Johnson a fierce to contend with for opposing teams.

#52

Tiffany Stacey

Freshman, Center
McDowell High School
Marion, N.C.

Averaging 18 points and 11 rebounds in her senior year, Stacey may have immediate impact in the middle for the Seahawks this season. Listed and described as an "outstanding power player."

Editors Note

UNCW Men's Seahawk basketball team will be looking to put an end to the doubt about the realistic success of the past two seasons.

As the statistics show, the success of the team comes from solid team play. One statistic that I didn't show is that the scoring margin of the difference between our score and the other team is less than a point for the season. Continued development of solid defensive skills will spark solid play on defense. If Adkins continues his free throw shooting success, it will be an massive asset in the close games that are pivotal down the stretch.

42	Tim Shaw	Forward	Senior	6-5
4	John Spann	Forward	Sophomore	6-6
22	Reggie Veney	Guard	Senior	6-0

Keith Adkins

Senior Guard
Paintsville High Sch.
Paintsville, Kentucky

Last season, Adkins finished second in the nation in free throw percentage. Averaging 10 points per game, a rebound and an assist it is obvious that Adkins is in the two guard spot. An outstanding three point shooter Adkins started 14 games last season and played in 27 of 28 games. Adkins career high came last season in the heartbreaking loss to them making 825 Charlotte. This season more adjusted to the Eastman system, look for Adkins to fire it up from the outside a little more.

#33

Sherif El-Sanadily

Junior, Forward
Kuwait High School
Cairo, Egypt

Our first foreign player, will no longer be foreign to the NCAA game. This season, Sherif will be partners with Spann in policing the boards as the year of transition is behind this talented player. A member of the Egyptian National team, Sherif has experience competing on a national level, which he will attempt to harness his skills and explode on the CAA court.

#22

Reggie Veney

Senior Guard
DeMatha High School
Seabrook, Md.

Averaging 7 points, a rebound, and two assists a game last season. Look for Veney to bring the total package this season. With the offense looking for the outside shooting to open up the middle, Veney's experience will be one of the key factors for any success for the Seahawk program this season. Inside the package is a defensive demon waiting to strike at opposing players.

#21

Drew Phillips

Junior Guard
Cardinal Gibbons High Sch.
Millersville, Md.

Phillips, will again be coming of the bench to run the point this season. Quick, with a lot of fight in his demeanor drew can be counted to push the ball up the floor and start the offensive rotation. Oh, yes by the way if give him an inch he will nail you for two, zip by you for a dish to the inside, or take it himself and get two and the foul. Look for Phillips, Veney and Adkins spot up for three and use their skills to manipulate other teams to mentally gear up for the outside game as we slip the ball inside for the troops to go to work.

#42

Tim Shaw

Senior Guard
South View High School
Fayetteville, N.C.

At times Shaw has mesmerized and electrified the crowd with his miraculous aerial display. His leaping ability and quickness makes him difficult to guard. Shaw shooting 50 percent from the field and the beyond the three point line last season makes him very difficult to counter. Last season Shaw was ranked second behind Fish in shot percentage. This season as the outside shooting opens up the floor, look for Shaw to stellar performances that won't be one night only.

#4

John Spann

Sophomore, Forward
Suitland High School District Heights, Md.

A solid rebounder, Spann will again be the year be policing the lanes looking for rebounds that can be converted to points for the Seahawk club. Having to sit out a few games last season due to injury, Spann will be looking to contribute to the team in a major way this season. In his playing time last season he managed to shoot 50 percent from the floor, which will be needed again this season.

#5

Chris Jones

Junior, Guard
Anderson Junior College
Denmark, S.C.

Listed as a good leaper and scorer, these words might be an understatement for our first junior college recruit at UNCW. Before coming to UNCW he averaged close to 16 points, 4 rebounds, 4 assists and 2 steals a game at Anderson Junior College.

#52

Darren Moore

Freshman Center
McDowell High School
Marion, N.C.

Averaged 20.1 points, 14 rebounds and 3 blocks as a senior in high school. Shooting 74 percent from the free throw line and 71 percent from the field. If that doesn't impress you let me tell you Moore stepped up his game in the state playoffs to 27 points and 18 rebounds per game. Moore ability will be greatly needed inside this season.

#32

Mike Petin

Freshman, Forward
Mendowbrook High School
Richmond, Va.

Averaging close to 16 points and 10 rebounds in his senior year Petin may have immediate impact on the squad this season. A good leaper, Petin may have the opportunity to display his talents and skills on opposing teams this season.

#34

Chris Meighen

Sophomore Guard
Roosevelt Wilson HS
Nutter Fort, W.Va

Most noted shot last season was the 40-foot shot at the buzzer to edge past American. Meighen will have to corral the power of his long range shot this season, to help open up the middle for the Seahawks.

Land Rezoning Brings Questions and Hope

BY ED MOSELEY
Staff Writer

The Wilmington City Council has annexed and rezoned 36.4 acres of land on the northern boundary of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington's campus, which may be used for student housing.

The council voted to rezone the land from residential to office and institutional use. University property has the same status.

The rezoned land lies between College Acres Drive, Clear Run Drive and the university. It is owned by D. Webster Trask.

The Star News reported Dec. 2 that Trask hopes to sell the property to UNCW.

R.O. Walton, vice-chancellor for Business affairs at UNCW, said, "We want to own it at some point in time. It would be a nice piece of undeveloped land that is contiguous to the university. But, we're not in a position to buy it right now."

The Greek President's Council has developed a plan to find financial backing in an effort to build Greek housing independent of the university.

Mark Lanier, special assistant to the Chancellor, said, "The Board of Trustees has adopted a resolution that is supportive of that effort."

The resolution was adopted July 15, 1992.

The Board of Trustees also resolved two stipulations. They agreed, "not to provide or to construct Greek housing on the UNCW campus" or, "any new university-sponsored housing for the next five years."

Lanier said, "These stipulations were added [to the Board of Trustees resolution so that a potential scenario of funding would not feel the university would compete with it," in constructing Greek housing.

UNCW to Graduate 709 Students Saturday

FROM UNCW NEWS

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington will award 709 degrees at its 45th commencement at 10 a.m., Sat. Dec. 5, in Trask Coliseum.

Presenting the commencement address will be the Honorable L. Richardson Preyer of Greensboro, four-term member of the United States House Of Representatives first elected in 1968.

This is the second December commencement to be held at UNCW, a development necessitated by an increasing number of students graduating during summer and fall semesters. Even with two commencements a year, the university has implemented a guest ticketing system due to space limitations in Trask Coliseum. This year, each graduate has been allotted seven tickets. Admissions is by ticket only.

In this graduating class, some 644 will receive bachelor's degrees while 64 will be awarded graduate degrees. Those graduating in December will include 188 bachelor's candidates and 18 graduate students who graduated during the summer and 456 undergraduate and 47 graduate students will finish at the end of the Fall semester '92.

Commencement speaker Preyer, a Democrat, has spent a lifetime dedicated to public service, working as judge, congressman, businessman, and philanthropist. A Greensboro native, Preyer earned an undergraduate degree from Princeton University before seeing action during World War II when he was awarded a Bronze Star for action in Okinawa. After the war, he completed a law degree from Harvard University in 1949 and returned to Greensboro to practice law.

In 1953, he became city judge, later served on the North Carolina Superior Court, and served as a federal judge for the Middle District Court from 1961-63. Throughout his career, he has worked as an advocate for excellence in education, including service on the NC Citizens Committee for Better Schools, chair of the Board of Visitors for Davidson College, and in 1990, he chaired the committee to evaluate the secondary education system in North Carolina.

At the ceremony, Chancellor James R. Leutze will present him with the honorary doctor of laws degree.

Also participating in the ceremonies will be David G. Martin Jr., secretary of the university representing UNC General Administration; Robert F. Warwick, chair of the UNCW Board of Trustees; and Jennifer LePage, senior class president. Martin was recently named vice president for public affairs for the University of North Carolina, a position he will assume Jan. 1, 1993.

Remember that extra money that was tacked on the parking sticker you bought at the start of the year? It's being put to use to build a parking lot at the back of campus that will be ready in the Spring.

The lot is for residents of Schwartz Hall and the suites. These residents currently park in Parking Lots S and T, lots that will be turned into commuter parking spaces. These spaces are located in front of Wagoner Hall.

The lot that is being built will have 300 spaces. There will be 8 handicap spaces and 1 space for a handicapped van. It is located behind the Physical Plant, near the police station.

The reason for the area is to cure some of the problems that have been faced with the cramped conditions of the past. Towana Moore, director of Administrative Services, said the lot will "certainly help. It will give the residents a closer place to park and it will free up spaces for commuter students."

Dick Scott, assistant vice chancellor of business, said, "The lot is to give more residents parking closer and to open more parking space."

Scott added, "The lot was needed and it was needed."

The total cost of the lot is $398,665 and it is covered in the parking fee increase that was implemented this year. Scott said the lot was built now because the price was low and it was a good time to borrow the finances needed to build the lot. "If we hadn't built the lot now, the cost would have gone up considerably," he added.

The last parking added was a new area by the Madeline Suite of Wagoner Hall last year. For this lot to be created, many trees were cut down and students expressed concern for the environment. Scott said this time the environment played an important part in the design of the lot.

Though the lot could be labeled "environment safe," Scott said there were "some" trees cut down to construct the lot.

Don't Get Influenza this Winter

BY JULIE PODLASEK
Staff Writer

Believe it or not, students can keep from getting the flu this season. And it only costs a mere five dollars.

Long before the flu season begins, you can get a flu shot for protection. Today, it is the best and only method of preventing this dreaded virus. In 1980, the flu kept 85 million people out of work and 61 million out of school. Even more disturbing is the fact that there were more than 200,000 deaths connected to influenza between 1968 and 1981.

The Health Department is currently giving shots Monday through Friday from 8:15 to 11:30 a.m. and 1:00 to 4:30 p.m.

There were more than 200,000 deaths connected to influenza between 1968 and 1981.

According to Janet McCombee, a registered nurse from the Health Department, the shot may make you feel feverish and achy for a day or two, but it is far better than actually getting the flu.

Unfortunately, the vaccine does not guarantee protection, but it reduces chances of infection from 60 to 90 percent.

The most common symptoms include fever, chills and sweating, cough or sore throat, headaches and all over body aches and pains.

If you do contract it, the symptoms can be controlled either by TYLENOL or a prescription medicine.

Although there have been no recorded cases at Student Health and Wellness Center, Miss McCombee said, "It is inevitable that students will get it when in group situations, unless otherwise prevented."

The virus usually does not strike until January or February, which makes this month the optimal time to receive the vaccine. It will take approximately two weeks for it to take effect, so to make sure you have a healthy and happy holiday, be sure to get the vaccine, before the virus gets you.

Eaton Scholarships Announced

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

UNCW and Cape Fear Community College announced Monday the establishment of scholarship programs at each institution to honor the late Dr. Hubert A. Eaton, a prominent Wilmington physician, civil rights leader, and UNCW trustee.

Each institution will provide an annual scholarship of $500 to an incoming student from any accredited New Hanover County high school, beginning in the fall of 1993. Scholarship recipients may continue to receive the award each year based on academic performance.

Scholarship is an outgrowth of a community effort to identify an appropriate means of honoring the late leader who died in September 1991.

Dr. Eaton was chairman of the UNCW Board of Trustees in 1977 and co-chair of the United Negro College Fund in 1982.

Dr. Eaton initiated a lawsuit in 1950 to improve black schools in Wilmington and won. He also fought to open all public facilities in Wilmington to everybody.

Mr. Ralph Parker, Director of Minority Affairs, said, "Dr. Eaton was a source of inspiration for the minority segment on campus."

"He knew how to use the judicial system. He had his own style...and always got results."

Mrs. Rachel Freeman, vice chair of the New Hanover County School Board and chair of the Hubert A. Eaton Task Force, said we all should be grateful for Dr. Eaton's work in laying a path for others to follow and "it is up to us to make sure the path is paved with integrity and courage, and the aim is to become the inclusive society America was meant to be."

Dr. Eaton, Mrs. Freeman said, had the courage, persistence and fortitude to create an equal opportunity for all children. He wanted the America that was meant to be.

News Brief...

UNCW's American Marketing Association (A.M.A.) attended, for the first time ever the Southern Regional Marketing Conference November 12-15.

Three students had the opportunity of representing UNCW in Knoxville, Tennessee. They were seniors Eddie Kitchen, Brandy Lindley and junior Dianne Meyer.

"It was a rewarding venture mingling with fellow marketing majors ranging from Florida to France," said A.M.A. president Brandy Lindley.

Those who attended the conference had the privilege of hearing speaker Cal Hodock, sports researcher for the Atlanta Braves, and the gentleman responsible for researching products such as Gillette razors, Campbell's soup and most recently getting Kiehl's Soft Spot Cookies on the market.

The upcoming International Marketing Conference will take place in New Orleans in April.

The trip was funded partially by the Student Government Association.

A Safety Message from UNCW's Campus Police Officer Chris Slater

UNCW Crime Prevention

In an effort to increase awareness and compliance regarding seatbelt usage at UNCW, the University Police will be conducting roadside checks. We anticipate this will be taking place within the next month. At these checkpoints, officers will be specifically targeting seatbelt usage. We will be taking the incentive oriented approach to this endeavor. Those wearing seatbelts, as required by law, will be given a reward for their compliance. Those not wearing seatbelts will be asked to please "Buckle Up!"

The purpose of these checkpoints is two-fold. First, as was earlier stated, it is to increase awareness and compliance. Secondly, we are aiming to make the 70%+ National Honor Roll.

This is a program created by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA). Its goal is to reduce the risk of serious injury or death by wearing seatbelts.

By undertaking this task, it is our hope that the number of people wearing seatbelts will significantly increase.

Christmas Spirit Can Be Anywhere

The Christmas Advent season has begun. Advent means "coming towards" and we are certainly in a "coming towards" time. We are coming towards exams. It is a real time of stress with papers to be completed, reading to be done and tests to be taken. Some are coming toward graduation which carries its own combination of joy and stress when jobs are not readily discovered.

But, in the main, it is the advent of Christmas, a season that takes us back to the ancient days when Hebrew people were looking and waiting for a Deliverer, the Promised One, whom they expected to bring them freedom from the stress of the Roman oppression and personal hopelessness. Wise men from outside Palestine looked into the heavens for a sign of the One to come. Holy men looked into their scriptures. Common folk looked to the place of power. The anticipation of all was focused on the places of wonder and holiness and power.

It behooves us to remember that when the Deliverer did come and was found, it was in the most ordinary places. I hope you will not overlook them. Some very ordinary moments become transformed into times of high holiness through acts of love simply done. Find the housekeeping staff in your dorm, say thank you and see how it feels. Thank a professor when you discover that you have learned something new. Look at your friends one by one, figure out one thing you appreciate about them and tell them. Find the cafeteria staff and tell them about a meal you did like. Write down ten things you do like about yourself and celebrate. Stop a policeman and tell her that you appreciate her.

If love lives in you, wrap it in swaddling clothes, the ordinary stuff of life, and give it to someone.

Every time you do, you will be taking a short, quick journey to the Holy place deep inside each one of us. Such little acts of love feel good because they touch our own loving center. And, perhaps, during the stress of exams and in the midst of whatever other anxiety is affecting us, we need to remind ourselves that what happened almost 2,000 years ago is irrelevant unless there is a Holy, loving place within us. Let part of your advent journey be a new "coming towards" your deeper, holier self.

Bob Haywood is the Protestant Campus Minister. His office is located at St. Matthews Lutheran Church, College Rd.

UNCW Six Days of Christmas

Well, friends, it's that time of the year again. It's the time when I spend countless hours in the library and late nights at Hardee's (considering the fact that it's quiet over there and they don't like ringing bells at 11:00 pm!). It's a time when people are stressed and grumpy over exams, when they go days without shaving (some without bathing), some without sleep, and when we all swipe those pencils they give out with teacher evaluations.

The first item on my agenda is this "magic Potty Baby" that's been advertised on the TV as of late. It has to be absolutely the most disgusting thing I've seen on television since those Clarence Thomas confirmation hearings. I mean they just pull the poor thing's pants down and let her "wee" on national television. And as if that isn't gross enough, you then get to watch it swirl around in the "amazing see through potty." I guess next week they'll have "Amputation Annie" (whose arm detaches itself, sending "blood" in all directions) or "Leprosy Larry" who loses his fingers and toes over time. Look for these hot items at your local toy store this holiday season.

Well, that's enough about urinating dolls. On with the topic at hand, which is of course THE SIX DAYS OF CHRISTMAS. I have neither the space nor the time for twelve, so deal with it.

On the first day of Christmas UNCW gave to me, a Seahawk in the pine tree. On the second day of Christmas UNCW gave to me, two high-priced textbooks and a Seahawk in a pine tree. On the third day of Christmas UNCW gave to me, three parking tickets, two high-priced textbooks, and a Seahawk in a pine tree. On the fourth day of Christmas, UNCW gave to me, four rental cars, three parking tickets, two high-priced textbooks, and a Seahawk in a pine tree. On the fifth day of Christmas UNCW gave to me, FIVE LESS SPEED BUMPS, four rental cars, three parking tickets, two high-priced textbooks and a Seahawk in a pine tree. On the sixth day of Christmas UNCW gave to me, six failing grades, FIVE LESS SPEED BUMPS, four rental cars, three parking tickets, two high-priced textbooks, and a Seahawk in a pine tree.

Now I know that is nothing to call the WECT News Hotline over but hey, it's a free newspaper.

Since this is the last issue of the year, I feel it necessary to issue some apologies. Firstly to Officer Barney Fife of Randall Library. I incorrectly spelled his name "Fife" in an earlier column. Thanks go to coherent reader Mack Smith for pointing that out. Apologies also go to two of my co-workers for leaving their names out of the "How I Spent My Summer" issue. Yes, America! Hannah Monks and Rebecca Thompson do exist and contributed immensely to my summer experience. They threatened to put water in my methanol (it's a lab thing, don't try to understand) if I did not apologize.

A special note this week concerning the UNCW Postal Service and the UNCW Registrar's office. Betsy Stallard, window supervisor, brought to my attention a negative comment I made some weeks ago. She assured me that the UNCW Postal Service strives to serve the students, since we provide them jobs. If you have a problem, see Betsy and she will help you. Kay McLean of the Registrar's office, has informed me that we have a new registrar who wants to work with the students and for the students.

If you will recall, one of my missions in writing this page of the newspaper is to be the students' voice to various campus agencies. These two groups have heeded the call to work with students and we must now hold them to it. I thank them for their concern and frankly, I'm glad to know that someone beside my mum reads my column.

Hats Off this week goes to you, my faithful readers. You've read the funny lines with the boring ones and kept coming back for more. I think this is about my 25th column. If I only had a dime for every one; why that would be worth $2.50. Anyway, Hats Off to each of you. I'll try and keep you informed and somewhat entertained again next semester.

There is no Shoes Off award this week. After all it is the Christmas season. Well, maybe I'll award Shoes Off to whoever had the sick mind to develop and market the "Magic Potty Baby."

I wish for you good luck on exams, a return ticket to Seahawk high for those of you not graduating, and a very Merry Christmas to all.

Until next year...keep your mind out of the gutter and your head out of the toilet.

Phil Smith is a regular columnist for The Seahawk.

1992 Has Been a Good Year, But...

As 1992 drifts away in a sea of syllabi, reviews, tests, and anxieties, and we spend time with loved ones and facing another round of turkey leftovers, let's not forget what we have gone through in the past year.

There were a lot of developments and events that will highlight the year for the history books (drama, probably) of the future. The election, Los Angeles riots, the re-emergence of Malcolm X, Inaugure, Bosnia-Herzegovina and locally, UNCW's victory over N. C. State, 96-84. But there remains a sense of doubt in the air that clouds those images (except the thumping State took on Dec. 1), is this the best America possible?

No matter the views of the above mentioned events, good came out of them. They all signaled a change in the status quo, the people are speaking out again, acting instead of reacting, and taking issues personally. It's not, "Oh well, that really doesn't affect me anyway" anymore.

Let's make 1993 an even better year for all. "Think globally, act locally" should not only apply to recycling. Here at UNCW, we had a cheating scandal whose effects we may never know, students have complained about sexual harassment from a professor, with at least one student filing for a restraining order against the professor (not an issue for university administrators to Dr. Seuss around with), and a bomb scare.

It sounds trite, banal, and cliché, but it is time for each of us to "do the right thing." Don't cheat, don't harass, and don't threaten others. It leads to phobias, fears, misgivings, and stereotypes that take longer to tear down than build. It is time for each of us to look in the mirror for a better example of our responsibility, doing all we can to make this as good as it can get. If not, why not?

It doesn't take much effort to show a little courtesy and respect to others. Some of us, more than others, need to think about what has happened in the past year and learn from the introspection.

1993 can be a great year, but it's going to take a little effort from each of us to make it so.

Trask Is Not A Playground For Kids

On Tuesday night, the Lady Seahawks performed in front of a sparse crowd estimated to be about 220. Most of the people in attendance were there to see a friend or family member play, but there was an element in attendance that seemed to think a women's basketball game is a form of day care.

Too many children were running around the coliseum playing, jumping, and, well, acting like 10 and 11 year olds. The problem is not with the children, if they aren't disciplined it isn't their fault, it is with the parents. This, and all universities, are designed for post-high school adults. Athletic events are a means of entertainment, school spirit, and campus involvement for the students, faculty, and staff of the university. These events should not be looked upon by people as a chance to get the kids out of the house and run around. That is what the beach and High Moccasin Park are for.

Parents should remember that their children are guests of the university and should behave as such. The children that run around, jump on the bleachers, and disregard the event they "came to see" need to be monitored and behave.

Trask Coliseum is a building designed for physical activity, but appropriate physical activity. It is not, and probably never will, be used as a day-care center. Bringing children to a sporting event is fine, but remember you are still a parent with parental duties.

If necessary, the university needs to have event security patrol the stands and ask parents who cannot control their children to leave. Just because there are only 220 people in Trask doesn't give guests the right to treat our school like a playground.

The Ambassadors

Did you know that UNCW has a student public relations committee? This student organization is the link between UNCW and the outside world. They help inform everyone, from prospective students to alumni, about what's happening at our university. This elite organization of students are UNCW's very own Ambassadors.

After their mid-semester membership drive, the Ambassadors became a thriving organization involved in lots of exciting activities.

Every weekday afternoon, you can find some Ambassadors giving a campus tour to prospective students and their parents. The Ambassadors also assist the university during Convocation, Parent's Weekend, visits from diplomats, graduation, and at the chancellor's Christmas party.

Being an Ambassador is a fun and exciting job. If you would like to join this prestigious and elite organization, look for our membership drive in the Spring semester.

Energy Conservation Committee for UNCW

We are members of the Chancellor's Energy Conservation Committee for UNCW. Formed in July 1991, the committee was charged by the chancellor to develop a viable energy conservation policy for UNCW, determine procedures to implement conservation measures for UNCW, and develop methods of disseminating information to the campus community.

After a number of meetings, our committee identified areas of concentration and divided into three subcommittees to address the work plan for each of these areas. Those subcommittees include Policy Development, Implementation Procedures, and Information Dissemination.

We need your help! Volunteers are needed from each building to assist in monitoring energy use and to serve as liaisons between the Chancellor's Office and the campus community. Interested people may contact any one of the following committee members: Patsy Larrick, University Advancement; Charles Mainone, Auxiliary Services; Mel Gibson, Athletics; Andy Jackson, Psychology; Brock Snyder, University Center; Dan Nolan, English; Roger Fry and Billy Farmer, Physical Plant; and Scott Hoffman, student.

Christmas Break

As the end of the semester draws near, students scurry to finish projects and assignments, give speeches, study for exams, and make preparations for the Christmas Break. It is a hectic time of year as everyone tries to finish up the work that has been put off all semester.

Students can be overheard all around campus discussing all the things they still have to do before the last day of class on Friday, December 4. A student in the library micro-lab was finishing up a journal for a literature class. "We were supposed to write comments about each thing we read this semester. I just started last night," he said. He asked to remain anonymous, on the chance that his professor reads The Seahawk.

Approximately 600 seniors are anticipating Graduation on Saturday, December 5. A lot of parties have been planned for the weekend. One graduating senior told her entire communications class, "I'm having a big shind-dig at my house. You can bring your parents. We're gonna drink lots of champagne."

Others are a little more worried about their final exams which are held after the graduation ceremony. Jeff, a senior finance major, wondered, "If I don't pass my exams, I won't graduate. Are they going to come find me and take away my diploma?"

Students are reminded that the library, cafeteria, and campus housing will remain open through Tuesday, December 15. Campus housing will reopen on Wednesday, January 6, 1993. Enjoy the break and have a great holiday season!

Merry Christmas

Ten Helpful Hints for trimming the fat

Dealing with a college schedule can be very hectic most of the time. With all of the pressures of each day, who has a chance to watch what they eat, especially their fat intake? Well, hopefully with these hints and facts you can be on your road to healthier eating.

Ideally, your fat intake should be limited to 25 - 30% of your total daily calories. It is not hard to reduce the amount of fat in your diet. You can give up fat without giving up taste. Here are ten ideas that you can use!

1. Limit your use of butter, oil, and margarine to as little as possible.
2. Stay with non-fat or low-fat dairy products.
3. Serve salad dressing on the side.
4. Try broiling, baking, steaming, or poaching, instead of frying.
5. Watch servings of meats. Think of meat as a side dish, not a main dish.
6. Snack on fresh fruits and vegetables rather than chips, peanuts, french fries, etc.
7. Read labels!!! Do not make assumptions about fat content.
8. Trim visible fat from meat and remove skin from poultry before cooking.
9. Watch your condiments - use fat free salad dressings and mayonnaise.
10. Try a variety of breads (herb, whole wheat, rye, cheese, cinnamon, and spiced breads) to add flavor to meals. A slice of cinnamon toast and fruit can substitute for a rich dessert.

There is approximately 9 kilocalories in 1 gram of fat. If you multiply the grams of fat consumed in 1 day by 9, then that would be the amount of calories you consumed as fat calories.

BODY FAT PERCENTAGES

	WOMEN %	MEN %
Essential	<8	<5
Minimal fat wgt.	15	5
Most athletes	12-22	5-13
Optimal Health	18-22	10-25

Intramural Sports

Congratulations to Sigma Nu and the Hawks for winning the men's and women's volleyball championships. The men's championship game was especially exciting with Kappa Sigma winning the first game 15-9 but coming up short in the second and third games 15-9 and 16-14.

The Outdoor Basketball and Soccer tournaments are winding down. In Basketball, the women's championship game will be played Thursday, December 3rd at 3:30 along with the men's quarter finals. The men's semifinals will be held Monday, December 7th at 3:30 and the finals will be held Tuesday, December 8th at 3:30. All games are being played at the outdoor courts on the south side of Trask Coliseum. As for soccer, the Women's championship game will be held on Thursday at 3:30 on Brooks fields. The men's semifinals will also be held Thursday at 3:30 with the finals Monday at 3:30. Good luck to the remaining teams in both sports.

Be on the lookout for the Spring Calendar to get information on registering for Spring sports.

STUDENT SPOTLIGHT RANDY DAVENPORT

Randy was recently selected to serve as an official in the Georgia State Flag Football Tournament in Statesboro. This selection was based on his performance in UNCW's Southern Atlantic Flag Football Tournament hosted by the Office of Recreation and Intramural Programs. Randy's performance in Georgia earned him the opportunity to officiate the Co-Rec Flag Football championship game, and All Tournament honors. Also, he received a bid to officiate the National Flag Football Invitational Tournament to be held in New Orleans in late December. Randy is 23 years old and is a Junior in the Physical Education department. He has been an official for the Recreation and Intramural office for the past two years. He is also a site manager for several different intramural sports. Congratulations Randy!

THE Gutter

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

Gimme, gimme, gimme, oh boy this is my favorite time of year. While most of us are still finding small chunks of turkey around the kitchen to devour in our most raucous moments of extreme famished desperation. Others, or the more fortunate, among us will be out shopping, not for the homeless or the less fortunate in life like your kind and lovable Sports Editor of this fine newspaper.

Over the Thanksgiving break I phoned up jolly old St. Nicholas (because in his infinite wisdom he seems to have a good grasp on things, and he too is a Steeler fan) to converse and fax him my list of demands for this season.

Santa said that his elves were pretty busy collecting and inventing the fabulous stuff they gathered during the Los Angeles Riots of '92.

He commented that due to the enormous cost of gift production, travel, food, etc., the timely and unfortunate occurrence of the riots gave an opportunity to cut cost this season. It also allowed the elves to have a much needed vacation, so they can watch ESPN, the NBA, the NFL, and reruns of Charles Angles. The following is a reconstruction of the letter, I sent to the Chub-man:

Santa,
If you ever want to see Mrs. Claus and those ugly little reindeer alive again, I suggest that you get your jolly butt in action fast, pal to make sure this list gets completed. Unlike in the past when you would leave me a lump of coal or a rock, that wasn't funny.

First, I want to coach a barely restrained group of marauders, mag-

I think they are called the N.Y. Giants. After they fire Coach "Handy-Man" Handley, I am pretty sure that any sand-lot coaching experience is more than what is required for this head coaching job.

After I take this motley crew of marauding misfits to the Superbowl, I want to go to Disney World and have the team pummel the happy go lucky, Mickey Mouse, live on national television, so I could be the idol of little seven to nine-year-olds across America.

Secondly, I want tickets to every sporting event in the world. From supper mud-bogs/ tractor pulls in the deep south to Australian out-back lumber-jack competitions. It does not matter I want to be there.

Oh large lipids one, a Wheaties box with a picture of the N.C. State crowd's expression as we steadily beat them on their home floor, or a box of my own would not be a bad idea, that is if you want to ever see your loved ones ever again.

For UNCW students, I want you to make their favorite basketball team, to be our UNCW team. Santa we do not attend Duke, Carolina, or State so why should we expend our emotions for a surrogate team, when we have our own.

Lastly, I would like an APC sweep of the Pro-bowl and the Superbowl. Without having to watch a seconds video tape and having to pretend, so I can stop living in denial and shame.

Well my fat buddy, I hope you care enough about your wife and guys to fulfill these little petty wants and wishes this year.

I see a need for you to stay out of my neighborhood late at night, especially in December. Really, I am not kidding, while you are out at night working that end of your year, you are a pretty accessible target. Last year, just for fun I had you in my sights. Don't worry the wife was not loaded. But the one I am pointing at your wife's head is!

'Hawks Kick 'Pack Butt

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

UNCW opened up its '92-'93 season with a major upset against the N.C. State Wolfpack.

In the last five meetings of these two teams, the Wolfpack owned the Seahawks. Not this time. UNCW 96 State 84!!!!

The average margin of victory for the Wolfpack against UNCW in those victories was 26 points. The Wolfpack had won 11 straight season openers. The last time State lost a season opener was to UNC Chapel Hill in 1981.

The Seahawks entered Reynolds Coliseum, Tuesday with a team that had very little major college experience. But this had little effect on the minds of starters Spann, Venev, El-Sanadilly, Meighen and Shaw, who started UNCW off to an 8-0 run in the first 3 minutes of the first half.

The Wolfpack, forced to play catch-up early in the game, slowly and steadily crept back in first half from the 8-0 deficit off of UNCW fouls and two good plays from freshman center Todd Fuller and freshman forward Chuck Komegay. These two combined for eight points in route to tie the game at 17 with 10:21 left in the first half.

After the Wolfpack didn't capitalize on two free-throw situations, UNCW began shooting the 3-point shot that was opening up off screens. This began a stretch where UNCW's defense patrolled the boards and rattled the State offense. This shook free two turnovers which were converted into two three-pointers from Adkins and Venev.

The next possession also resulted in a three-pointer by Adkins as the Seahawks were off on a 10-0 run that started with eight minutes left in the half. The closest N.C. State would get to reducing the UNCW lead from this point to the end of the half would be within five. UNCW's offense was receptive to "UNCW beat us in every department. They outcoached us and outplayed us it was a major eye opener for us. We played behind and like we were in a panic situation all night."

State Coach Les Robinson

From the Raleigh News and Observer anything that State's defense allowed them to attempt. 3-pointers, backdoors, and offensive boards were just a few of the areas UNCW capitalized on for their scoring vitality.

At the half, UNCW lead State 42-33. In the first half UNCW shot 56% from the floor and 57% from beyond the three-point stripe.

In the first half State saw a balanced attack from UNCW. Offensively, the Seahawks were lead in scoring by Chris Meighen with 9, followed by Tim Shaw with 8 and Darren Moore and Reggie Venev each had seven.

In the second half, Keith Adkins ripped a hole in the heart of State fans when he continued the outside onslaught from behind the three-point line. Adkins, who was 6 of 7 from the field, including 5 from 3-point range, and 6 of 6 from the line, added 15 points in the second half on his way to a 23 point outing while only playing 19 minutes.

Again, in the second half, State managed to chisel the lead down to three points (55-52), only to have their run halted by a technical foul charged to their bench.

UNCW continued the solid offensive and defensive effort which resulted in a balanced attack that resisted every run that State attempted.

Coach Kevin Eastman seemed optimistic about the potential of this team, "You never know how a team will react playing a team with this type of reputation. The emotional level of our team will be high in situations like this, and for us this year, the game will be a game of spurts, some will be positive and some will be negative. Fortunately we had some good spurts and were able to keep State from shooting their usual twenty or so three-point attempts this game."

Eastman added, "(State) was taller than us and we were able to alter our shots a little, but we compensated for it. I was pleased by the way Darren Moore played when he was in against Center Kevin Thompson."

Student Ticket Information

Students are eligible to receive tickets for men's basketball regular season games at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. The tickets do not, however, include the first annual USAir East Coast Classic scheduled for December 18-19, 1992 at Trask Coliseum.

A special student rate of $10 for both seasons of the tournament has been established. This is a half price discount from the general ticket price of $20 for the event.

The athletic department ticket office is located in the William P. Nixon, Jr., Athletic Annex adjacent to Trask Coliseum.

Any UNCW full time student valid ID, may pick up tickets before the game in the northeast lobby of Trask or between 8 a.m.-5 p.m. on the day of each game in the athletic department ticket office.

Each student may pick up one free ticket. Additional tickets can be purchased for $6.00 each.

The student gate opens 1 1/2 hours before tipoff.

Tickets for the USAir Classic can be purchased in the athletic department ticket office and Advanced Auto Stores.

If a picture is worth a thousand words, then here are two thousand ways to say victory. Keith Adkins (3) nailed the coffin shut with his fifth three-pointer of the night, making the score 88-75.

UNCW's Second Journal Arts & Sciences Publishes North Carolina Humanities Journal

BY EDWARD MOSELEY
Staff Writer

Last fall UNCW's College of Arts and Sciences published North Carolina Humanities, an interdisciplinary journal which provides communication between N.C. humanities scholars and the educated general public.

The November printing was the first issue of the bi-annual publication found in libraries and universities throughout the state.

Dr. Melton McLaurin, managing editor of the journal, said North Carolina Humanities is unusual because it is "addressed to the educated general public instead of to a group of scholars."

Few interdisciplinary journals, McLaurin said, are aimed at this portion of society.

Dr. McLaurin said the journal will "enhance the image of the School of Arts and Sciences and will help the University of North Carolina [Wilmington] become better known to the state."

North Carolina Humanities contains topics drawn from history, literature, religion and other humanities disciplines. Utopia, a unified Europe, poetry, and flag burning are some of the articles in the first issue.

Dr. McLaurin said he and associates planned conservatively when they began a year and a half ago. They hired a consultant to help with subscription methods, marketing strategies and publication costs.

Dr. Carolyn Simmons, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, which publishes the journal, said it is "set up on campus, and actually printed off campus by the lowest bidder."

"Academic Support Funds,"

Dean Simmons said, "come from donations from alumni and other sources" to support publication.

State and student monies are not used to publish the journal, she said.

Dr. McLaurin said anybody may be published in the journal.

"but primarily we are talking about professionals in academia."

December Graduation UNCW News

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington awarded 709 degrees at its 45th commencement exercises at 10 a.m. Saturday Dec. 5, in Trask Coliseum. The Honorable L. Richardson Preyer of Greensboro, four-term member of the United States House of Representatives first elected in 1968, presented the commencement address.

This was the second December commencement to be held at UNCW, a development necessitated by an increasing number of students graduating during summer and fall semesters.

In this graduating class, some 644 received bachelor's degrees, while 65 were awarded graduate degrees. Those graduating in December included 188 bachelor's candidates and 18 graduate students who graduated during the summer, and 456 undergraduate and 47 graduate students who finished at the end of fall semester '92.

Also participating in the ceremonies were David G. Martin Jr., secretary of the university representing UNC General Administration; Robert F. Warwick, chair of the UNCW Board of Trustees; and Jennifer LePage, senior class president.

Keynote speaker Rev. Johnny R. Calhoun, Pastor of St. Stephen A.M.E. Church in Wilmington, addresses the 10th Annual Program of Commemoration of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

Rev. Martin Luther King Remembered

BY AMY BRENNAN
Staff Writer

As the audience filed into the University ballroom on Tuesday afternoon, they witnessed scenes from the 1960s. They were assaulted by scenes of violence and turmoil, and pacified by scenes of harmony and togetherness. Through it all they witnessed the struggles of a man and his belief in a divided country.

These dramatic pictures from a video entitled Montgomery to Memphis were only the beginning of the 10th annual program of commemoration of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

The guest speaker, Rev. Johnny R. Calhoun of St. Stephen A.M.E. Church, led the audience along the trail of King's life, beginning with his birth in 1929 to a pastor named Michael Luther King. When Michael Jr. was 5 years old, his father journeyed to Africa and the Middle East with the Baptist World Alliance. He was so moved by the experience that upon return, he changed his name and his son's name to Martin Luther.

On Dec. 1, 1955, a black woman named Rosa Parks refused to give up her seat on a bus to a white man. This was the beginning of the Civil Rights movement. The incident inspired King to lead a successful boycott of the Montgomery bus system.

King spent the rest of his years speaking out against injustices done to the black man. He waged a peaceful war for change. He demanded freedom from oppression and equality among men. These are not only our constitutional rights but our birth rights.

King's method of fighting was a non-violent one. He stressed love and the avoidance of violence. He urged his followers to always use Christian methods and weapons in their struggles. "Hate begets hate," he said, "and violence begets violence." King's ultimate dream was for different races to join together so that people could be "judged not on the color of their skin, but on the content of their character."

On April 4, 1968 Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was struck down by the very violence he so adamantly opposed.

Rev. Calhoun closed with an excerpt from King's last speech to the Southern Christian Leadership Center. His voice was as filled with emotion as the video he spoke. "Like all those whose time has come, we are moving toward freedom," Calhoun quoted.

Calhoun finished to a hearty round of applause. Dr. Leutze took the stage and shared his experience in the March on Washington where King made one of his best remembered speeches. "It was an amazing experience," Leutze said. "It was a terrible, hot day in Washington and the people were passing glasses of water all through the crowd. There was such a spirit of brotherhood inspired by the spirit of a great man. We are all one people and we need to embrace each other. That is the only way toward peace." The program ended with everyone in the ballroom holding hands and singing.

On Jan. 13, Dr. Clayborne Carson, a leading authority on King spoke in a program entitled Martin Luther King Jr. in Retrospect. Carson is editor of the King papers, and author of two books: In Struggles: SNCC and the Black Awakening of the 1960's and Malcolm X: The FBI File.

More programs commemorating King are scheduled. Brunswick Community College will also be honoring King on Jan. 15. Contact Reginald Hawkins for more information.

Jacob's Run and the Roots Cultural Store will have a special reggae night in honor of King on Jan. 17 and 7 PM. Greensboro band, Truth and Rights, will perform. Tickets are $5.00 and are available at Roots Cultural Store at 612 Redcross St.

The Cape Fear Museum will conduct a cultural workshop that will explain King's vision of a multiracial society where prejudice does not exist. The workshop is free and will be held Jan. 22 although participants must register by Jan. 19.

On Jan. 21, Jim McGowan will present A Philosophical Vision of King in the UU 210 at 7pm.

Greek Happenings

BY JULIE PODLASEK

*Since the first college fraternity was founded in 1825, all but two U.S. Presidents have been Greek.

*63% of the U.S. Presidents' cabinet members since 1900 have been Greek.

*76% of the U.S. Senators and Representatives are Greek.

*40% out of 47 U.S. Supreme Court Justices since 1910 have been Greek.

*85% of the Fortune 500 executives are Greek.

*43% out of 50 of the nations largest corporations are headed by Greeks.

These are just a few facts about the prevalence of Greeks in American society. The Greeks at UNCW are currently preparing opportunities for those seeking growth in leadership, scholarship, and life long friendships to join their perspective organizations.

Tech. Lab Opens

UNCW stepped into the future this semester with the new Technology classroom in Bear Hall.

The classroom, located at Bear 103, is the result of $135,000 grant from AT&T. The grant was part of $19.5 million granted to 90 colleges and universities in 1992.

The equipment funded by the grant consists of 20 student station microcomputers connected by a local area network called StarLan to a master microcomputer. The microcomputer, known as a fileserver, holds all the programs to be used at the professors direction. Through the fileserver, students are connected to wide area networks around the world. This gives them access to other campuses, libraries and databases.

"AT&T's donation plays a vital part in our strategy to use the latest advances in technology to enhance learning at this university," Chancellor James R. Leutze said.

"Rather than use the computer only to demonstrate programs and having students complete assignments on their own outside the classroom, professors, and students will now be able to work together. Both in the 'technology classroom' and through The Center of Teaching Excellence, we at UNCW are constantly seeking ways to employ instructional technology to make a difference in the delivery of the educational experience to students," Leutze added.

Every year UNCW students along with all Americans, are required to file tax forms with the state and federal governments. Often, this is a tedious process that is rather confusing, yet it is something that all must endure. The Student Government Association recognizes the woes of this yearly event and has decided to team up with a yet undecided UNCW business organization to offer our assistance. In the coming weeks, SGA and another organization will be offering UNCW students help in filling out their tax forms. This service will be offered free of charge and will likely become one of SGA's most utilized services.

Scott Sherman to Take Over Legal Services

The Legal Services program offered by the Student Government Association will undergo a personnel change for the next year. The program was formerly operated in conjunction with the law offices of Pennington & Wicks. Beginning January 12, students will receive free legal advice from Scott Sherman of Ward & Smith, PA. The legal services program will continue to offer free legal advice to registered UNCW students. Legal consultation can be given in almost any area. Previous cases have dealt with traffic violations, roommate problems, contract advice, landlord-tenant relations, divorce/separation, child support, and criminal cases among others. The hours that legal services will be offered have changed also. This semester, the hours for legal services will be Tuesdays and Wednesdays from 1 until 5 pm. To obtain free legal advice, students need to schedule an appointment by calling the SGA office at 395-3553.

LAST TWO DAYS FOR SGA BOOKSTORE IS TODAY AND TOMORROW

The last two days for students to buy books from the SGA Consignment Bookstore is today, January 14, and Friday, January 15. The bookstore is located in the University Union beside the Information Center. Students may purchase books at the store until 5pm. Some students find that the prices in the SGA bookstore are cheaper than books in the University bookstore. The reason for this is that students sell these books and the prices they set are usually less expensive than a new or used book in the university bookstore. SGA encourages all students to take advantage of this service.

BUDGET WORKSHOPS TO BE HELD IN THE COMING WEEKS

Each year, the Student Government Association receives student activity fees for use in enhancing student life at UNCW. Student Government places the responsibility of making recommendations for allocating the money it receives in the hands of its Budget & Planning Committee. This year, the Student Government Budget & Planning Committee will be holding its annual budget workshops for the 93-94 school year the coming weeks. The workshops give student organizations that qualify for funding the opportunity to submit applications and review the applications with SGA officials. Upon review, the applications are then looked at carefully to determine a recommendation which is given to the SGA Senate. The Senate then votes whether or not to fund the respective organizations. These workshops are for operational budget hearings only. Throughout the year, SGA hears requests for special funding. For more information on the workshops or for rules for funding, come to the SGA office in the University Union, Room 200.

Phil Smith

Phil's Christmas Vacation, Really!

C-Span brought you the Clarence Thomas Confirmation hearings, CNN broadcast the Persian Gulf War, and EVERYBODY presented a version of The Amy Fisher Story. And now, in the finest tradition of Nobel Prize-winning journalism, I present for your reading enjoyment, Phil Smith Home (But Not Alone) For the Holidays. I considered dragging this one out all semester like I did with the "How I Spent My Summer" issue, but some things just can't wait.

Somewhat drained, I couldn't wait to get home after I labored through exams. I noticed that the other 7,999 students here had the same idea as I headed down I-40 toward Dabrun County. I had my official Wal-Mart issue Santa Claus hat on and I got any amount of looks, stares, honks and fingers aimed at me on the way. So much for the holiday spirit.

The highlight of the first night home was dinner. In my family, dinner is not just a meal, it is an activity; a lot like a major motion picture. The production staff (Mom) spends hours cooking, baking, broiling, and flambéing various meats and vegetables for myself, my brother, my dad, and anyone else who is around at dinner time. Anyhow, things were going great until my mom went to pass the bread around. "Don't you want some Ho-Cake, Phil?" she asked.

"What in the ?!#$% is Ho-Cake (that's HOE-Cake if you are Dan Quayle)," I asked as soon as I dislodged the hunk of pork chop I had sucked down upon hearing the words "Ho-Cake".

We spent the next hour discussing the definition, origin, and composition of Ho-Cake, until I checked the Webster's dictionary for an answer. There I discovered that Ho-Cake was in fact "thin bread made of cornmeal, originally baked in an oven on a hoe."

I'm glad that is now resolved. The next time you are down at The BridgeTender, ask for some Ho-Cake with your meal.

Another highlight of the holidays was when the family all came to visit, eat, and most importantly, exchange gifts. I received the usual array of ties, tie tacks, tie clips, and tie racks. Of course there was that traditional mainstay in giftgiving, socks. The real climax of our gift exchanging festivities (aside from another meal with Ho-Cake) was my father's annual "modeling of the Christmas boxer shorts." Give him a nice shirt, or even some nice slacks, but he will always choose to model the Christmas underwear he gets.

I also went on a ski trip with some friends over the holidays. On the way to Boone I discovered the true origin of radar detectors. They actually have little to do with the highway patrol. My theory is that the things are made by Food Lion, because NOW I can tell you where every single grocery store is between College Road and Appalachian Ski Mountain. Every time we came within one light year of a grocery store the blasted radar detector would scream and our forward velocity would be reduced by several warp factors. Thanks to Tom Smith (no relation), I had a sore neck even before we arrived at the ski lodge.

I know in my heart that I would enjoy skiing if there was NO ONE ELSE ON THE SLOPE. It seems that the one day in the year I pick to go skiing is the same day every other uncoordinated, no-skiing buffoon in the state decides to go. And somehow they always seem to end up in front of me on the ski lift, and just as sure as my mom makes Ho-Cake, they fall down just as I'm getting off of the lift. I think they should just go ahead and designate one of the lifts as the "Uncoordinated, No-skiing Buffoon" lift and be done with it.

And I just wonder where in the world they get those "Certified Ski Lift Operators." Are they ski patrol flunkies? Convicted axe murderers working off community service? Are they uncoordinated, no-skiing buffoons who just love to be near the slopes? If anyone can answer this puzzling conundrum, let me know.

That about wraps up my Christmas vacation. The only bad thing about it (in addition to all those Amy Fisher movies) was receiving my report card. Much to my dismay, I find myself yet one "C" further from the fleeting thought of medical school. Thanks again Dr. J.

Hats Off this week goes to the a group who is definitely deserving. The UNCW men's basketball team has posted its best start (8-2) since the fall of Rome. Coach Eastman, his staff, and, of course, the players are to be commended. I urge all of you to come out and support them (i.e. put off your rear and yell) at the home games. I've always said that athletic supporters are vital to a team's success. Anyhow, Hat's Off to the UNCW Seahawk basketball team.

Well, I guess that about wraps it up for this week. I hear that Saddam Hussein is up to his old antics again and that President Bush has issued a deadline for him to apologize. In response, Hussein has issued a January 20, 1993, deadline for Bush to evacuate the White House and pull out of Washington.

Speaking of Washington, all eyes will be focused on the capital next week as Bill Clinton is sworn in as our nation's forty-second president. All eyes except those of the news media, since, they remain poised on the sidewalks of psycho America waiting for another "Amy Fisher Story," or perhaps a bite of Ho-Cake.

Until next time... keep your mind in the gutter and your head out of the toilet.

Bob Haywood

Now's the time to check your diet

Welcome to 1993... another year, another diet! As we leave behind the Christmas holidays and move into our next semester, we come stuffed with too much food, stuffed with too many gifts, and stuffed with too many activities.

There were two quite distinct parts of my Christmas break. In the first, we found ourselves preparing for a household that included nine people the day before Christmas and through the weekend. It was exciting, busy, even exhausting. The pile of packages under the tree was obscene, and the number of grocery bags flowing out of the car and into the kitchen was incredible. We had lists of gifts that had to be purchased (out of town ones first, of course) and all manner of chores including such things as getting firewood inside for the required Christmas Eve reading of Barrington Rummy in front of the roaring fire. And, of course, there was the required candle light communion service to keep our attention focused on the "real" meaning of Christmas.

But when Sunday came and everybody left, we left too. We loaded up our car to the hilt with food and clothes and books to read and headed up for a week at a time share at a beach near Morehead City. Only three people had our phone number and we told them to leave us alone! There we stuffed ourselves again, but this time we stuffed ourselves with walks on the beach, reading for fun and for thought, leisurely conversation, naps, some tennis, and, of course, some more good food. So I begin my new year with my soul stuffed with peace, quiet, and love.

Anthony deMello, in his book Awareness, writes: "What kind of feeling comes upon you when you're in touch with nature, or when you're absorbed in work that you love? Or when you're really conversing with someone whose company you enjoy in openness and intimacy without clinging? What kind of feelings do you have? Compare those feelings with the feelings you have when you win an argument, or when you win a race, or when you become popular, or when everybody's applauding you. The latter feelings I call worldly feelings; the former I call soul feelings. Lots of people gain the world but lose their soul. Lots of people live empty, soulless lives because they're feeding themselves on popularity, appreciation, and praise. As I'm O.K., you're O.K., look at me, attend to me, support me, value me, on being the boss, on having power, on winning the race. Do you feed yourself on that? If you do, you're dead. You've lost your soul. Feed yourself on other, more nourishing material."

I invite you to consider your "diet" as you begin 1993 and to consider what kinds of experiences you want to feed on to nourish your soul. As far as real food goes, we are surrounded with all kinds of advertising that invites us to eat foods not healthy for our bodies. In a less visible but just as real way, our culture and even our values that work on you in this university also tell us that popularity, winning, being in control or pleasing people are essential for your well-being. It is a lie. Such things are junk food for the soul.

Christmas week was fun for me, but there's a certain emptiness in the wrapping paper and ribbons scattered around the tree when all the presents are opened and when a huge meal so thoughtfully prepared is so quickly devoured and leaves you uncomfortably stuffed. My soul was nourished much more by my week at the beach, and I truly believe that the experiences of peace, quiet, and love plus the experience described by deMello are the true sources of soul food, the food that feeds your heart and nourishes your spirit.

You will need strength and nourishment for the living out of the gift of 1993. I hope you will give some gentle consideration to the diet with which you will feed your soul.

Bob Haywood is the Protestant Campus Minister. His office is located at St. Matthews Lutheran Church, College Rd.

Pedestrians/Bikers are people too!

A girl was hit by a car while biking across Price Drive this week. This is another prime example of how bikers on this campus get no respect.

In the last several years, UNCW has gone to great lengths to begin making our campus a pedestrian one. For instance, students can no longer go from one parking lot to the other without going considerably out of their way.

The university's rationale for this and other changes is that it wants more students to ride their bikes or walk. If you ride your bike or walk from one of the surrounding apartment complexes, you will get to class ten times faster than if you drive your car and play the buzzard game for an hour. So, a pedestrian campus sounds like a pretty good alternative to all the grumbles and gripes about the parking situation.

Except, to be a biker or a pedestrian at UNCW is very hazardous to your health. Crosswalks are for those folks to use, but motorists sure don't see it that way. They sail right through them and honk loudly if anybody has the audacity to be in their way. And if one doesn't get out of their way, you may just find themselves in the hospital.

The law says STOP at crosswalks for pedestrians. The campus police need to start giving people tickets that don't adhere to this law.

And, for motorists need to remember that every pedestrian or biker is creating one more space for them to park.

Seahawk Support is Embarrassing

The men's team is off to its best start "since the fall of Rome" (thanks Phil), has played and beaten teams it wasn't expected to, and did most of the winning on the road. The team has showed that it can overcome most any obstacle and win. It can win on the road, on neutral courts, and at home before sparse crowds. The one arena it hasn't won in is Trask Coliseum with a vocal, enthusiastic, and feverish student body presence.

If you listened to the game against James Madison University on WAAV on Monday, you could hear a very loud 7,000-strong group of JMU supporters. Something you will rarely hear here. It is time for the student body of UNCW to organize and support the athletic teams, all of them.

The women's game on Tuesday there were about twenty students, outside the men's team. There will probably be just as many at the Natatorium on Saturday when the swimming and diving teams take on Davidson, Pfeiffer, and Georgia Tech. That meet starts at 2 p.m.

Coach Kevin Eastman and Athletic Director Paul Miller have both expressed their wants for a student body that supports university athletic teams like the Cameron Crazies support Duke basketball. This year's men's basketball team has a good chance to go to the NCAA tournament (winning the CAA) or the National Invitational Tournament. They are that good, but most of you don't know that because you haven't seen them play yet.

Even if you only yell "Bullshit!" when the referee makes a bad call, that vocal support is needed. You have three chances to see the men this week: tonight versus non-conference foe Sacramento State, Saturday versus George Mason, and Monday versus American University (remember the "Meighen Miracle"?). All games start at 7:30 p.m.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Editor:

This letter is directed to the individuals in the Athletic Department who made the decisions concerning our Homecoming activities. As a senior, I have witnessed my share of Homecomings. It has been a tradition to introduce the Homecoming Court at halftime of the Homecoming game.

This year there is an exception. If you would like to see the UNCW Homecoming Court you need to come to the game early. The Athletic Department felt that the Dallas Cowboys Cheerleaders would be more suitable at halftime for everybody's viewing pleasure than their own students. Has the sense of spirit and tradition escaped our athletic department?

This letter is not based out of anger toward the cheerleaders' appearance. It is written in question to the apparent lack of compassion that the Athletic Department is showing.

Are students losing tickets for monetary gain? It is certain that Athletic Director Paul Miller will pride himself in the monetary gain the Athletic Department will receive in community ticket sales.

But why have the cheerleaders perform at halftime? A time throughout the years that has been set aside for the students. Why not before the game or after? Instead, the Homecoming Court will be announced at a time when the majority of the crowd has yet to arrive.

It is evident the individuals who made this decision have little, if any, pride in the students on this campus. Homecoming is a time to bring students together and evoke school spirit. By taking away the thing that most students look forward to could be detrimental. Advertising to the public to come see the Dallas Cowboys Cheerleaders during halftime is an indication that once again greed has slipped its fingers around the wallets of power, at the expense of the student body.

I feel the majority of the crowd that comes to Homecoming games are here to see the students that best represent the university. By advertising to the public and students to come see the Cheerleaders at halftime of the Homecoming game seems to indicate Paul Miller cares more about taking in money from the community than the traditions of UNCW.

ANOTHER CHRISTMAS RELEASE WITH ITS GUARD UP

BY STEVE ASHLEY
Movie Correspondent

Director Mick Jackson has put together a classic romance/drama film with this fast action story involving a popular soul singer and a bodyguard hired to protect her.

The Bodyguard, starring Whitney Houston as a sometimes "stuck on herself" singer and ex-secret service agent turned personal bodyguard Kevin Costner, is somewhat dull in the beginning but seems to get better as the movie wears on.

Costner is hired by Houston's manager because he is supposed to be the best and with death threats, it seemed to be the thing to do. At first, the two do not get along because of Houston's lack of cooperation by refusing to alter her daily routine. However, she gradually accepts the fact that he is only trying to protect her. Houston inevitably "comes on" to Costner (like they usually do in these types of movies) simply because she is fascinated with his line of work. The two end up in the bed together early in the story, which in its own special way, somewhat ruins the suspense of the film. I wonder how Bobby Brown felt about that scene.....

It turns out that this passionate affair is just a fling as Costner refuses to let himself become emotionally involved with Houston. But, the attractive singer continues to turn on her charm as Costner transforms her palatial home into an invulnerable fortress. And so, as the ball bounces, they eventually become attached to each other. Surprise.

On the dramatic side of the story, someone has placed a bounty on Houston's head. As it turns out, Costner decides to take Houston and her small group of singers to a remote spot in a winter cabin located in the northern mountains of California in hopes that the bad guy will not locate them. This little stunt provides us with a melodramatic stunt that involves Costner saving Houston's little boy from a bomb equipped boat. And what do you know? The exploding board proves that the evil people found them.

Costner demonstrates his excellent "bodyguarding" skills by scaring off the killer before he could get in contact with Houston. Unfortunately, Costner shoots her sister, who got in the way.

Anyway, believe it or not, the movie does not come to a climax at the remote mountain cabin. The killer is still at large and Houston is scheduled to appear on the Academy Awards nomination special. To put this in plain English, this would be the perfect place for the assassin to strike.

The first time Houston gets on stage to read lines for the telecast, she loses it. She has a stress attack and leaves the stage. After collecting herself and reappearing for a second try, Costner spots the bogyman, who was disguised as a network television employee. This is where the climax hits FULL FORCE. As the assassin shoots, Costner jumps up and takes the bullet that was meant for Houston. His love for her was actually played out. Later, as Houston is getting on the plane to leave, the tear jerking song we have all come to know (and sometimes HATE) by heart is played.

In my opinion, The Bodyguard is an overall great film. With that in mind, I would recommend it to everybody to see.

Chapel Hill's Sex Police are enjoying a homebased status granted occasionally to a select few. They make a raucous noise flavored by a use of horns that is hip beyond their years. A little like Kool & the Gang mixed in with their favorite hard-rock thrash band. John Plymale plays guitar and sings; co-conspirator Norwood Cheek plays bass and sings, Robert Jones plays trombone; William Jerome Widenhouse plays trumpet; and Stonely Maxwell plays drums. The Sex Police will be playing at the Mad Monk Thursday night with Egypt.

Quote of the Week: The odds against there being a bomb on a plane are a million to one, and against two bombs a million times a million to one. Next time you fly, cut the odds and take a bomb. - Benny Hill

"THE TRAMP" IS A LITTLE DAMP

BY D. NEAL LEEPER
Arts and Entertainment Editor

This Christmas season was definitely an interesting one in regards to movie releases. Never before, or as long as I can remember, have such a string of films been released all in a row that depict some of America's 20th-century legends. Of course, I am referring to the releases of Malcolm X, Hoffa, and Chaplin. Recently, for some reason, these "biopics" have become extremely catchy and altering for the public. In a single epic package (usually lasting around two hours), these films offer history and gossip, public spectacle and private psychodrama, fortune, love, pain, ambition, success and ruin.

When entering UNCW and making out class schedules during my orientation period as a freshman, I wanted to choose a class that would be enjoyable and different from the rest. I signed up for History and Appreciation of Film. As the class progressed, we eventually made it to the segment dealing with comedy. When one thinks of comedy and the history surrounding it, Charlie Chaplin is a name that sticks out and is easily recognizable by many.

Chaplin, starting Robert Downey Jr., is the typical melodramatic presentation that we've come to expect from Richard Attenborough (Gandhi, Crusade in Freedom). And with that in mind, it turned out to be just that Chaplin was the typical "by-the-numbers" celebrity saga and often resembled that which might end up as a 2 hour and 24 minute TV-movie filler.

The wardrobe folks over at Tri-Star pictures did an excellent job in preparing Downey for the role, from the false teeth that accurately recreated the goofy-toothy smile of Chaplin to the matching boots and cane that made the Little Tramp a household name. Downey also studied and prepared for this role in extreme depth, which made the slapstick representation of Chaplin more realistic to the viewers.

The film focused on the personal life and history of Charles Chaplin. From his birthing in England to his dramatic exile from the United States, the film covers many historical bases. However, with all this history being presented, Attenborough spends almost no time showing us how Chaplin made his comedies or actually created the Little Tramp character. With slapstick comedy so popular in those early times and Americans now interested in how it came to be, I find it amazing that these areas were not covered better.

Of all the ingredients that made up Charlie's private life, the one that sticks out the most was the intense fascination with young women. Chaplin preferred the young "jail bait" type of girl whose age was around 16. Diane Lane, Penelope Ann Miller, Marisa Tomei, and Moira Klee made up the actresses that portrayed Chaplin's mistresses.

Unfortunately, their parts barely gave them any breathing room to present their true acting ability. Well, they looked good anyway. But, most of all, the thing that confuses me the most about the film is the utter absence of drive and purpose that Chaplin must of had in these formative years. From what I have learned and experienced, artists usually have some sort of goal or idea on how they want their work to be. We saw in the film that Chaplin tried to perfect the Little Tramp, but nothing more than that. He would often re-shoot scenes over and over until perfected, but why? Why did he do these things and who cares? These are some questions that Attenborough did not answer in his presentation of Chaplin.

If looking at this film from a historic view, this is a "meat" film. If you are a fan of Chaplin, such as myself, you will enjoy seeing Chaplin just because it's there. Otherwise, I might suggest waiting until it comes to your local video store before seeing it. Trust me, the 2 hour and 24 minute running time is felt and story lags are inevitable in this type of film. Until next time!

In Dead Color

BY D. NEAL LEEPER
Arts and Entertainment Editor

If you haven't heard the news yet about Fox Television's In Living Color series, here it is. Apparently, Keenen Ivory Wayans, creator of the popular show three years ago, stormed away from set on December 11, 1992.

Wayans was never completely happy at Fox. The show's employees regarded him highly and praised his hard efforts for making the show such a success. The trouble seemed to begin December 3, 1992 when Fox dropped The Heights from its Thursday spot and replaced it with 1st season reruns of In Living Color. Royalties from the reruns were not going to be paid to Wayans. For Wayans, the reruns was the last straw.

So, with that in mind, the 1993 season on Fox might be a little less entertaining.

"CHILI PEPPERS" ON DOWNERS?

BY JAMES STUART
Arts and Entertainment Writer

Well, what can I say? Neal gives this Trenchmouth tape and tells me to go to town. I do not claim to be one of the nine muses, or a tumbler of aesthetically pleasing things however, like the saying goes, "I ain't no monkey, but I know what I like." In this case, I know what I don't like, and my pain has a name - Trenchmouth. Nah... just kidding. It's not that bad, but it's not that good.

"What does it sound like?" you ask with a quizzical glance. Well, I'd have to say it sounds a little like the "Chilli Peppers" on downers, loud and monotonous, with a dash of blues grunge thrown in. The lyrics are probably the most redeemable feature of the album. They are interesting, but nothing to have a new religion on. Take for example, "Bear in Mind," a little ditty about going insane, "Bear in mind, that once upon a time, I was right in front, not in the back of the line. I was king of the hill, I did everything right, then I lost my mind in the middle of the night."

Get the picture folks? No? Well, another cheerful Trenchmouth rhyme might be in order then. Try this one on for size, it is from "The Volcanic Action of My Soul," and it goes a little something like this:

"People, beautiful life it loses itself too patriotic. Skin, it catches on hooks it loses it's looks, it becomes a bulls-eye." Sound a little depressing? Don't worry, everything is not total doom and gloom. The tracts take an upward swing on such songs as "Ultraman" and "Chalk."

Basically, Trenchmouth appears to be an average band of average ability. If given the opportunity to see them locally, I might be inclined to do so, but I don't plan on selling my worldly possessions and following them around the world.

SAIGON KICK

Heart and Sole Fitness

FLEXIBILITY

One of the most overlooked component of the five components of fitness is flexibility. Weight lifters and runners often focus too much on their cardiovascular or strength training and pay little attention to their flexibility.

Flexibility can be defined as the ability of a joint to move freely in every direction through a full range of motion (ROM). The optimum ROM is essential to peak performance and it is also joint specific. This means that just because you have full ROM in your shoulder joint, you may not necessarily have full ROM in your hip joint.

There are several factors that can limit joint mobility, including genetic inheritance, tendons (skin surrounding the joint), and neuromuscular coordination. Flexibility training minimizes the factors that limit flexibility and helps balance muscle groups that might be overused during physical training sessions or as a result of poor posture.

The two typical types of stretching techniques are the static stretch and the ballistic stretch. The static stretch is a slow, gradual, and controlled elongation through a full ROM. A ballistic stretch should be avoided since it tends to promote contraction of the muscles being stretched and the movement generated may tear or rupture collagenous tissues.

Age does not affect flexibility; inactivity creates lack of flexibility. So, get off that couch and head over to the Heart and Sole Fitness Center located in Hanover gymnasium.

THE Gutter

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

At the point of conception of this Pulitzer worthy editorial, I am reading in black and white about Duke University men's basketball team which endured its first loss of this season. I admit that I show no sorrow for their team due their accomplishments, but I do want to voice one jealousy in this space that I have allotted each week.

To reiterate, the purpose of this article is not to poke fun of the Blue Devils (Doo Shovels) but to call attention to their fans, which always seem to pack Cameron Indoor Stadium.

Duke lost its first game in what seems to be yet another final four destined season. Will this one loss stop the crowds from pouring into Cameron? Will two losses stop them? I don't even think that four losses this season will stop the masses that Cameron seems to attract.

Cameron has a tradition that Trask Coliseum longs for. All too often Trask seems more like a mausoleum than a coliseum. Those in attendance at Trask are quiet as if they are in mourning, instead of jubilant and euphoric, as if they are in an organic cheering frenzy.

I understand that in the past it was difficult to get hyped-up over teams that may have been 4-9, but this season this tired excuse does not hold water.

Both teams have started the season proving they can win. The men being 8-2 in my opinion has shown UNCW that they have the hearts and skills to win big games. The women have rebounded from a season that only yielded one win to four wins this season. Hats off for both of teams for the effort it takes to play on a collegiate level.

To borrow from Phil Smith, I would have to give our fans the shoes off award for their lifeless participation in crowd antics. Sporting events give us a chance to act reasonably immature. Instead of having a undulating, gyrating, thrusting, stomping, screaming, chaotic, mayhem good time, our crowds would rather all sit with their thumbs and there heads up to their chest. But this only applies to the men's team because no one attends the women's games. It seems when it comes to the ladies we have our whole body up our rectum.

If UNCW games were broadcasted at Chi-Chi's it would seem that the entire student body would prefer to pack that establishment and you would not be able to move, but they are not, they only broadcast ACC games. So the only place to experience the Hawks is at Trask.

Trask accommodates around 6100 people there are around 7,800 or more students. I think it would be easy to have 5000 in attendance to the men's games and certainly their should be more than 200 people at the women's games. I am willing to wager that some students have been here five or six years and have yet to see a women's game.

As students here, we are in luck, because we have court side seating, unlike the Temple of the Deam, which has alumni and contributors sitting in the prime positions while the students battle their fear of heights and constant nose bleeds.

It is time for the student body to support all teams, not just basketball. UNCW has sixteen varsity sports so there is practically something for every one. So come out and enjoy the excitement of a live sporting event, start tonight at Trask, when the men's team face Wake Forest at 7:30.

KSU Wins Tournament

Kansas State University used a 9-0 run midway through the second half to cruise to a 69-51 victory in the championship game of the Holiday Inn Basketball Beach Blast '93 at Trask Coliseum Jan. 3.

The University of New Hampshire won the consolation game over Davidson College 91-53.

KSU's Shanele Stires led the way to the championship with 19 points, including the last five in the crucial 9-0 run, and 18 rebounds. The run increased KSU's lead to 49-35 with 11:00 to go. UNCW wasn't able to get any closer than 12 the rest of the way.

KSU had three other scorers reach double-figures: Kelly Moylan (19), Leah Honeycutt (11), and JoMorice Gritman (10).

UNCW was led by forward Pat Martin's 13 points, 5 rebounds, and 2 steals. Freshman Heather Surck pulled down 9 rebounds and added 7 points.

In the consolation game, UNH's Marlie Lane led a furious defensive attack that caused 40 Davidson turnovers en route to the third place finish. Lane scored 16 points, had 5 assists and 4 steals in 17 minutes of action. Kendall Daly and Laura Seiden also scored 16 each.

In Saturday's first round, UNCW struggled with turnovers in the second half, but defeated Davidson 78-70, after being up 46-30 at halftime. Junior Kim Bush led the way with 20 points. Martin added 18 points and 8 rebounds.

KSU advanced to the final by defeating UNH 69-60. Stires (13 points), Honeycutt (16 points), and Moylan (14 points) led the way.

Stires was named the tournament's MVP. She was joined on the All-Tournament team by teammates Honeycutt and Moylan, and UNCW's Martin and UNH's Lane.

Tournament Notes:

• Proceeds from the tournament went to the Charlene Page Memorial Scholarship Fund.

• Sunday's championship game marked the first time UNCW coach Sherri Tynes had faced her college coach, KSU's Susan Yow, as a coach.

• Davidson was playing just its fifth and sixth games as a Div. I school in eight years. It had been a club team before that.

• After winning Saturday's first round game, UNCW had a three game winning.

'Hawks Shake Underdog Role USAir Tournament Gave UNCW A Chance To Dispell Doubt

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

The Seahawks got a 33 point outing from forward Tim Shaw, as the UNCW defeated the SEC's Auburn Tigers in the finals of the USAir East Coast Classic to win the inaugural East Coast Classic Title.

The Consolation game winner was Southwest Louisiana Tech by their win over Alabama State.

First round action pitted the Bulldogs of SW Louisiana Tech against the Auburn Tigers.

Wesley Person of Auburn led the Tigers with 21 points along with teammate Aaron Swinson who produced 15 points to defeat Louisiana Tech in the early action.

Auburn's front court defensively dominated Louisiana Tech, the Tigers blocked seven shots and altered many others, which left Louisiana Tech trailing by seven at the half. Both teams seemed to have trouble finding the mark as Auburn, although leading by seven, was only shooting 48 percent from the field hitting 10 of 21. Louisiana Tech shot on 24 percent connecting on 8 of 33 shots.

Louisiana Tech in the second half did increase their shooting percentage to 36 percent but failed to exceed the shot percentage of Auburn which was also 36 percent. Tech did not have a single player to reach double digits in this affair. Guard Reggie Hill led the Bulldogs with 8 as the team fell behind 10 points and closed the game down by 20. Auburn 65-45.

UNCW also in the first round played Alabama State. UNCW lead by freshman center Darren Moore found themselves in an uptempo battle with the Hornets of Alabama State.

Darren Moore's inside play only provided 5 points in the first half, but the team was lead by Tim Shaw, who had 10 at the half.

For UNCW the first half was uncharacteristically inside oriented where 25 of 38 shots came from either the paint, the baseline or from layups.

Alabama State lead at the half by Marquis Davis with 12 points and Marcus Little with 10 points as Alabama ended the half trailing by 4.

With 11:13 left in the second half the Hyde side of Moore began to tear apart the interior defense of Alabama, as he worked the paint and the defenders toward scoring 15 points in the second half. Again the perimeter oriented Seahawk club remained on inside force as the Seahawks went 3 of 6 from the outside in the second half as the Seahawks defeated Alabama State 102-93.

The following night the consolation game saw SW Louisiana Tech come off a poor shooting Friday night to defeat Alabama State.

UNCW was left to face their biggest challenge this early in the season before conference play. UNCW after having problems in the opening seconds, defensively stepped up and took charge of the game early in the first half. Tim Shaw's 16 points and Keith Adkins' 15 points lead the Seahawks as they proved to be on the fire inside (Shaw) and outside (Adkins).

Wesley Person led the Tigers with 9 points at the half, but the Tigers found themselves trailing big at the half down 14, 37-51.

In the second half UNCW continued to rain the nightmare defense upon the Auburn Tigers. Shaw, with Sherif El-Sandily and Moore continued their diligent work inside as UNCW without the sports of Auburn in the second half to win the game 91-80.

UNCW had three players to be selected for the All-Tournament Team. Darren Moore, Keith Adkins and tournament MVP Tim Shaw

As the sun sets in San Francisco Sunday and the match-up for Super Bowl is set, what are you going to do? Study? Yeah, right.

W. T. Nix, in the University Landing Shopping Center on College Road, will be featuring an alternative Wilmington hasn't seen in quite a while. W. T. Nix will feature Full Contact Amateur Karate Kick Boxing beginning at 7:30 p.m.

The card will feature eight fights in three weight classes, and on hand as honored guests will be two-time Lightweight World Champion Dale Frye and Ronnie Weaver, North American Middleweight Champion.

"Expect a slugfest," said Scott Surgenor. "Some fights will be sloppy, because not all the guys have fought before. There will be some good fights though."

"One of the guys to watch will be Tony George. Randy Ballard will be another," Surgenor said. Then he smiled and added, "I'll try to put on a good show."

Ten fights are scheduled, but because of injuries the number may be less. Surgenor says there will be at least seven fights.

Each fight will consist of three two-minute rounds. The boxers will be wearing 12-ounce gloves, foot, shin, groin, and mouth protection (head protection is optional).

The boxers must hit above the waist, and cannot elbow, headbutt, or knee.

Surgenor and several of the other competitors on the card train at Champion Karate Centers at 4231 Princess Place Drive, in the Princess Place Plaza.

Between fights, youngsters from Champion Karate will be doing demonstrations.

Surgenor said on Friday that kick boxing is different from karate. "You don't step right into kick boxing. (Kick boxing) is a long way down the road."

"Karate is a good way to get in shape and a good form of self-defense. There are several women who train here," Surgenor said.

Starttime is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Sunday, and there will be a $6 cover charge.

Campbell Holds Off Late Seahawk Charge

By WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

UNCW Lady Seahawks who will Campbell in their series 20-12 looked to start to close the gap in this match up, which that date back to 1974.

The Campbell Camels came into Trask Coliseum on a two game winning streak, defeating North Carolina A&T and Drexel, while the Lady Seahawks are off a two game road trip in which they defeated Western Carolina and lost to UNCG.

In this match the Lady Seahawks had more shot opportunities, half as many turnovers and had nearly twice as many steals as Campbell. It would seem that this would indicate a win for the Seahawks, but unfortunately this is not the case for the young UNCW club.

In the first half, the Seahawks, led by Pat Martin with 11, squandered over half their scoring opportunities. Going 14 of 40 in the first half from the field and 5 of 11 from the free throw line allowed the Camels, lead by Amy Nigro with 13 points and Lisa Allison with 10, to work their way to a 17 point half time lead.

Campbell shooting 18 of 27 from the field and 12 of 15 from the line had to consider it a blessing to be ahead by 17 when they had been out shot by their opposition.

Campbell allowed UNCW to climb back into the game in the second half through free-throw shooting, and a 17-0 run which started at the 6:18 point to cut into the Camel lead but the Campbell Cushion was to much for the Seahawks to exceed. The second half ended a great effort from the Seahawks. UNCW lost 84-72.

Couch Tynes commented, "anytime you come back like that show that you should not have been down. We have got to come out and prove we can play forty minutes."

Tynes Continued, "the team did not focus enough effort on defense, they shot 67%, Campbell was aggressive and scrappy on defense and while we were tentative on our passing."

Prez Raps With Homies Clinton's Speech Doesn't Beat Around The Bush

BY SUSAN BENNETT
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

WASHINGTON—William Jefferson Clinton played it safe when he took his turn at the podium of history Wednesday.

The 46-year-old Arkansas kept his presidential inaugural address short, focused on a few important ideas and tried to inspire with memorable lines.

For most listeners it was a solid hit but not destined for inscription on a monument wall.

"It wasn't the poetry of Lincoln, but I thought it was a good speech," said Richard Goodwin, who helped with John F. Kennedy's inaugural speech, the standard by which most modern presidential oration is measured.

"He hit the right themes: the economy, justice, poverty, crime and special interests. The language was the kind of plain-spoken language we are accustomed to hearing from him," Goodwin said.

Ray Price, a speech writer for President Richard M. Nixon, said: "I think he got things off to a good beginning. There is going to be a battle for Bill Clinton's soul, and either side can read into it (the speech) whatever they want."

Perhaps the most memorable moment of the inaugural speech came with its ending, a scant 14 minutes after its beginning. Rebuked for being long-winded, Clinton made no mistake of timing, delivering one of the shortest speeches in presidential history.

"An inaugural has to pass two simple tests: It has to be short, and it has to have memorable lines," said Stephen Hess, a speech writer for Dwight D. Eisenhower. "Basically, President Clinton met half of the criteria."

"I doubt 50 years from now a president will give a speech based on this one."

But if Clinton failed to meet that lofty goal, he is in good company. Relatively few inaugural speeches are remembered.

"Inaugurals are essentially ceremonial and sacramental," said Price. "It is not a time for drawing lines in the sand. It is a time for themes, not details."

Clinton struck a theme of renewal and change and offered a broad outline of what he hoped to achieve as president. He called on neighbors to help neighbors and families to help each other. His message was delivered with force but not the Bible Belt fervor evoked during his quest for the presidency.

"It is time to break the bad habit of expecting something for nothing, from our government or from each other," the new president said. "Let us take more responsibility not only for ourselves and our families but for our communities and our country."

Clinton talked about the importance of reducing the national debt, finding help for AIDS victims, political reform and ending the arms race.

The first president elected since the end of the Cold War talked of the old animosities that pose new threats. And he sent a message to Iraqi President Saddam Hussein.

"When our vital interests are challenged or the will and conscience of the international community defied, we will act with peaceful diplomacy when possible, with force when necessary," Clinton said.

If most saw Clinton's performance as respectable but not spectacular, the new president had at least one prominent fan.

"I thought it was a splendid speech, right in the Roosevelt-Kennedy tradition," said Arthur Schlesinger Jr., a Pulitzer Prize-winning historian and biographer of three presidents.

Clinton Sworn In As 42nd President

BY AMY BRENNAN
Staff Writer

On Wednesday Bill Clinton was sworn in as the 42nd President of the United States following one of the most expensive inaugurations ever.

The week long inauguration festivities cost in excess of $25 million. Approximately $17 million came from loans from large corporations, union, and wealthy supporters. Companies like Anheuser-Busch and AT&T contributed enormous amounts of money to the inauguration committee. AT&T loaned $100,000 and donated $50,000 to the committee. There is much skepticism about the ethics of donating so much money to political causes. AT&T defended itself saying, "We're not trying to buy Clinton."

At noon on Wednesday Clinton broke his tradition of long-winded speeches. In 1988 he spoke for 33 minutes in a speech nominating Michael Dukakis for President. The speech was memorable for the resounding cheers when Clinton said, "In conclusion..." His speech accepting his own nomination lasted 20 minutes longer than the Dukakis speech. After being sworn in he spoke for less than 15 minutes.

Throughout history, inauguration speeches have run the gamut on time. Washington's speech was only 135 words. Henderson spoke for two hours in the rain. He then caught pneumonia and died a month later.

Although Clinton's speech will probably not go down in history as one of the more memorable inauguration speeches, the crowd in Washington seemed pleased. While he did not make any promises, he did offer hope for change and a new beginning.

After his speech, Wake Forest professor Maya Angelou, delivered a poem she had written especially for Clinton. Angelou is a professor of American Studies at Wake Forest University. She grew up 25 miles from Hope, Ark., where President Clinton spent his childhood.

Poetry has been recited at several past inaugurations. Robert Frost recited a poem at John F. Kennedy's inauguration. James Dickey read a poem at the Kennedy Center the night before Jimmy Carter was sworn in. Angelou regards it as a sign of wisdom that President Clinton wanted a poet to recite at his inauguration. "To know enough to ask poetry back into the light, onto the center stage, I think it means that he really wants to strengthen the country," Angelou said. "It sounds strange, but you see, poetry is the human being, the spoken human being at his best."

UNCW Takes On An International Flavor

BY LAURA KEETER
Staff Writer

UNCW bulletin boards advertise study abroad programs in flocks of pamphlets, as more students migrate overseas to study.

This semester UNCW hosts about 84 international students. New students include 22 French in the Business School, two Ecuadorian students, one from Guinea, and two from the Caribbean.

Students were welcomed in a January 8 orientation, directed by International Programs, which associated them with different campus facilities and services, such as the Student Health and Wellness Center and the Writing Place.

Although students may not have had a chance to visit these yet, Paula de la Puente and Reyna Oleas of Ecuador have seen the New Zoo, twice, in their first week. "It was really crowded," de la Puente said

"This semester UNCW hosts about 84 international students. New students include 22 French in the Business school, two Ecuadorian students, one from Guinea and two from the Caribbean."

A January 16th two-van tour of Wilmington stopped at the USS North Carolina Battleship, the Cape Fear Museum and the North Carolina Aquarium. Tour guides at each location greeted the students and led special tours. At the aquarium, the guide led students through the back to a "behind the scenes" glimpse of the tanks.

"We don't have the same fishes," Herve Puteaux of France said. "I think it's [Aquatic life] more beautiful here."

American students returning from overseas programs started the International Students Organization last semester, which had its first meeting this semester on January 19. They are trying to plan a plausible Washington D.C. trip.

"Even these kind of meetings show people care for you, and that's really important for me," de la Puente said. "I think the people here are real warm. I like it so far.

Don't Sell Your Soul To The Opinions Of Others

One of the most difficult tasks we face is the development of a sense of ourselves that allow us to break free of our tendency to always compare ourselves with other people.

Many of us often feel that the people that we talk to, hear of, or read about are more intelligent, more skillful, more attractive, more gentle, more generous, more practical, more spiritual than we are. It becomes incredibly difficult when we can't get away from measuring ourselves against others, mostly deciding that they are the real people, the together people and much better than we are.

If we think about this dynamic in our lives at all, it is clear that such feelings are distorted, destructive to our personal well-being, and damaging to a healthy spiritual life. But for many, there are very real feelings that can generate a whole cycle of lowered self-esteem as we relate to people in a way that strengthens and confirms these feelings. It becomes the old self-fulfilling prophecy all over again. We enter into a new relationship and experience others as stronger, better, more valuable persons, and ourselves as weaker, worse, and not worth talking to. After a while the relationship becomes intolerable and we walk away from it feeling worse than when we started it.

Another dimension of this negative process is a tendency of folks with such low self-esteem to try and find ways to please others which lead us, in effect, to sell out our souls to the opinions of other people.

I raise this issue, because I am convinced that we can change and grow to a more fulfilling life based on a healthier and more positive acceptance of the goodness of our own unique selves. If you find yourself caught in either of these cycles, that is always seeing others better than yourself or always trying to please others by acting as you think they want you to, the first step you can take is by becoming aware of your attitudes and actions. You should become aware of these attitudes and the ways they affect your behavior, then you can decide to take responsibility for yourself and generate a desire for change. The next critical step is to discover people in your lives or reach out to someone outside of your present circle of friends who can accept and affirm the real person that lives at the center of your self. If it takes reaching out to a helper, a counselor, or a professor, do it! It is worth the risk and the discomfort to develop a stronger sense of yourself.

Dealing with low self-esteem is another reason we should develop our spiritual connection with God. Developing the path to God of prayer and meditation allow us to be in the presence of that One who loved you before you could love, and who has given you your own self before any comparison to anyone else was possible. Each of us is a special unique creation of a loving God and the realization of that fact through our spiritual life can be an incredibly powerful factor in learning to love ourselves as God has loved us.

The journey to the humble sense of self-worth is difficult but the joy of discovering our own unique specialness is truly worth the effort. Think about it. When do you enjoy simply being yourself? When and where can you live when you are not self-critical or putting on some mask to please other people. It may be time to make some changes.

Alcohol has no place at Trask

Over the weekend Trask Coliseum was the site of three great wins by the men's basketball team. The only drawback was the amount of alcohol present. Most students don't need to partake in the consumption of alcohol to have a good time, but some think they do. This will not be a column about the "evil of alcohol."

Some students felt it was appropriate to throw objects onto the court during the game, one of those objects was a cup that reeked of Bacardi. There is no excuse for throwing objects onto the court. Aside from the fact someone could get hurt, the team could be penalized.

At the Saturday game, Coach Kevin Eastman had to announce to the crowd not to throw anything onto the floor. Luckily, no one else did. According to Colonial Athletic Association Assistant Commissioner Jerry Stone, referees do not have to issue a warning to the home team. They can issue a two-shot technical foul and give the visiting team the ball. That could result in a five-point swing, two points on the free throws and a three-pointer on the resulting possession.

Picture this: The Seahawks are up 70-68 with three minutes to play against James Madison University and a hacking foul is called on us. Someone then throws a cup onto the court and the ref calls a technical. Not only will the JMU player shoot two free throws for the foul, JMU will get two free throws for the technical, and they will get the ball at midcourt. The potential here is seven points. Now the Seahawks are down five with three to play. Is it worth it? No!

Another aspect of being drunk or having alcohol at games is Trask is an alcohol-free environment. Chief Billy Dawson of the Campus Police said the student will be required to leave the building and there could be more punishment.

If the student lives on campus, he could be written up, sent to his resident coordinator, and, possibly, have a hearing.

If a student doesn't live on campus, he could be sent to the Dean of Students office. The incident will be referred to the judicial system. If the student is found guilty, he could be sent to the Alternatives, receive a written reprimand, or receive disciplinary action.

Another course of action, left to Campus Police discretion, is charging the student with an offense and having him go through the court system downtown.

Any which way, if you decide to drink before or at games, that is your choice and risk, just do not penalize our team with your stupidity.

Coach Eastman said Wednesday that the crowd support the team got over the weekend was "unbelievably great....It was so much fun for the players and staff."

"It helped us. We'll need it from here on out."

If you want to show your disapproval of a referee's call or one of their players cuts under one of our skywalkers, do it vocally. Don't throw anything onto the court.

Some people complained to the administration about some of the signs displayed during the Sacramento State game. Try to remember that we need the community's support at games too, so keep the signs clean. Don't think of it as censorship, think of it as class.

LETTERS To The Editor

Dear Editor:

Your editorial in the January 14th edition titled "Pedestrians/Bikers are people too!" was based on a common misconception that may have confused some of your readers. The substantive basis of your editorial is incorrect in that you believe that bicycle traffic has some right of way or special privilege under the law while passing through crosswalks. This is not the case under North Carolina Law.

The North Carolina Motor Vehicle law states in GS 20-4.01 that a bicycle is a vehicle and is subject to all motor vehicle laws where they are not specifically excluded. This means that the bicycle operator has no privilege in the crosswalk and additionally must yield to pedestrians in the crosswalk and vehicles on the roadway. The exception to this is the case where the operator dismounts and walks the bicycle through the crosswalk. This is the recommended method of crossing and affords the best protection as well as pedestrian rights. Statutes addressing unsafe movement, failure to yield, and many others are utilized by our Department in citing at fault cyclists in vehicle accidents. Bicycle operators are responsible for damage to vehicles they may strike in addition to receiving citations. The same liability exists when a pedestrian is struck by a bicycle. Additional statutes that should be of interest to bicyclists are NCGS 20-129 (e) requiring lighting on bicycles used at night and NCGS 20-171.2 prohibiting bicycle races on highways.

Drivers have, and will continue to be, cited for failure to yield to pedestrians at crosswalks, but enforcement action alone will not address the problem. Cyclists and pedestrians must be responsible for common sense approaches to their own safety. It is of little consequence to a critically injured pedestrian to know that they had the right of way. If it appears a vehicle is not going to slow while approaching a crosswalk do not step into its path, yield to a law breaker and continue to enjoy your day. Matters of principle will not hold up well to a two ton metal traveling 20 - 30 miles per hour.

Chris Slater is committee member and can be reached at extension 3184.

Cyclists, pedestrians, and motor vehicles can co-exist safely on our campus if common sense and common courtesy could prevail. We at the police department will continue to assist the University community with traffic control measures, education programs, and enforcement activity. Any person or groups interested in obtaining information on bicycle or traffic safety should contact crime prevention officer Chris Slater at extension 3184.

The Chancellor's Safety and Advisory Committee has been actively involved in addressing bicycle safety concerns. Comments, concerns, and ideas can be conveyed to the committee through its members. Officer

Dear Editor,

I am the chairperson for the North Carolina African-American Student Leadership Conference. This event will take place in two weeks. I have a major concern about the African-American student population at UNCW. We have done everything possible to get the students from UNCW to register and they're not responding! In all actuality, this really upsets me.

First of all, they complain about not meeting other black students from across North Carolina. Okay, we work diligently to put this conference together as something that can be a learning experience, but at the same time, it's a social event also. Then, we're back to square one, they don't register! I mean, what else can be done? I feel that if they're given the opportunity to participate in something like this and they don't take advantage of it, perhaps they should just stop complaining!

N.C. Marine Trades Program Now Based On Campus

BY JULIE PODLASEK
Staff Writer

Chancellor Leutze announced last week that the North Carolina Marine Trades program will now be based at UNCW. The program is a non-profit organization that works with and helps out small businesses and community colleges in the marine sector.

The program will incorporate the NC Marine Crescent, a five-year-old regional organization supporting marine trades, community college marine programs, and other research and development. Chancellor Wagoner was instrumental in helping the organization start up, and also by giving it its name, as the Crescent, which stands for the five coastal counties of Brunswick, Onslow, Pender, Carteret, and New Hanover that make up the program.

Current Marine Crescent Executive Director Mike Bradley will head the new program in a joint arrangement with UNCW's Small Business and Technology Development Center (SBTDC). The SBTDC already has an office on campus under the direction of Ted Jans.

The program will assist marine businesses with start-up, operation, marketing, and help to give UNCW a type of exposure it has never had before as a place where marine research is headed. Through the Marine Trades Program, the university will be providing a series of workshops and seminars to talk about environmental compliance issues.

Bradley hopes to use the Interactive Telecommunications network here on campus to be able to interact with other people in the state about marine and environmental issues for small businesses. He believes, "UNCW is at the cutting edge of using this technology, which is the future for environmental delivery for the business sector." He also hopes to involve the Marine Trade Show and the NC Marine EXPO in this technology.

Bradley also believes that UNCW has a strong environmental approach to business practices, and this exposure will help show that it is possible to "have a successful business yet maintain safe environmental practices."

Racial Change Fueled By Awareness

BY KAREN NEUSTADT
College Press Service

College campuses throughout the nation celebrated Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday Jan. 18, marking the end of a year of unprecedented black empowerment fueled by the fires of Los Angeles and inspired by a film about the life of Malcolm X.

Racial incidents and institutional neglect brought a flurry of peaceful protests, sit-ins and demonstrations by mobilized African-American students, some of whom say they have a powerful new sense of identity and purpose.

While King is being honored on most campuses, his message of peace that galvanized the civil rights movement of the '60s has been modified by the more urgent motto "by all means necessary" adopted by slain black leader Malcolm X.

Some students suggest that resurgent interest in Malcolm X clothing, hats, buttons and T-shirts is connected with feelings of disenchantment with current black leadership.

"People are more aware of their heritage. I think people are finally beginning to recognize we don't have to sit in the back of the bus, that we are a viable presence," said Iyallu Moses, director of the African-American Cultural Center at North Carolina State University at Raleigh, N.C.

"It is empowering," she added. Moses said that black students at NCSU are learning to "maturely approach" the school's top administration in a way that would not have been possible a decade ago.

"I think there is a revival of interest in our culture, and it is being translated into students taking more of a responsible role in addressing issues that were ignored," Moses said.

For example, 65 black NCSU students recently staged a sit-in at the college radio station to protest its programming policies.

The students, who requested more prime-time hours for African-oriented music, crowded into the broadcast booth and adjoining lobby for about two hours. The demonstration was scheduled after students approached the station's general manager and were told no changes would be made in the music format.

Black students at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill recently used new-found clout - including a visit from filmmaker Spike Lee, who made the movie Malcolm X, to convince officials to build a free-standing black cultural center.

"The protest started in 1991. They had given us a renovated snack bar for an office, and though they promised us a cultural center, it wasn't going past that," said Tim Smith, a quarterback on the UNC football team and a founding member of the Black Awareness Council, a group of black activist athletes.

While black students debated the wisdom of a separate facility, a consensus was finally reached and Chancellor Paul Hardin endorsed a plan in November for the center, which will include a gallery to display African-American art.

"We take everything from Malcolm X to Martin Luther King... the Black Panthers and we incorporate it into what we do today. It's a different time, so some things may not work for us today," Smith said.

Smith said watching television coverage of the Los Angeles riots last year changed his life. The violence erupted after the acquittal of four white police officers in the beating of black motorist Rodney King.

"I don't remember this, but my mom said I sat transfixed, saying over and over, 'I've got to do something. I've got to do something...'"

"It is obvious (since the riots) that students have become more aware of their treatment," he added.

Smith noted that the white student population was supportive of the Black Awareness Council efforts, and many joined the black students in demonstrations.

"Once you give people the facts, the truth speaks for itself," he said.

Student leaders say black students are searching for their place in history.

"The Malcolm X movie has just come out and a lot of students are trying to find out more about themselves and their history," said Raul Hoxie, chairman of the student-run University of Texas Institute for the Healing of Racism.

"We need to take responsibility for our own racism and hope that it will be contagious to others will emulate us," Hoxie said, noting that the Los Angeles riots also spurred many students into action on the Austin, Texas campus.

"There have always been black organizations on campus, and they have been doing projects on black issues, but we are now fortifying old values," he said.

Hoxie meets with a group of students each week whose goal is to fight racism on campus. The institute professes that education and communication are the keys to wiping out a generation of racism.

But institutional racism is only a piece of the equation, say black students who have responded during the fall semester to racial slurs by protesting until a public apology was made. While most students are sympathetic to demonstrations by black students, some worry that ethnic pride can sometimes escalate into ethnic chauvinism and further isolate the races.

One Million Watch As Clinton Assumes Control

BY ROBERT S. BOYD and ROBERT A. RANKIN
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

WASHINGTON—Buoyed by the cheers of hundreds of thousands of hopeful Americans on a sparkling winter day, William Jefferson Clinton accepted the torch of leadership for a new generation Wednesday.

An estimated 1 million people crowded the Capitol grounds and lined Pennsylvania Avenue to celebrate the first Democrat to enter the White House in 16 years.

"A new season of American renewal has begun," America's 42nd president declared in a brief but moving inaugural address delivered from the majestic West Front of the Capitol.

"This is our time," said the 46-year-old Clinton, visibly proud and happy. "Let us embrace it."

Though Clinton's speech lasted only 14 minutes, it laid out principles of mutual responsibility, sacrifice and generational change that marked the high points of his campaign for the presidency.

The new president said Americans must accept more responsibility for themselves, their communities and future generations.

Echoing John F. Kennedy's inaugural challenge to "ask what you can do for your country," Clinton said: "We must do what America does best—offer more opportunity to all and demand more responsibility from all."

He said change will not be easy and will require sacrifice, as a family sacrifices to provide for its children. He mentioned no specifics, except to single out "our massive debt" as a problem that must be fixed.

Spinkled through the speech were repeated appeals for help—from God, from Congress and from the American people.

"No president, no Congress, no government can undertake this mission alone. My fellow Americans, you too must play a part in our renewal."

Clinton also acknowledged that he must deal with a dangerous world.

"Today, a generation raised in the shadows of the Cold War assumes new responsibilities in a world warmed by the sunshine of freedom, but threatened still by ancient hatreds and new plagues," he said.

Referring to violence in Iraq and Somalia, the first chief executive born after World War II said he will respond to challenges "with peaceful diplomacy when possible, with force when necessary."

By and large, however, it was a day for joyous celebration, not somber thoughts of the difficulties ahead.

After his address, Clinton beamed and hugged Mays Angelou, the African-American poet, whose inaugural poem, "On the Pulse of Morning," summoned hopes for a new beginning in America.

After coffee, Bush and Clinton rode together in the presidential limousine for the trip to the Capitol and the swearing-in ceremony.

No sooner had the motorcade pulled away from the White House than a moving van bearing Arkansas license plates pulled up bringing the Clintons' furniture and clothing.

Through the morning at the Capitol, a huge crowd had waited for hours for the ritual marking the peaceful passage of power from one man, one party and one generation to another.

At 11:45 a.m., Gore took the vice-presidential oath. It was administered by Supreme Court Justice Byron White because Gore's first choice, Justice Thurgood Marshall, was ailing. Soprano Marilyn Horne then sang the classic folk number, "Simple Gifts."

At one minute before noon, Clinton peeled off his overcoat and stepped to the podium, where Chief Justice William Rehnquist was waiting to swear him in, using the full name he rarely employs, William Jefferson Clinton.

As he repeated the 35-word oath prescribed by the Constitution in a firm, clear voice, with his wife and daughter at his side, Clinton's hand lay on a King James Bible given to him by his grandmother. The Bible was open to St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, Chapter 6, Verse 8: "For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."

When the ceremony was over, Clinton escorted Mr. and Mrs. Bush to the helicopter standing by to take them to Andrews Air Force Base. There they said goodbye to former Vice President Dan Quayle and his wife, and boarded Air Force One for the final time for the journey to their new home to Houston.

The Bushes were accompanied by his old friend and chief of staff, James A. Baker III, and White House spokesman Martin Fitzwater. Asked how Bush felt after the three-hour flight, Fitzwater said, "He's fine, looking forward to a new life."

Before he left Washington, Bush sent a final report to Congress urging a worldwide effort to oust Iraqi President Saddam Hussein. He also extended Defense Secretary Dick Cheney's term for five hours, until the new secretary, Les Aspin, was confirmed by the Senate.

The Senate also confirmed Warren Christopher as secretary of State and Lloyd Bentsen as secretary of the Treasury.

No longer the leader of a single state or political party but of the entire nation, Clinton bade goodbye to his predecessor, George Bush, and promptly set to work.

His first official acts were to sign his name—Bill Clinton, the White House—into papers formally nominating his cabinet officers, setting in place new ethics rules for his administration, and proclaiming Friday a "national day of fellowship and hope."

He passed out the gold-and-black pens he used to congressional leaders, who later held a lunch for him in the President's Room at the Capitol.

In a sign of the new president's responsibilities,

Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin sent congratulations to Clinton and called for an early summit to build U.S.-Russian relations. "It is especially important that there should be no pause in our dialogue," Yeltsin told reporters in Moscow.

After lunch, the new First Couple led the traditional inaugural parade down Pennsylvania Avenue. They rode in a shiny new armored limousine past cheering, flag-waving crowds packed 20-deep along the "Avenue of Presidents." When they reached the Treasury Building, they got out and strolled the last few blocks, sometimes holding hands, waving and bear hug, while Secret Service agents nervously scanned the bleachers.

As the sun sank behind the White House, the Clintons, accompanied by Vice President Al Gore and his wife and children, gathered in a bulletproof reviewing stand and watched a 3-hour spectacle of bands and floats from every corner of the land.

Before retiring for their first night in the White House, the Clintons and Gores were expected to drop in at each of the 11 glittering inaugural balls.

Clinton's day began at Blair House, the presidential guest house, with an early morning briefing from Bush's national security adviser, Brent Scowcroft, who relayed the good news that the uneasy truce with Iraq was holding.

The president-elect emerged shortly after 8 a.m. with a cup of coffee in his hand to attend an luncheon service at the Metropolitan African Methodist Episcopal Church, the first African-American church to host of a pre-inaugural service.

A tear rolled down Clinton's cheek during the singing of "Holy Ground." He dabbed his eye at the hymn, "Precious Lord Take My Hand."

At 10:30 a.m., Clinton, Gore and their families drove to the White House to have coffee with the Bushes and congressional leaders.

"Welcome, welcome, how are you?" the departing president said as his successor walked up the first steps of the North Portico.

"Clinton, welcome to your new home," Bush told the new First Daughter, who swooped down with her father to pet Mittie, the Bushes' pet spaniel.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Definitely Dead on Arrival!

BY D. NEAL LEEPER
Arts and Entertainment Editor

What do you get when you grab ten loser actors, several more sobbing actors, some Panavision movie cameras, Touchstone Pictures, a couple million dollars, a true story, and a sound stage in California? Yes folks, you get this week's review, Alive.

Now, don't get me wrong... It wasn't THAT bad, that's just what I was thinking throughout the duration of the movie. Here's the story.

In 1972, a South American rugby team is flying to Chile to play in a tournament involving teams from all around the world. Just when the flight is just twenty minutes short of landing at the airport, the plane encounters some turbulence and large shifts in altitude. The plane is flying over the Andes, which at this time was snow covered and VERY cold. Anyway, the plane shatters, shifts and rocks to a great extent. This, along with the heavy cloud cover, confuses the pilots and scares the passengers. It seems that the plane loses so much altitude that the pilots receive sirens and additional warnings to "PULL UP." The team and other passengers on board realize the immediate danger facing them by visually confirming the mountain tops through their windows. Meanwhile, the "intellectual" flight crew tries to raise power to the engines and increase altitude, but it does not work in time. Instead of landing safely in Chile, the plane bottoms out on the top of a fierce mountain, disposing of the tail of the plane and several passengers along the way. I must say that the visuals during the crash scene were very neat and interesting. It actually created a feeling of being there.

Well, there they all are, stuck in the middle of no where with hurt, confused people and crying women all over the place. They did, however, pick quite a lovely day to crash because the weather eventually cleared up and got sunny. But, that fact was not too important to the crash victims. Needless to say, the survivors were stuck without adequate food, strong hope, and positive inspiration.

After removing the dead from the plane's shell, the team of survivors regrouped themselves and tried to get organized. Of course, they all thought rescue would be inevitable. After removing the covers from the seats and making blankets, the group moved into the plane to keep warm. They used suitcases and various debris to block the opening. After all, at night time, the temperature usually fell several degrees below zero. Food was another problem. A couple people found wine (in the cockpit of all places - you figure) and other chocolates and crackers scattered about and decided it would be best to ration it off. They did the same routine for several days.

Several days later, the stranded bunch heard the sounds of engines in the distance. Of course, they all ran outside and made obnoxious noises and jumped up and down. Unfortunately, there was massive cloud cover and stormy winter conditions which made visibility difficult to the rescue team. The rescue plane did, however, issue a "dip" of the wing which was incorrectly interpreted by the survivors as a signal that they had been seen. So, what did the happy bunch do? They proceeded to eat all of the remaining food and drink the last of the wine. So, when three days passed and no rescue or food, the leader as well as some others were a little perturbed.

Well, there they all are. They were stuck in the middle of nowhere without anything to do or eat, freezing cold weather, miserable conditions, low morale, bad visibility and a weird mechanic that survived the crash (who was slightly mad) was all the survivors had to deal with. If anything was funny about the movie, this little mechanic character was. For example, the main "actors" (I use that term loosely) were standing around trying to figure out how to work the radio transmitter. Of course, transmitting would be a little difficult without some sort of electrical current. The flaky mechanic was happy to inform everyone that the batteries are in the tail of the plane, but the tail of the plane was somewhere else. He usually said a few entertaining things at a given time and would eventually stumble off laughing to himself. Well, he died soon afterward anyway. Oh well.

A personal AM/FM radio was discovered in a suitcase and was used to monitor the rescue attempts from the stations in Chile. Several weeks after the crash, the guys heard that the search had been called off and everyone was presumed dead. Well, nobody was too happy with this one. With all the food gone and hope slowly slipping down the drain, this was the last straw. The winter weather was worsening and the need to get out was growing stronger. And yes, the problem (or lack of) food was becoming more and more apparent. So, what do these good happy rugby players decide to do? You guessed it! They started the practice of cannibalism. Many of the survivors were slightly skeptical of the idea, but the more thought given to it, as well as the increasing hunger pains, made it more and more practical. After long debate, several of the dead bodies were carved up like Thanksgiving turkey. At first, the people simply ate the "rear-ends" of the dead (yes, I know this sounds disgusting) but eventually moved to deeper meat, stuff that looked like pork chops and chicken breasts.

What else could happen to these guys? How about an avalanche? That's right, just when you thought everything was getting to be routine, a large mass of snow makes its way down the side of a mountain and buries the plane deeper in the snow. During this tragedy, several more people lose their life.

After revamping their strength and recovering their shelter, a crew eventually made it out on a voyage of hope. This three man team took the best meat with them (I won't expand on that one) and the freshest melted snow (yes folks, water) on a trek through the mountains. They eventually found the tail end of the plane along with some chocolates and more dead people. The battery was removed from the plane and eventually was found to be useless. For some reason, no one on the rugby team could connect an UHF transmitter to a raw DC battery. I guess the 300 outspiced wires confused them. Anyway, with the radio idea shot, the only thing left to do was to walk until they found help. Of course, the skeptical people were the first to impress their pessimistic ideas upon everyone else. But, the courageous and brave men (only two of them left) went on their mission.

The two man traveling team eventually left the white snow behind and came upon fields of green grass and running water. The next shot of the film was of the remaining survivors in the airplane. The audio portion of the shot was of blades and turbines, marking sounds of a rescue. After being stranded over 62 days, two helicopters meet their appearance and the rescue finally becomes a reality.

After leaving the theater, the main thing on my mind was, "Damn, I can't believe they made it through all that!" Other than that, nothing else relevant comes to mind. Well, the ending of other people was something that sticks out, but I'll leave that to Phil Smith to explain someday.

The special effects were obviously done with miniature models and the remainder of the scenes were on a sound stage. I'm sure that actual background footage was taken from either South America or somewhere in Alaska. The visuals and soundtrack are not that splendid, so renting this film and watching it on a television would not cause a major loss in the presentation quality. The film does drag on for over two hours, so if you insist on seeing it, keep that in mind. Until next time!

Based in Raleigh, North Carolina, The Connells began playing music in 1984 when guitarist Mike Connell asked his brother David, a bass player to help him start a band. Lead vocalist Doug MacMillan was brought in by the bands first drummer, who was soon replaced by Peele Wimberley, the highly-acclaimed drummer for the popular Raleigh punk band Johnny Quest. Soon joining on guitar, keyboards and vocals was George Hundley. Since then, The Connells have emerged as one of the South's favorite rock bands. You can go see The Connells perform Saturday, January 23 at The Mad Monk.

Sex Police Arrest Munk

BY KIM WARE
Music Correspondent

If you don't know already, the Chapel Hill music scene is earning a great name for itself, and may even be on its way to becoming the next Seattle. With talented original bands such as The Sex Police, it's easy to see why.

The Sex Police played with Egypt, a three-piece from Washington, D.C., last Thursday at the Mad Monk and I must say, it was an excellent show. After Egypt pleased the audience and even showed a little political correctness with "censorship," the Sex Police instructed the audience to "keep your butt in the air and your fish in the bowl."

The Sex Police arrested the Monk with their distinct blend of rock, reggae, rap, soul, and funk. Norwood Cheek (bass and vocals), John Pymale (guitar and vocals), and Jody Maxwell (drums) provided for the Sex Police a solid foundation while Jay Widenhouse (trumpet) and Robert Jones (trombone) added horns to provide even more originality.

They played a good hour and a half entertaining an excited crowd with many of their hits such as the popular "Hurricane" and "Elevator" from the Medallion album. They also played "You Turned Out to be a Monster" from their newest album released Second String.

If you missed their show on Thursday, I definitely recommend you catch them next time around, probably sometime in April.

Though some of the songs have the usual sexually explicit lyrics, such as "don't look now but there's a river of blood/ what I'm guilty of," taken from the song "I Wanna Melt With You" to others that contain important messages about life, war, loss of love, and Prince's normal "pervertedness" that we have all come to respect. "In 1967 in a bus marked public schools/ Ride me and a group of unsuspecting political tools," shows that Prince does have a message about history and his life, taken from the track "I Remember What I Want." In-between tracks is a dialogue between an interviewer and Prince. This dialogue is not only humorous but it also carries across some of the messages Prince wants to get across to the public.

So, if you like Prince but are a little skeptical as to whether or not you will enjoy the songs on his latest album, take it from a newly pronounced fan, it is definitely worth the money.

Too Funky!

BY BRYN HILL
Music Correspondent

Though I am not a big fan of "PNPG," (Prince and the New Power Generation) I really did like their new CD.

I borrowed the Compact Disc from my friend to listen to and I had heard bits and pieces of it before but never actually had the urge to purchase it or listen to it further.

When it came time to review for the paper, I figured I'd listen to it and hate it, write a negative review, and then I would not have to think about Prince anymore. But, after turning it on and listening to it, I realized I was keeping beat with the music and actually getting into the "funky" lyrics. Not only was I enjoying the music, but I found myself actually liking it more and more. As a matter of fact, I listened to the CD more than once that evening and found myself singing along to the lyrics as I fell asleep that night.

With the new semester already underway, I'm sure that many of you have found that you have a little extra time on your hands, right? Well, maybe so, maybe not. Even if you don't have too much free time, I would like for you to consider writing for the Arts and Entertainment section for The Seahawk.

If you have any interests in music, books, movies, plays, concerts, or anything "artsy" and entertaining, I can definitely find a place for you. So, if your interested, stop by room 205-E in the student union and fill out your application and drop it in the Arts and Entertainment envelope.

Twelve Talking Points American Red Cross Blood Services Carolinas Region

1. American Red Cross, Blood Services Carolinas Region, serves the blood needs of patients in 120 hospitals throughout North Carolina and in parts of South Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee and Georgia.
2. In order to meet the needs of our families and friends in these hospitals, 1,500 healthy people must give blood every day in our region.
3. There are many important ways blood is used: 19% for treatment of cancer, 16% to help people with heart disease, another 16% for people with gastrointestinal tract diseases, 12% in cases of serious injury. The blood you donate can be separated into five components and help as many as five sick or injured people.
4. In the Carolinas Region, 78 percent of donors give blood once a year. If each donor gave one more time each year, we would not have to import blood from other parts of the country for hospitals in our region.
5. It is impossible to get AIDS or any other disease from donating blood. All equipment used is sterile, it is used one time and discarded. Giving blood is safe.
6. If, because of AIDS and other factors, you are concerned about the quality of blood you or a family member may receive, the single best thing you can do is donate blood regularly and encourage your friends who are healthy to do the same.
7. Ninety-five percent of us will need blood or a blood product by the time we reach the age of 72, yet only about 6 percent of the total population donates blood.
8. To be a blood donor you must be at least 17 years old, weigh at least 110 pounds and be in general good health. You can safely donate blood every 56 days up to six times a year.
9. American Red Cross Blood Services believes it is the responsibility of healthy individuals in each community to give blood regularly for their neighbors who can't take life or good health for granted.
10. Blood itself is free of charge or obligation. It is a gift from a donor to a patient who might not survive without it. An expense recovery fee to offset the cost of recruitment, collection, testing and distribution is passed on to the hospital and, ultimately, the patient's insurance carrier.
11. The assurance of an adequate blood supply in our region helps contain rising health care costs. The cost of importing exceeds our cost of collecting. This additional cost ultimately raises health care fees charged to businesses and individuals by insurance carriers.
12. Someone needs blood every 23 seconds in the United States.

For blood donation times and appointments, please call your local Red Cross. Thanks for helping your friends and neighbors.

Health and Fitness Myths

Myth: Spot Reduction

Performing toning exercises for a specific area of the body where fat is deposited such as the stomach, will not stimulate the body to use fat from that area. Exercising a specific area will cause the body to reduce fat deposits. Also, the body burns fat in a random fashion so that losing fat from one area of the body only is impossible. If your goal is to reduce your love handles, thin your thighs, or flatten your stomach, you should participate in regular aerobic exercise sustained for 15-30 minutes at least three times a week, and eat a low fat diet.

Myth: Muscle Cramps

Many people believe that muscle cramps are caused by inadequate salt intake. However, the truth is that cramps are caused by loss of water or dehydration. Water should be consumed before, during and after exercise to prevent dehydration and cramping. Ingesting salt tablets can aggravate existing dehydration by drawing water out of the body tissues.

Myth: Special Clothing and Body Wraps

Sauna suits, plastic wraps and rubber jumpsuits are all proposed methods of weight loss. These suits resist the bodies natural cooling system by inhibiting the evaporation of sweat. This results in excessive overheating and water loss which may translate into an apparent weight loss. However, what the body has lost is not fat deposits, but water, which is necessary for the body to function normally. Once rehydrated, the body weight will remain virtually unchanged by the use of these kinds of "quick fix methods". It should also be noted that these types of garments can cause dangerously high body temperatures and severe dehydration. Again, if fat loss is your goal, aerobic exercise at least 3 days a week for approximately 20 minutes coupled with a low fat diet is the safe and effective way to reach your goal.

THE Gutter

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

While playing around with some of my friends thinking of new interesting Nike Shoe ads that would reshape the attention of the consumer to the shoe company. We, as all ungrounded group conversations do, spoke randomly from person to person presenting different humorous ideas on the subject.

Then it happened, like a flash of divine inspiration it happened, one of us came up with the ultimate marketing idea. It was a basketball team that could not in any circumstances possibly lose. A team that could methodically pick apart the most powerful team ever assembled in the history of mankind to this point: the 1992 US Olympic Basketball Team better known as the "Dream Team."

What team could be such a force you say? None other than team APOCALYPSE. Ever heard of these guys? I bet you have, you just were not aware of the formidable basketball force that they would have made.

At 7-7" starting at center from the Mesopotamia averaging 26.6 points, 18 rebounds and 10 blocked shots per game, Samson.

Playing forward at 6-7", last years rookie of the year from Mount Stani University, they call him "The Deliver" averaging 19.6 a game...Moses.

In the other forward position also 6-7", known universally as, "Mister Triple Double", posting an average of 31 points, 11 Steals and 10 assists each outing is none other than F. Abraham.

At point guard, in his third season with an unbelievable 15 points, 21 assists and 7 rebounds per game, call him intense but his fans call him, "The Giant Killer", for his passing accuracy and his ability to shoot on the run and inside with the towers, King David.

And at the two guard spot is the man they call, "The Prophet", because he has called every bank, roll, and net shot, since he was 7. At 6-6" averaging 32 points per game and shooting 87% from the field, 77% in three point attempts and 98.3 % on free throw attempts Mister Money Hands himself..... Jeremiah.

Can you imagine the devastation this team could apply to any zone? Why none? Because man-to-man would yield any team two problems, foul trouble and a mammoth deficit to overcome in the next half.

Can you imagine Moses clearing the lane, like he parted the red sea? Who would have a stronger inside game than Samson? His raw power at this position is almost ungodly, while he is running in two handed power dunks off rare misses, and when he is given the ball inside and scores, he still has the presence of mind to hustle down court (with his 4.6 -40 speed), and enjoy the target practice shot blocking has become for him.

King David's overall ability just debilitates the defensive, and offensive plans of the worlds best coaches.

The bench of the team goes 12 deep and like every player on the team they too have a nickname, the fans have called the unsanitized bench, "The Disciples."

What a match-up it would be to have the "The Dream Team" face team APOCALYPSE in a seven game series!

Holy smokes, I just thought of another team that could easily handle these two teams, but I am almost out of space so I will wait until possibly March Madness to present to you TEAM MESSIAH vs UNCW think of the media hype the local media would do if UNCW stole this one, or the way they would slam the team if they lost. (i.e. James Madison and the Morning Star)

Jones Shakes Trask and AU

With Disrespectful-Thunderous-Ungodly-Fat-Nasty-Dunk

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

The last of a three game home stand proved to be the best for the Seahawks this season as they defeated American University 93-75.

First and foremost the setting of this game could not have been better for the Seahawk Club. After coming off a sellout crowd for the George Mason game, over four thousand astounded and adoring fans returned to watch UNCW take on American for second place in the Colonial Athletic Association.

The first half was a brawl from tip-off to the buzzer. UNCW, foreshadowing the second half jumped out of the blocks on a 10 to 2 run to begin the game.

But American battled back into the game by playing hard, grabbing rebounds and most importantly gaining some composure to mount an offensive against the opportunistic Seahawk club.

Tim Shaw with 11 and Chris Meighn (yeah, the guy on the commercial) with 9 points, spearheaded the Seahawk attack in the first half.

The first half ended with a buzzer beater by AU's Brain Gilgeous to close UNCW lead to one point, 30-29.

American had to be drilled to be only down by a point at half as they prepared to come out for the second half of play.

UNCW played decent first half but their 10 point run to start the game only yielded them a one point lead, to defend in the second half.

Who would have guessed that this brawl would turn into a TKO. UNCW administered a tight-man to man defense alternating from a full court press to that settled back into a zone. This frequent change of defense kept American's shooting percentage to around 38% and ripped loose turnover-after-turnover as UNCW played well on both sides of the court.

"It was part of a cyclical process, it starts with good defensive play which leads to turnovers which leads to players hitting the shots that bugged off the front of the rim in the first half. Players suck it up and forgot about their weary legs and then the crowd gets into it, which feeds the players to play good defense, and the players feed the crowd with good play," said Coach Eastman.

This was evident in many ways in the second half of play for the Seahawks. And this was very evident with the most disrespectful dunk displayed in Trask this season by Chris Jones as he ran away with 20 second half points to end the game with 22 points.

Chris Meighn in what was his most notable game last season continued to terrorize the American squad and pumped in 16 for the game. Meighn and Jones were supported by Tim Shaw with another solid performance with 21, Reggie Veney 14, and defensive specialist Sherif El-Sanadilly with 10.

UNCW ran off 63 points and shot 82 percent in the second half to hammer American and take sole possession of second place in the CAA behind James Madison, who delivered UNCW its only loss in the Conference.

UNCW remains perfect at home this season (6-0) and are 11-2 overall.

The game against Sacramento State could have been called a home coming of sorts, after a three game road trip with games at Campbell, Richmond and James Madison, the Seahawks had to be relieved to be at home again 2-1 from the short tour.

UNCW found itself staring at the barrel of a team that was 1-15, and had suffered a tough loss the night before with a buzzer beater that placed Greensboro a head 62-61. The Hornets, headed toward Wilmington having never beaten a North Carolina opponent.

The first half was a half of play that was anchored by the 15 points that UNCW received off 15 of 18 free throw shooting. Keith Adkins lead the team at half with 10 points, as the Seahawks had a balanced scoring attack in the first half and a good mix of inside and outside play as the Seahawks lead at the half 42-23.

The second half Sacramento State was kept alive by the less aggressive play of the Seahawk, as they hovered around a ten point deficit for much of the second half.

The Hornets, lead by Shamar Brown with 15 points, could not overcome the 19 point lead that UNCW posted at the half, to fall to the Seahawks by thirteen, 73-60.

UNCW's high scorer for the game was Darren Moore with 14 points in what was not the best half of basketball this club has played this season.

"A win is a win, we want to win this conference and we want to do this by winning early", commented guard Drew Phillips putting the game in perspective. In a post game interview.

Coach Eastman also stated that, "It was not a real pretty win. We established our selves in the first half, but in the second half we failed to do this in some areas and they almost slipped back into it."

This was the first game of a three game home stand, that is to be played in five days. Next up for UNCW is CAA for George Mason.

Track Is Back

The Seahawk track and field teams began their season last Sunday in Chapel Hill at the Joe Hilton Invitational.

The meet featured some of the top teams in the Atlantic Coast Conference with Duke, UNC, N.C. State and Wake Forest present. The University of Georgia, South Carolina State, Western Carolina, The Citadel, Methodist College, North Carolina Central, and North Carolina A&T also competed.

The Seahawks had a good showing, setting two school records. James Jacobs in the 35 pound weight with a throw of 14'15" and Nicole Delaine set a UNCW record in the 55 and also placed second in the 440 with a time of 1:01.

The women also had many top finishers: millers Tricia Callison 5:37.6 (9) and Dierde Heyde 5:53.7 (14), Jill Peoples 1:07 (15) in the 440, and Heather Fenion 2:25.2 (4).

Top finishers for the men were miller Frank Ingrassia with a time of 4:39.1 (11th), Steven Benfield in the 440, 54.7 seconds (22), Doug Liming (5) and Vince Hovis (12) in the 880 with a time of 2:04 and 2:07.4, respectively. The men's mile relay team placed 8th with a time of 3:44.3.

Patriots Retreat

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

Last Saturday the men's basketball team defeated Colonial Athletic Association opponent in George Mason, 98-78 with 6100 fans on hand for the event.

The Seahawk attack was lead by senior guard Keith Adkins, who came off the bench to lead the team with 11 points in the first half. Adkins, who entered the game with 12:31 left in the half, provided an immediate impact by hitting two three point shots from the left wing and dishing out an assist to teammate Chris Meighn causing an 8-2 run for the Seahawks in the mid point of the half, cutting into the deficit posted by the Patriots, but the Seahawks still trailed by one.

This half also gave UNCW a glimpse of the rebounding talents of forward John Spann. John entered the game with 8:20 left in the half to help spark UNCW on to an 11-3 run in the second half. The aggressive rebounding and physical inside game of Spann, gave UNCW an added defensive lift that carried over to the offensive side of the court.

UNCW ended the half up 10 points, 43-33 in their first home conference game this season.

The second half was a clean mauling of the Patriots by the Seahawks. UNCW, who shot 50% in the first half, upped their percentage to 59% in the second half.

UNCW kept their half time lead with a balanced attack that kept GMU down by at least seven in the second half.

UNCW received solid performances from, Keith Adkins (19), Reggie Veney (17), Tim Shaw (12), John Spann and Darren Moore both had (10) on the evening.

The Seahawks prepared to face American, for the second home game of the year after a day off, for a battle for second place in the CAA.

UNCW Turns DOT Road Request Down

BY EDWARD MOSELEY
Staff Writer

The UNCW Board of Trustees on Wed. Jan. 13, denied a request to allow the North Carolina Department of Transportation to develop a four lane road on the north end of campus.

The proposed road enters campus where College Road and Randall Drive meet. It then runs parallel to Randall, across Racine, past the water tower, through Parking Lot H and out the back of campus.

The extension of Randall Parkway is part of the Wilmington Area Transportation Plan. This system of roads is planned to funnel traffic out of and around Wilmington.

It is also hoped the extensions of Randall Parkway will reduce traffic trying to reach Wrightsville Beach by way of College Road. Hugh Caldwell, an official with the City of Wilmington said, "the next step is for the local Transportation Advisory Committee to approve the plan."

The Transportation Advisory Committee is a group of individuals representing local government offices. If they approve the plan, the state Transportation Improvement Plan will jointly decide which specific projects are developed.

Carl Dempsey, said the trustees "turned that plan down about four times since 1986, the same way each time."

"We can recommend to the trustees," Dempsey said, "when we see a situation that is dangerous, but most of them, they know for themselves."

Dempsey and the trustees are concerned because the intersection of Racine and Randall is one of the busiest pedestrian areas on campus. The proposed road would cross directly over it.

"I have been with this institution too long," Dempsey said, "to want to see anything to harm the students."

There are other concerns. Dempsey said a study done by an Orlando, Fla. group a few years ago recommended the road not be constructed. It would wipe out the university's master plan.

"Several areas of wetlands are in the path of the road," Dempsey said. "No way in the world that the road could miss them."

Lori Conley, a Biology major graduating in May, said, "there are all kinds of things around Friday Hall that would be affected. We study that area in our classes, ecology experiments. I think they've bulldozed enough around here."

Dempsey said it is possible that the state could implement condemnation procedures and overrule the trustees denial to build the road.

Greek Happenings

BY JULIE PODLASEK
Staff Writer

Greek members at UNC Wilmington will have the pleasure of hearing an intriguing speaker on March 24, at the opening convocation of Greek Week 1993.

The speaker is Maureen Syring, a past National President of Delta Gamma Sorority. Syring is a highly respected and widely known figure in Greek life. She has made numerous presentations for Panhellenic Councils and Interfraternity Councils at various colleges across the U.S.

During her visit at UNCW, Syring will talk about the potential of Greek life and those things that should characterize a quality Greek system. She will also call on the Greeks to confront a number of issues such as sexism, diversity, alcohol abuse, risk management, hazing, and much more.

Following the keynote speaker, Greek Week activities will begin with the theme "Life's short. Rush hard. Go Greek!"

Thursday the 25th is "Games Day," consisting of sports and activities for the Greeks to compete in.

The Greek Week Talent Show will take place Friday evening at 7:00 in Trask Coliseum.

To bring the week to a close, on Sunday afternoon there will be a cookout at the Gazebo. A band will be performing along with the presentation of awards given to the groups that placed highest in each of the weeks events.

More details will be given later pertaining to this event.

Black History Month Kicks Off With Kazi-Ferrouillet

BY CAROLE MEHLE
Staff Writer

February is Black History Month and UNC Wilmington will be observing it with activities planned throughout the month. This year's kickoff program will feature keynote speaker Kuumba Kazi-Ferrouillet, managing editor and production manager of The Black Collegian magazine, at 8 p.m., Feb. 1, in the University Center ballroom.

Previously serving as copy editor, associate editor and managing editor for the magazine, Kazi-Ferrouillet has interviewed Rev. Jesse Jackson and former Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young. He has received two Unity Awards from Lincoln University of Missouri for "Reporting on Economics," and has been a featured speaker at several conferences.

"This is a big plus for the university to get someone of national notoriety to kickoff Black History Month at UNCW," said Ralph Parker, director of Minority Affairs.

Also featured during the Feb. 1 kickoff program will be UNCW graduates Rudy and Cynthia Tyson. The Tysons will perform musical selections including spirituals, jazz and modern selections.

Other events for Black History Month include the North Carolina African-American Student Leadership Conference, an anniversary concert by the UNCW Gospel Choir and a financial aid workshop.

Kuumba Kazi-Ferrouillet

Parker added the activities planned for Black History Month are for everyone, not just the members of UNCW's African-American community. The activities are to promote black history and racial harmony, he said.

Past observations of Black History Month have included keynote speakers such as former Philadelphia Mayor Wilson Goode and poet Nikki Giovanni, who will be making a return visit to campus as the keynote speaker for the North Carolina African-American Student Leadership Conference, to be held Feb. 5-7.

Black Student Leadership Conference To Be Held

From UNCW News

The UNCW Black Student Leadership Network is sponsoring the first North Carolina African-American Student Leadership Conference (NCAASLC) on the campus of UNCW Feb. 5-7. The conference will feature workshops, panel discussions and speakers.

The purpose of the conference is to help African-American students develop and strengthen leadership skills and to address problems African-Americans face as leaders, citizens, and students.

Some of the workshop topics include: "Life on a White Majority Campus"; "How to Become Visionary Leader"; "The Role of Black Artists as Leaders in the Community"; and "Self-Empowerment Through Self-Knowledge: Leadership Basics for African-Americans."

The keynote speakers for the conference is poet Nikki Giovanni of Cincinnati, OH, who will speak during the closing banquet on Saturday, Feb. 6 at 7 PM in the ball university center. Giovanni published her first book of poetry in 1968, which earned her the nickname "The Princess of Black Poetry." Since 1968, she has established herself as popular literary figure with nearly 20 books, several records, many honorary degrees and a movie to her credit. Giovanni was the keynote speaker for UNCW's Black History Month in 1991.

Also included in NCAASLC '93 is a career session examining opportunities in medicine, accounting, law, public service, teaching, and engineering.

Cost for the conference is $5 for students, $65 for faculty advisors, and $10 for UNCW students. Tickets for the closing banquet are available to the community, faculty, and staff for $15.

MBA To Raise Money

BY JOHN BRYAN
Staff Writer

In a press release, the UNCW MBA Association announced a fundraising Friday that is set to begin on Friday, Jan. 29, 1993. Tickets will be available Friday for a donation of $1.00 each in the lobby of the University Center. The winner of the raffle may receive a prize of up to $500.00, which is one half of possible donations. Only 1000 tickets will be available.

The drawing will be held at the Association's Pops Concert Social in the Madeline Suite in Wagner Hall on Feb. 20. The Wilmington Symphony will be performing. Money raised from the raffle will support MBA Association activities. According to Bill Hewel who furnished the information in the press release, the MBA Association is not funded by the University. People may contact Mr. Hewel at 350-0687, or MBA student ticket representative Mary Levitt at 392-6889.

Money raised will support educational and professional activities the Association sponsors. The donations will also help provide communication and assist interaction among MBA students, faculty, alumni and the community. One of the activities the MBA Association sponsored this school year was a discussion of total Quality Management on Set. 17, 1992. According to the Hewel, approximately 170 people comprised of students, faculty, and members of the local business community attended this discussion.

Upcoming activities of the Association include continued publication of a newsletter, a social to welcome new MBA students, participation in UNCW's Business Week, cooperation with The Cameron School of Business and alumni in the development of an MBA handbook, and an orientation for incoming MBA students.

Ticket donation may be made until the drawing on Feb. 23, or until supplies run out.

WLOZ Goes Cable

BY SHANNON DAVIS
Staff Writer

WLOZ has announced plans to join Vision Cable's new programming system this spring. Vision Cable of Wilmington is converting all of its TV and radio channels to a digital format. The cable company has agreed to donate the necessary equipment to the station.

General Manager of WLOZ, Robyn Marshall said, "Tom Smith at Vision Cable felt we were a worthwhile cause and wanted to keep us on the air, so he donated the equipment with no expense to WLOZ."

The new digital format that will affect all the radio and TV channels connected with Vision Cable will provide a more efficient and rapid mode of transportation for all of their signals. Although this won't improve the quality of sound, it will prevent any outside interference, such as storms, from interrupting their sound waves.

Marshall also said she is investigating getting up to a 10 watt signal for WLOZ, so that listeners could pick the station up in their car when driving within a mile or two radius of the campus. Going AM or FM was another project Marshall was working on, but unfortunately that dream isn't going to be a reality for the college radio station anytime in the near future. Marshall said she has investigated this and it will cost up to $250,000. For a station that operates on a shoestring budget, converting from cable radio is not an option.

Cameron School Of Business Announces New Dean

BY LISA BRINSON
Staff Writer

Early this month, the University of North Carolina Board of Governors appointed Dr. Howard Rockness as the second dean of the Cameron School of Business Administration. Ending a search that began in early 1992, Dr.

Rockness will actively assume his office on July 1, 1993.

A national search attracted more than 60 applicants.

"Among these candidates, Howard Rockness emerged as the leader who will best meet the needs of our school of business."

"He has the credentials and proven experience to help us achieve full accreditation by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of business," said UNCW Chancellor, James Leuze.

Dr. Rockness has indeed proven qualified for the demanding position. In 1984, he received the MBA Outstanding Teaching Award from Chapel Hill, and over the last 4 years was associate dean for the MBA program at the Kenan-Flagler Business School. During his time at the school, the MBA program ranked among the top in the country.

An October 1992 survey by Business Week ranked the UNC-

Chapel Hill program as the leader in the Southeast and in the top 10 nationwide. Also at Kenan-Flagler, Rockness developed a part-time "executive" MBA program which has been successful in the Research Triangle Park for the last 3 years.

Rockness, a graduate of the Univ. of Washington, has a Doctorate in Accounting, Master of Business Administration in Finance, and a Bachelor of Science in Mechanical Engineering.

Appointed simultaneously, Joanne Rockness was named to a tenure position as professor of Accounting in Cameron School of Business.

Dear UNCW Students:

It is appropriate during Resident Assistant Appreciation Week that the university community acknowledges the contributions of those individuals who offer their services to others as RAs. These people expend their time and energy so that others may be able to experience collegiate life more fully.

It is no small task for students to balance their academic work load and resident assistant positions. On occasion, these individuals stay up until dawn helping to resolve personal crises. These individuals work to maintain order within the halls so that other students may pursue their dreams.

I want to take this time during RA Appreciation Week to say thank you. Speaking on the behalf of the entire university community, I want to recognize and thank the following resident assistant staff:

Chelsea's Hair Went Everywhere

In a surprise move earlier this week, former U.S. Attorney General nominee Zoe (that's Zoe if you are Dan Quayle) Baird was tapped by Iraqi leader/schizophrenic maniac Saddam Hussein to be the Iraqi Ambassador to the U.N. Baird was quickly removed from the position after it was learned that she once hired an American to clean out her toilet. Okay, I know that was a pretty lame way to start out this week but after all, this is a free newspaper.

In other news, former Arkansas Governor William Jefferson Clinton was sworn in last week as the nation's forty second President. More money was spent on his inauguration than on the Manual Noriega trail and the Clarence Thomas Confirmation hearings combined. Being the "politically aware" NoBull Prize winning columnist that I am, I decided to watch the inauguration ceremony instead of Three's Company, which normally fills my Wednesday noon time slot. Anyhow, things were going real good right up until Clinton was to take the oath of office. Just as he reached for the Bible, a gust of wind came through and Chelsea's hair went everywhere, and the next thing I new, there was Fleetwood Mac singing Don't Stop Thinking About Tomorrow. You get the picture.

And then there were all those inaugural balls. I had considered making a joke here about all of Bill's balls, but I decided it was too crude and besides, Rush Limbo (I know that's not the correct spelling but face it, the man is out in limbo) beat me to it.

In what may be the first semi-operation of his Presidency, Clinton has reportedly devised a plan to rid the world of Saddam Hussein. Word has it that a large shipment of hamburgers from a Jack-In-The-Box restaurant in Idaho is being delivered to the Iraqi leader. How about a little E. Coli (that's Latin for "nasty bacteria") in your eye, Saddam. The White House denies the report, claiming the gift was sent compliments of former President Bush.

Switching gears now, I need to respond to a comment made by one of my dear colleagues (refer to "Definitely Dead on Arrival" by D. Neal Leeper, Arts and Entertainment Editor, Jan. 21, 1993 issue of The Seahawk). Mr. and I use the term "Mr." advisedly, Leeper wrote about the new movie Alive, in which some folks become trapped in a blizzard, or something, and have to eat each other to survive. Anyhow, to make a long story even more repulsive, he stated that he would "leave that to Phil Smith to explain someday." The nerve of A&E Editor D. Neal Leeper, insinuating that I would write about something so gross and absurd as cannibalism. Eating HO-Cake maybe, but people never. That's something I'll leave for Jim Clark to write about (refer to "How To Solve The Homeless Problem" by Jim Clark in a very old issue of The Seahawk).

You will never guess who I ran into the other day. Give up? It was my old friend and literary critic, Lisa Kellogg (refer to letter to the editor "Phil Smith Unfair to Campus Police", by Lisa Kellogg in an even older issue of The Seahawk). I needed to get into DeLoach Hall after hours the other night and she was working at Rental Cop Central at the time. Honestly, they would be up for a Hats Off award this week for helping me out, but the Rental Unit was merely doing what I pay him to do anyway, and he didn't have a good attitude about it at all. Better luck next time!

Speaking of Hats Off, this week's award goes to our troops serving in Somalia. They are serving their country's and world's interest each day, and they aren't receiving any of the glory like those in the Persian Gulf War. Besides, someone may send one of them a copy of this and increase my readership. Hats Off to the troops.

Shoes Off this week go to anyone who doesn't show up for the basketball game this Saturday at 2pm against arch rival and general wuss school, ECU. The team needs everyone's support, so be there. While I am on the topic of sports, let me go ahead and make a prediction about the Superbowl. Da Bills by at least 7, or Dallas will get Shoes Off award next week. Go Buffalo.

Well compadres, that about wraps it up for this week. Thanks for all of the letters, cards, telegrams and faxes in response to the "Ho-Cake" issue. Actually, I didn't receive anything but it's never too late. Send all letters, food and monetary gifts to Phil Smith, NoBull Prize winning columnist, care of The Seahawk.

Until next time...keep your mind out of the gutter and you head out of the toilet.

WLOZ struggles without fanfare

In the past WLOZ was not taken seriously, and rightly so. It catered only to students who listened to alternative (college) music, and deviating from the set format was looked down upon. This year, new General Manager Robyn Marshall has worked effortlessly to improve the image of the station and make it available to everyone. Ms. Marshall inherited a station in total disarray and needs to be commended for her efforts.

Now that the station, which receives student funds, is in good hands, WLOZ needs the university and student government to help in its rebuilding.

There is a communications department on this campus, but you wouldn't know it by working at WLOZ. The communications department does not advise the station managers, schedule communications majors to shifts on the air, or coordinate internships with local stations for students who are actively on the air.

Anybody can go to school and learn how to speak into a microphone, but to actually do it is another thing all together. The communications department needs to take an active role in the student media. To offer classes in broadcast journalism that requires student to watch rehearsals of 20/20 won't cut it.

Granted, the communications department is not geared entirely to broadcast communications, but it is a communications department. If the department only wants to concentrate on speech-giving, they need to consider making Toastmasters a class and giving current members credit.

One of the new features Ms. Marshall has tried to implement is broadcasts of university sporting events not currently aired elsewhere. The initial plan was to air women's basketball and baseball. The problem was there was no remote console to do it. The cost to get an adequate console is about $800. That piece of equipment would pay for itself in no time. How? Underwriting.

As the Student Government prepares and debates the budget in the next few weeks, it needs to take some things under consideration. First, WLOZ is improving, but it will require more money to do that. But in the long run it will be worth it. In time, WLOZ will require less money from SGA to operate because underwriting will provide a steady income. More good will come out of supporting WLOZ than pumping more and more money into the consignment bookstore.

Second, the student media is here to provide students with information, music, and entertainment AND give students the opportunity to learn the businesses. College is a place to learn, make mistakes, and learn from those mistakes.

And third, the student government is supposed to do what is best for the students of today and tomorrow, regardless of personal biases. WLOZ needs support. Most students are familiar with popular college radio stations at other schools; UNCW could have such a station. It will take time and money, but it will get there.

UNCW is a growing institution and has a chance to right a wrong. WLOZ is headed in the right direction and needs the support of the university and students. If the communications department is serious about providing students a basic education in communications, it needs to begin to show it.

The student government needs to understand that changes are being made and providing support for the station now will reflect positively on them in the future.

Will WLOZ be cleaned up overnight? No, but now is the time to ensure WLOZ becomes a station UNCW can be proud of.

Nobody Knows The Answers At All

What is the Answer? We all want Answers!

Who am I? Who cares about me?

What shall I do with Saturday night?

If we were to sit down and write out all that concerns us, we would come up, most likely, with a series of questions. As a matter of fact, a mental image I have of the human condition is an image of a person standing on a storm swept beach looking up and out into the void and shouting, "Why?!"

On the other side of this situation stands a lot of people and institutions that are quite ready to give us Answers: external authorities who teach and preach

"this is the way"; "here is the truth for you!"; "do what I say and you will be alright". And in a time when traditional authorities no longer seem to have a clear fix on truth or the "right way" of anything, we are often tempted to void the anxiety of life filled with questions by seeking out a person, or a group, or an institution that seems to have the Answers.

All of us dream of becoming more than we are, developing ourselves and building relationships that will fill life's journey with meaning and value. I am convinced that one component of such a becoming life is learning to live into the questions rather than seeking Answers.

Rainer Maria Rilke wrote "to be patient toward all that is unsolved in your heart. And try to love the questions themselves. Do not seek the answers that can not be given you because you would not be able to live them. And the point is to live everything. Live the questions now. Perhaps you will gradually, without noticing, live along some distant day into the answer."

While we all long for the certainty and security that comes with absolute and pat answers, while we all want to feel that God is in our corner, the reality is that we live by faith and not by certainty or even knowledge.

A friend of mine, Bob Raines, writing in his book Living the Questions, notes that we are on a quest that is characterized by questioning, searching, wondering and hoping. Such a quest is not a matter of just having questions, but living the questions we have and even loving the questions. "Somehow," he writes, "we want to live with our fears and hopes and wondering in the confidence that, trusting the process in this fashion, we shall live our way into the purpose of God and our own fulfillment."

Letter From SGA President

Dear Fellow Students,

I hope you are having an enjoyable semester and that things are going well for you. I am writing to encourage all interested students to run for office in the SGA. Beginning Feb. 4, you can sign up to run for office. To run, all you have to do is come by the SGA office, room 2000 of the University Union, and fill out a candidates form. The candidates registration periods ends on Monday, Feb. 15 at 5 PM. Serving as a Senator or Executive officer can be an incredibly rewarding experience and one I feel you would greatly enjoy.

The election will be held on March 16 & 17, with a runoff (if needed) being held on March 25. Polling places will be Randall Library, the Cafeteria, and the University Center. I encourages all students to get involved and vote in these elections.

As usual, if I can ever be of assistance please don't hesitate to contact me in the SGA office.

Best Wishes,

Joe Mitchell

Uprise in Southern Rock

Review of Col. Bruce Hampton & The Aquarium Rescue Unit

BY BRYN HILL
Music Correspondent

This review is definitely long overdue. Since the live self-titled "Col. Bruce Hampton & The Aquarium Rescue Unit" debuted in January of 1992, they have been busy hitting the small clubs and bars all over America. They visited Jacob's Run last November and finished the year in Charleston, South Carolina.

If you have never heard of Col. Bruce Hampton & The Aquarium Rescue Unit, join the club.

They say southern rock is making a comeback. If I had to group this band, this would be their label. But in all honesty, they are every style of "American" music all rolled into one, blues, gospel, country, jazz, funk, boogie, rock, etc. You name it - it is in there somewhere.

The ARU's (Aquarium Rescue Unit) music is accessible. They maintain a propulsive rhythm fueled by an intriguing Egyptian classicist. The mandolinist favors a jazz approach, through the instrument can not help by sometimes add a tinge of bluegrass. Guest keyboardist Chuck Leavell locks with guitars, hinting at the Allman Brothers. Combining the best elements of Little Feat, the Dixie Gregs and Captain Beefheart, ARU offers a deft mix of Southern rock, casual jazz, and warped blues that are somewhat tuneful, funny, and unexpectedly addictive.

Col. Bruce Hampton himself is an entertaining and endearing singer. Even if the tune is not to your liking, the lyrics will definitely keep you listening. If it is something new to you, try it, you may even get hooked.

New Television Lineups Leave Much To Be Desired

BY JONATHAN STORM
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

SANTA MONICA, Calif. - What? You didn't like the 36 new series on network TV last fall? (You sure didn't, according to the ratings.)

Well then, maybe you'll like the 24 mid-season replacements that the four networks have already begun shuffling onto the prime-time grid. Or the six old friends returning after a little rest. Or the four new major syndicated shows.

Two of that big group, NBC's "Homicide: Life on the Streets" and Fox's "Tribeca," are worth getting excited about - the best of the bewildering gaggle of 60 new network shows of the 1992-93 television season.

Clips and stars, and sometimes even whole episodes, were trotted out for critics at their winter press tour that ended Monday, and even with a scorecard, it's hard to tell the players.

Most people really shouldn't need one. Only five or six of the new shows appear to be worth a second glance. But there's no accounting for taste - CBS's "Dr. Quinn: Medicine Woman" is already a big hit and maybe everybody will want some other oddball on the following list.

This list is as complete as anything can be in the nebulous world of broadcast TV programming. There may be an addition or deletion or two, but just about all these shows should premiere by May.

Others worth a look, judging by the sometimes skimpy evidence presented so far: Fox's "Class of '96," "Key West" and as-yet-unnamed Dame Edna Everage talk show; NBC's "Crime & Punishment," ABC's "Wild Palms," and two syndicated series, "Star Trek: Deep Space Nine" and "The Untouchables."

FOX: The newest network has a strikingly solid slate of winter shows. It's one of the most consistently entertaining freshmen lineups in years.

TRIBECA. No premiere date. Produced under the auspices of Robert DeNiro, this one-hour anthology series tells stories about people in the lower Manhattan neighborhood of Tribeca. Early installments are uncompromising, with scintillating acting illuminating venturesome scripts. Such stars as Peter Boyle, Eli Wallach, Ellen Brennan and "thirtysomethings" Melanie Lynskey are scheduled to perform.

KEY WEST. Tuesdays at 9 p.m. Total lunacy is the given in this comedy/drama about a New Jersey assembly-line worker who hits the Lotto and heads to Key West, Fla. If you accept the premise, the supporting characters are delightful.

CLASS OF '96. Tuesdays at 8 p.m. "Beverly Hills, 90210" goes to college, and suddenly gets smarter, more serious and refreshingly real. We still get plenty of teen angst and hot music, but these cute kids keep their shirts on. Grow-ups and students will want to hang out with them.

DAME EDNA. No airdate. The irrepressible Australian megastar/housewife gets her own American talk show. It hasn't even got a title yet, but anything Dame Edna touches turns to laughs.

FOX also has "Parker Lewis Can't Lose" and "Rachel Gunn, R.N." waiting in Hattusland for a chance to return to the schedule.

NBC will offer a couple of rich, and original, police dramas in the coming weeks. It also will have an airbed family comedy that seems to have taken one idea from every other family comedy ever made. Two other shows could show up in spring, or be held until as late as the fall.

HOMICIDE: LIFE ON THE STREETS. Premieres next Sunday after the Super Bowl, airs Wednesdays at 9 p.m. after that. Barry Levinson's "Rain Man" directs an adaptation of David Simon's book about Baltimore police officers that is visually daring and emotionally satisfying. Not since "Hill Street Blues" have TV cops been this intriguing. They're played by such veterans as Ned Beatty and Yaphet Kotto.

CRIME & PUNISHMENT. No airdate. From the producer of "Law & Order," this show goes where "Law & Order" never goes, into the personal lives of its detective team, a single mother with a teen-age daughter and a suave single guy with girlfriend who's a medical intern. Aided by an unseen interrogator, viewers see the crime from planning to execution and then follow the cops as they try to solve it.

ALMOST HOME. Saturdays at 8 p.m., starting Feb. 6. You could call this "Almost the Torkelsons." The misbegotten family of that failed series moves from Bootlick, Okla., to Seattle, where Millicent Torkelson becomes nanny to rich Perry King's two teen-age kids. The urban kids contrast with the rural kids. The rich kids contrast with the poor kids. Millicent and Perry make goo-goo eyes. And everybody dissolves in gales of warm family laughter. Right.

ROUTE 66. No airdate. A lot of the highway has disappeared, but that's not stopping NBC from reviving the classic '60s buddies-on-the-road series that starred Martin Milner and George Maharis. Brooding James Wilder ("Equal Justice") inherits an old Corvette from the father he never knew - But Murdock - and 20 minutes later teams up with wisecracking hitchhiker Dan Cortese, the grating guy from the Burger King commercials.

SMOLDERING LUST. No airdate. Starring peachy Kate Capshaw, John Calvin, Alison Elliott and Bradley Whitford, this is complicated, off-the-wall private-eye satire.

CBS: CBS has eight shows in line for winter and spring. None of them seem that great at first blush, but first impressions can be deceiving. And remember, this is the network that scored a home run with "Dr. Quinn."

DUDLEY. No airdate. Into the life of a prominent pianist and man about town (Dudley Moore) comes his ex-wife and a 14-year-old son who is growing up all wrong. Can the gifted comic actor save this plot?

GOOD ADVICE. No airdate. Shelley Long and Treat Williams in a comedy about a marriage counselor (Long) whose own marriage isn't exactly a bed of roses.

DR. QUINN: MEDICINE WOMAN. Saturdays at 8 p.m. CBS has lured the crowds back to Saturday night with this western melodrama about a lady doctor trying to raise three orphans in a little house on the prairie. Or maybe it's the plains. But it sure seems like the prairie.

SPACE RANGERS. Wednesdays at 8 p.m. On some far-off space frontier, futuristic cops go through the motions. Linda Hunt is stuck in this clunker.

WALKER, TEXAS RANGER. It's quite a jump from space to Texas, but CBS, the Ranger network, will give it a try. Karate guy Chuck Norris plays a modern Texas ranger who does things the old-fashioned way, while his rookie sidekick, a refugee from the streets of Philadelphia and from the Dallas Cowboys, prefers them new-fangled crime-fightin' methods.

JOHNNY BAGO. No airdate. Johnny Tenui, a neighborhood guy, takes it on the lam in a Winnipeg after he's framed for the murder of a big crime boss. Can he evade the mob boys seeking vengeance? Can he evade his parole officer? Can he change the oil in the bag?

HOWDY THEY DO THAT? No airdate. Ever wonder how detectives figure out who blew up Pan Am Flight 103? Or how Billy Ray Cyrus became so famous? (That is a very good question.) Or how uncouth sportscaster Pat O'Brien got a job as host of this program? "Howdy They Do That?" another hamboe reality show, answers two out of three.

NEWSMAGAZINE WITH CONNIE CHUNG. No airdate and no title yet. Apparently off the baby-making case, Connie Chung is waiting in the wings for CBS to develop a weekly newsmagazine show for her. Let's see, will it be the 403d or 404th weekly newsmagazine on the networks?

From last summer, "Raven" and "Bodies of Evidence" are also standing by for return engagements.

ABC: ABC sends the 404th - or is it the 405th? - newsmagazine into the field, along with three more mindless sitcoms and a short-run series that fits right into network boss Bob Iger's wish list of "programs that make noise."

WILD PALMS. No airdate. Executive-produced by Oliver Stone ("JFK," "Born on the Fourth of July") and created by Bruce Wagner ("Scenes From the Class Struggle in Beverly Hills"), this six-episode series set about 20 years in the future may be even weirder than "Twin Peaks." Is that good or bad?

DAY ONE. Sundays at 7 p.m. No premiere date. "Younger in feel and overall look" than "60 Minutes," according to Iger, this newsmagazine will go head-to-head with the granddaddy of these newsmagazines. Good luck, Bob. WHERE I LIVE. No airdate. "The Cosby Show" meets "Growing Pains," as a teen-ager hangs in his Harlem 'hood, drawing wonderful influences from his warm two-parent, one-sister family. Pub-leeze.

GETTING BY. No airdate. A black single mom ("Family Matters" Tisha Hopkins), with two happening young sons, and a white single mom ("Laverne & Shirley" Cindy Williams), with two cute young daughters, move in together. Even one of the executive producers mentioned a debt to "Kate & Allie." Pub-leeze, pub-leeze.

HOME FREE. No airdate. You want another family sitcom? Too bad, you're getting it. This one has a mother, her grown son and daughter and the daughter's two children all living under the same roof. Pub-leeze, pub-leeze, pub-leeze. Where's James Brown when you really need him?

SIRENS. No airdate. Three beautiful rookie policewomen battle crooks, sexist colleagues and all the other little problems that life throws at beautiful young women. The network strongly denies that this show is based on "H.I.P.S.," that fictitious hot-babe police show in the Energizer battery commercials.

With a little brush-up, ABC has already reintroduced "Mallock" and "Jack's Place" Thursdays at 8 and 9 p.m. respectively.

SYNDICATED: First-run prime-time syndication is a growing phenomenon these days on independent stations. Four new action shows will have unfolded by next month.

THE UNTOUCHABLES. A lush remake of the original Chicago cops-and-robbers that emphasizes the morality-play qualities of the old tales.

STAR TREK: DEEP SPACE NINE. This one goes where no "Star Trek" has ever gone before, into actual character development and conflict.

KUNG FU: THE LEGEND CONTINUES. Grasshopper returns, kicking and screaming - always reluctantly and with ultimate insight, of course. David Carradine reprises his role as the Shaolin priest who finds himself this time in a modern city with his long-lost son - a policeman, natch.

TIME TRAX. The time machine is stuck on 1993, so all the futuristic bad guys and the one handsome futuristic cop wind up in mind-numbing battles in the present day - just like all these new TV programs.

Don't Get Hexed!

BY CLIFFORD TERRY
Chicago Tribune

"Hexed," a comedy/crime story that focuses on the misadventures of a highly imaginative, manipulative hotel desk clerk, begins reasonably well enough, but eventually checks out 45 minutes early.

Fimsy and innocuous but loaded with a jarring supply of four-letter words, the movie marks the feature debut for writer-director Alan Spencer, who a few seasons back created the farcical ABC sitcom "Sledge Hammer!" which starred David Rasche as a ditty cop.

As such, the film contains the same elements: an intermingling of one-liners, sight gags and full-press parody.

There is a late-night TV gag, a hotel-room art gag, a Methodist gag, a Richard Nixon gag and far too many gags about police brutality.

Twelve years on the payroll at the Holiday Palace Hotel in some unnamed city - it was filmed in downtown Ft. Worth - glib, bored Matthew Welsh (Arye Gross) has to put up with an acerbic manager (awarded Norman Fell), a foul-mouthed scumbag of an assistant manager (Michael Knight) and a vindictive guest (Ray Baker).

Looking for excitement in his life, Gross fabricates a story that he will be involved with his dream object, leggy international model Hexina (Claudia Christian). When the checks into the hotel, through some devious conniving, he finds himself in bed with her - and also finds himself on the wrong end of a kitchen knife.

Subsequently, he discovers she has mistaken him for a blackmailer. He also discovers she is a homicidal lunacy with a spooky background, and that he himself has become an accessory to murder.

The two leads are appealing enough - Gross ("A Midnight Clear") with his Dustin Hoffman looks and mannerisms, Christian with a surprising comic flair - as the film fires away in the purposely tasteless style of "Police Academy" and "Naked Gun."

Before long, though, the cleverness turns to plain silliness with Spencer carrying a big stick, and it winds up playing like some kind of Leslie Nielsen joke.

MPAA rating: R. Strong language, sexual situations, nudity. 1 star.

ODE TO GILLIGAN'S ISLE
Sung to the tune of the theme from Gilligans Island.

U.S.S.

Just all right back and you'll hear a tale, a tale of a TV show—that was poorly written and kinda dumb, but we all loved it so.

The Howells had a lotta cash, but what did they need it for?—And why did Ginger bring her whole wardrobe on a three-hour tour...? A THREE-HOUR TOUR!

If the professor could make a raft with a stick and some coconuts—then why didn't he just build a boat to save their ship-wrecked butts?

And Gilligan would thwart their plans in almost every last scene—they should have killed and eaten him; they could have used the protein.

Now the show's in syndication, and has been for a while...

with Gilligan; the Howells too; the Skipper and his stomach; the token babe; the professor and Maryanne—Hey don't you touch that CHAMBERMAID!

Student Tickets Sold Out

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

If you don't have a student ticket for Saturday's men's basketball game versus arch-rival East Carolina University at Trask Coliseum, you are pretty much out of luck.

According to Assistant Athletic Director Greg Dalton, there are two ways current UNCW students can still get tickets. First, the ticket office, located in Nixon Annex, is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday and tickets cost $6.

Secondly, any student who wants to wait until game time to see if there are any tickets left can, but there is no guarantee any remaining tickets.

"We normally put aside 1,500 student tickets, but have raised that to 1,600," Mr. Dalton said. "We ran out of student tickets at 2 p.m. on Wednesday."

There were about 800 tickets remaining for the ECU contest.

The game, which is to be televised on the cable network Home Team Sports, will begin at 2 p.m.

Advanced tickets for the University of Richmond game (Feb. 6) will be available Tuesday from 3-7 p.m. and Wednesday from 7 a.m. to noon. Tickets for the James Madison University game (Feb. 8) will be available Thursday from 3-7 p.m. and Friday from 7 a.m.-noon.

If you don't have ECU tickets...

...this may be the only action you see Saturday

Scales are not the Enemy!!

Scales are not the enemy...you are!! Many people on this campus hop on the scales everyday to see if they have lost or gained any weight since the previous "weigh in" the day before. These people are ecstatic if they have lost a pound and devastated if they have gained an ounce!

Wake up scale-a-holics! If you stop weighing yourself, follow a healthy diet and get regular exercise, you will find that your weight does not zoom up. Some dieting tips for those who are trying to watch their weight are:

1. Involve yourself in activities you enjoy that don't include or revolve around food (the less you think about food, the less hungry you will be).
2. Try not to eat while watching television.
3. Take at least twenty minutes to eat a meal and sit down at a table to eat and chew slowly to maximize the enjoyment of food.

Most importantly, give yourself a break! No one is perfect. So what if you gain a pound or two, does that make you any less of a worthwhile human being? Work towards loving your body whether heavier or thinner. Remember, self worth is not measured by self weight.

Dressing for Outdoor Activities in Winter

Don't let the winter temperatures keep you from participating in outdoor recreation activities. Dress for the occasion. Keeping warm and dry is a basic skill that all outdoor enthusiasts can easily master. The key is controlling body heat loss through using a layer system.

In temperatures ranging from the upper 20s into the 50s utilizing three upper body layers and two lower body layers should be sufficient. Why are layers more efficient for controlling heat loss than just wearing heavy clothing? Layers create dead air spaces which lessen radiative heat loss. Dressing in layers allows a person to use less bulky clothing that may restrict body movement. If you are dressing in layers it is much easier to make adjustments due to heat generated through physical activity and temperature changes that may occur through out the day. In the course of a days activity a person may go from wearing all layers in the morning to adjusting to only one layer by mid-day. It is very common to mix layers by wearing one bottom layer and two or three top layers. This is done to suit individual comfort levels.

If you are going to utilize a layer system it is important to pay attention to the types of fabrics that make up your clothing. Wool and synthetic fibers like pile, synthella, or polypro are most efficient. These materials retain a high percentage of their warming properties when they become wet due to rain or perspiration. When items made of cotton become damp they will trap moisture. While this is good when in warm weather, aiding in cooling the body through evaporation, it does nothing to minimize heat loss.

If you are going to be out in the cold it is important to remember that the major areas for heat loss are the head, the neck, and the hands and feet, so keep them covered. Don't let the Dogs of Winter bite, layer up!

Additional Tips for Staying Warm:
-Hydration is crucial to heat production. Drink 5-6 qts. per day.
-If you are shivering you're too cold. Shivering is your bodies reaction to the onset of hypothermia.
-Watch out for others in the cold. "Hey Sue, did you know you are shivering, put on your hat."
-It is easier to stay warm than it is to warm up.

THE Gutter

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

Hi, there sports fans, it is time for another installment of the UNCW gutter as according to Wayne. Some people would call it a virtual cornucopia, plethoric, bevy in assurance of seamless coincidences, or you could simply call it what I call it, "The Gutter."

Sorry to report, there has not been any Pulitzer nomination letters flooding into the Seahawk office, and this pseudojournalist is beginning to wonder if this reality will ever materialize. I have been informed that not many campus Sports Editors have received this dubious distinction. But alas, so ever scorned by my peers, this rebel will go forth to present to you this week, The Gutter's guide to winning the Super-Bowl.

Most of my friends at this point will be thinking all you need is a National Football Conference team and there you have it a guaranteed victory or your money back. I will concede the blaring fact that the NFC is on a 9-1 winning streak. But I have isolated key areas that have been central to every team AFC or NFC victory.

The essence of the game is captured in the trenches where the offensive and defensive linemen wage their carnage filled battle until half-time. Half-time is when they get to take a break to think, and then it is suddenly back to the field of glory.

Why do I select this as one of my essential areas of Super Bowl success? I found the team that has the most undaunted, apocalyptic group of demons straight from Hell, which have been strapped into some pads and helmet and instructed to rip apart anything that moves that is not wearing the same color shirt as himself, wins. So this year I have to regret that I will have to give the advantage in this area to the Dallas Cows.

Another area that must be won on the field (in my favorite area) is trash talking. Nothing gets you fired into the game more than finding out about your spouse or mother's sexual history from the opposition. The good part about this is that sometimes your wife or spouse receives compliments, which is not to be misconstrued with the insult constructive criticism would be in this situation.

This is a crucial psychological area of the game that only good teams master, super teams have great difficulty talking trash while getting drubbed 56-10 in a Super-Bowl.

In the area of trash talking I would have to give the slight edge to the Dallas Ribeye's.

Half-time adjustments are also very instrumental to a teams success in the "dance." Comfort is the key, athletic supporters (and the crowd) get very uncomfortable during all that cutting, running, tussling, and other dismembering collisions that occur during the course of the first thirty minutes of the game. I give the edge in adjustments to the undisciplined Dallas USDA #1 choice T-bone's.

The last and probably most vital Gutter factor is the team that has the quiet players that cannot spell yo-yo by the sixth try is most likely the team that will come out ahead in the great gaudy gridiron match of champions.

It was close in this category, it almost was a tie, but Bruce Smith from the Bills spelled yo-yo correctly on his fifth try, leaving Dallas the edge in yet another category to Super-Bowl greatness.

I was looking to point things out on the wilderness for NBC that they preferred to go with Pee Wee Herman in special guest coach analysis for the Bowl.

So, if you are looking for my can not fail, go ahead and place your bet because the Gutter factor does not lie in optimism, I am saying that as indicated in the "Gutter" Buffalo should win this years Super-Bowl because they have three years prior experience in dealing with the Gutter factor. Enjoy the game.

American Dodges Balanced Seahawk Attack

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

UNCW's women's basketball team lost a close one to American University in a Colonial Athletic Association Conference clash in Trask Coliseum, 79-76.

It was a game of spurts for both teams as American ran out to a 10-4 run to start the game.

Amber Blank hit a short jumper in the lane at 14:51 in the first half that started the Seahawks on a 8-2 run that lasted for 2:31 to take the lead for UNCW at 14-12.

The Seahawks maintained the lead in the first half for the next ten minutes. Blank's shot from the outside gave UNCW its biggest lead they would have all night of 6 points.

With 2:05 left in the first half Gail Wilkins pops a three to pull American back within 3 points of UNCW.

American again closed the gap after Blank's third personal foul came while Wilkins was attempting a three pointer. Wilkins made two of the three free throws which dropped the UNCW lead back to three again, 32-35.

American took the lead from the Seahawks with a jumper from Beth Dorfmeister with 19 seconds left in the half 36-35.

Hannah Grady had the opportunity to tie the contest before the half on the line shooting a one and one, but missed the first shot and closed the half with UNCW trailing by one 35-36.

At the half UNCW was lead by a Tiffany Stacey, Grady and Blank each having 8 points. UNCW was shooting 10-35=29% in field goals and 15-20=75% from the line.

American at the half was lead by Tiffany Turner and Wilkins, each with 9 points. The Eagles shot 14-33=42% from the field and 7-10=72% from the line.

UNCW continued to trail American with 9:06 left in the game when Blank hit a three to recapture the lead from the Eagles. The Eagles had lead by as much as nine through the mid point of the second half. Blank's shot capped a 17-5 run which allowed the Seahawks to gain a three point advantage 58-55.

American nibbled at the Seahawk lead until the 4:46 when Wilkins hit from the top of the key tying the game at 65.

2 minutes later Blank hit a three to tie the game at 69 with 2:09 seconds left in the game. This was answered by Wilkins' three on the next Eagles possession setting the score 72-69 American.

UNCW's Stacey scores off an offensive rebound to bring the Seahawks within three of the Eagles with 1:22 remaining.

Wilkins again hits a three pointer to increase the Eagle lead to four, 71-75.

UNCW down by six points with :44 seconds left committed two fouls and American scored 4 points from the line. Stacey scores again for the Seahawks off an offensive rebound to again come within six points, 79-73.

After American missed the first shot of the one and one, Blank was fouled while attempting a three. Blank hit all three foul shots to bring UNCW back within three with 3 seconds left, 79-76.

American's attack was lead by Wilkins with 32 points.

UNCW's leading scorer was Blank with 21 points. Stacey's (14), Myra Horton (10), Martin (10), and Grady (10) distributed a balanced attack that just fell short of the elusive CAA victory.

The Lady Seahawks played the first of a two game home stand to face George Mason. George Mason 10-3 overall and 1-1 in the conference would test a youthful Seahawk team that is 4-9 overall and 0-2 in conference play. The Seahawks fell 78-61 to the George Mason Patriots.

In the first half, the Seahawks went 8-29=28, and was lead by Pat Martin with 6 and Zandra Harris with 5 points 13 first half turnovers marred the Seahawk performance and contributed to the 10 point half time lead for George Mason at 35-25.

George Mason in the first half was lead by Keri Chaconas and Marcell Harrison each with nine points. The Patriots shot 13-36= 36%, and 7 steals in the first half.

UNCW next awaits their Sunday home match up with American.

NFC Dallas AFC Buffalo

Wayne Williams

Jim Clark

As a diehard AFC fan, I have to say that I am going with The Bills in this one. I know that they are suffering from Denver Bronco Syndrome, but I think they will prevail.

The Cowboys will try to unleash the potent running game, but will be shut down by the Bills' linebackers. I think Darryl Talley will be named MVP.

Of course, I've been wrong the past eight years, but I say...

Buffalo 24-31

Chris Powell

The "Cowgirls" really did surprise me this season. They certainly proved that women can play in the NFL. However, the time has come for the men to take over, this means that Buffalo will conquer.

Last year Buffalo knew that they did not have a chance against my beloved Redskins, but the Redskins felt that it was time to let someone else win, so here is Buffalo's golden opportunity.

Jim Kelly and Thurman Thomas, will lead a massive offensive attack on over rated "Cowgirl" defense. Bennett and Big Bruce will put a tremendous amount of pressure on Aikman, and a lot of pain towards Emmitt.

Buffalo 28-14

P.S. If Dallas wins, I will finally admit in a nice and polite section of the Gutter, that Dallas is the best team in the NFL!

Buffalo 21-17

Students Without Tickets Surprised

BY HOLLY PRICE
News Editor

With the Seahawks on a conference winning streak, the demand to see them in action has gotten competitive.

Many students were surprised last Saturday to find that if they wanted a ticket to the game against East Carolina University, they had to pay $6. Usually students get into all basketball games free with a student identification card. Students had to pay if they didn't have a ticket because all student tickets had been given out earlier in the week through the Athletic Department's advanced ticket system.

"We had several phone calls from upset students, but all they had to do was just get them ahead of time," said Greg Dalton, assistant athletic director for business.

1600 tickets were set aside last week for students.

"This is enough seats for all of the bleachers and more," said Mr. Dalton.

They became available on Tuesday at 3 p.m. and were sold until 7 p.m. On Wednesday they were sold from 7 a.m. till noon. At that time all student tickets were gone.

"This is usually the case when we play ECU or any really big game," said Mr. Dalton.

The advanced ticket system has been used since 1986. The Athletic Department staff makes the decision before each game whether they think it is necessary to give out advanced tickets.

"We weigh many things, like how big the crowd has been in the past at a particular game," said Mr. Dalton.

Mr. Dalton said that students are lucky to get tickets.

"At big schools, kids camp out to get tickets. Here we usually have enough for everybody," he said.

As of last night, some students at Duke had been camped out for 25 days. This was in hopes of getting tickets to their game last night against the University of North Carolina. The village of tents has come to be known as Kryzysville.

There are 950 tickets remaining for UNCW's game against James Madison University on Monday. Students can get them in Trask Coliseum from 3-7 p.m. They will be available tomorrow from 7 a.m. until noon.

Tickets go out today for the game against James Madison University on Monday. Students can get them in Trask Coliseum from 3-7 p.m. They will be available tomorrow from 7 a.m. until noon.

Opinions range from "outraged" to overblown UNCW still talking about gay-bashing attack in town

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

Wilmington's nightlife was interrupted Friday night with the alleged attack of a homosexual by three Camp Lejeune Marines.

Crae Pridgen, a Wilmington resident, was attempting to leave Mickey Ratz, a dance club on Front Street, when he was allegedly beaten by lance corporals Colin C. Hunt, 20, Patric G. Gardose, 23, and Walter G. Watkins, 26.

Pridgen suffered a fractured skull, a black eye, had two teeth knocked out, and numerous bruises.

The Marines reportedly shouted, "Clinton must pay" and "All you faggots must die" during the attack.

The shouts were in reference to President Bill Clinton's plan to end the ban on homosexuals from serving in the armed forces.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation was called to investigate, but it ruled that the incident was not a violation of civil rights and, therefore, not a federal offense.

FBI Special Agent Chuck Richards told USA Today the incident is not considered a hate crime because "the 1964 Civil Rights Act says nothing about homosexuals. It's strictly sex, race, religion.... This was a barroom fight."

The Marines were each charged with four counts of assault, and have been released on $400 bond.

A trial date in New Hanover County Court has been set for March 8, 1993.

Captain Cathy Close of the Camp Lejeune public affairs office said it isn't known if there will be a military trial, but the three Marines, if found guilty, could receive anything from a reprimand to a discharge.

Student reaction on campus ranged from outrage to "the incident was blown out of proportion."

Jill Hollows: "(The attack) speaks more about a larger problem in the military than gays. The case could set a precedent for hate crimes to include assaults based on sexual preference."

Ginger Murray: "Although it isn't a hate crime, it should be considered one."

Doc Dee Wallace: "They should be kicked out of the Marines. It's not good for someone who represents the country to express his views that way."

Some students felt more was being made of the incident than needed.

Brian Pasternak: "Can't do much about a bunch of drunk guys.... Cruel incident, the Marines took it too far."

Andy Kraft: "It's not a hate crime and should be tried as assault. It just happened to be gays and Marines. When a barroom brawl gets national attention, it is blown out of proportion."

Lee Person: "This was not a civil rights violation. Three drunk Marines messed up and they will be punished."

Although no similar incidents have been reported on campus recently, the Student Handbook and Code of Student Life clearly states the university's stand on the issue.

On page 20, the "Statement on Diversity in the University Community" states: "...the University supports policies, curricula and co-curricular activities that encourage understanding of and appreciation for all members of its community and will not tolerate any harassment of or disrespect for persons because of age, sex, color, race, creed, national origin, sexual orientation...."

And one of the offenses listed in the handbook that can result in disciplinary action being taken against a student is if the student "discriminates against another student by using offensive speech or behavior of a biased or prejudiced nature related to one's personal characteristics, such as race, color, national origin, sex, religion, handicap, age, or sexual orientation."

If a similar incident occurred on campus, it would not be "outraged."

"Certainly, the university would investigate," said Assistant Dean of Students Bob Smith. "The individual responsible would face disciplinary charges. The outcome would be significant. It would probably be grounds for suspension."

"Physical violence is a serious violation, one that will not be condoned or tolerated."

Dean of Student Pat Leonard said that if any student is harassed, intimidated, or becomes the victim of assault, "we hope the individual would come forward."

Smith added, "Call anytime of the day or night."

Patrolman Callboxes Placed On Campus

BY CHRIS SLATER
University Police

The University Police recently installed a new communications system on campus.

"The Talking Patrolman Callbox" is a two-way communications system that allows staff, students, and visitors of the university to communicate directly with University Police when requesting help or information.

The "Talking Patrolman" operates as an extension of the police department's current radio communications system. The callbox remote units are equipped with a unique identification system which allows users to call for help even if the caller is unable to speak. The system is operational 24 hours a day.

Fifteen callboxes have been strategically placed on campus.

Some of these locations are: residential areas, parking lots, academic areas, and athletic facilities.

We chose these locations because of their high traffic.

The callboxes are red in color and have a blue light atop the pole on which they are mounted.

These callboxes will help in improving safety on campus, communication, and response time to emergency requests. The callboxes will also help provide informational assistance and more flexible communication during special events.

The University Police Department is constantly striving to provide the community with the best possible services. We believe the "Talking Patrolman" will be a tremendous asset to the university community.

Groups Urge Spring Break Boycott Of Colorado Slopes

BY JOHN WILLIAMS
College Press Service

Although a controversial anti-gay rights measure in Colorado is in legal limbo, gay and lesbian rights groups are urging people, including vacationing college students, to stay away from the Rocky Mountain state.

Amendment 2, approved as a referendum in November's general election, has caused a ruckus with human rights groups and well-known personalities who are pushing a boycott against Colorado until the measure is repealed.

Actress/singer Barbra Streisand caused a flap before Christmas by urging fellow Hollywood movers and shakers not to Aspen in order to show disapproval of the measure.

However, ski resorts across the state are saying that business is booming this year with record amounts of snow—and tourists—in the state. And officials with Colorado for Family Values, the group that supported the measure, said they are confident that the measure will be upheld by the court system.

Amendment 2, which was to have gone into effect Jan. 15, would have barred any laws that protect gays and lesbians from discrimination. It voided such laws in Denver, Aspen and Boulder. Residents in those cities voted against the measure, but voters in Denver's suburbs, Colorado Springs and most rural areas overwhelmingly supported it.

A district court judge in Denver blocked Colorado from enforcing the measure until he can hear arguments on whether the law violates federal or state law. Until there is a final decision, however, boycott supporters are urging people to stay away from Colorado.

"If students are going to be here, there's a lot they can do to support our community. It's important for people to make a choice that's comfortable for them," said Kai Morgan, director of the Gay and Lesbian Community Center of Colorado, which is based in Denver. "If they come, I hope they come with the consciousness that they are coming to the only state that supports this."

It is estimated that Colorado coffers have lost millions of dollars in canceled conventions, conferences and other events because of the boycott. Several city commissions nationwide, including Atlanta and Los Angeles, have voted not to allow employees to attend professional meetings in the state.

The National Association of College Stores, a trade organization that represents college and university bookstores nationwide, has scheduled its annual meeting in Denver in April.

Because of contracts and other financial commitments, the association decided to go ahead with its meeting in Colorado. However, NACS directors sent a strongly worded letter to Denver Mayor Wellington Webb. "In our opinion, this is a step backward in the cause of freedom and equality for all, and a step toward prejudice which already plagues this country," the letter states.

Executive director Garie Distenhorst and Elizabeth Goulding, director of meetings and expositions, said in the letter that until the amendment is finally overturned, NACS will not bring any more meetings to Colorado.

It is hard to gauge whether college students are supportive of the boycott, and whether they'll go to

SGA Will Hold Spring Elections

BY CAROLE MEHLE
Staff Writer

Elections for the Student Government Association are scheduled for March 16-17.

Registration for open positions begins today and will run through February 15.

The open positions are: Student Body President, Student Government Vice President, Student Services Coordinator, Attorney General, Class Officers, and Rep-representatives-at-large.

Registration forms are available in the SGA office, University Union room 200.

Monday night, the SGA Senate voted to accept some changes in the way the Election Board is run.

One of the main changes included the $150 spending limit for the campaigns. It has been lifted.

To get students involved in this year's election, SGA is launching a major publicity campaign.

Public Information Officer, Jeff Holeman said that there has been a flyer placed in every student's on-campus mailbox about the elections.

Election Board Chairman, Mary Taylor and Holeman are working on posters and signs as well as a letter to the professors and student organizations.

"We're trying to draw a crowd, and stress the importance of the elections. We're trying to get as many student organizations involved as possible as well as some area businesses," Taylor said.

One of the problems that Taylor faced when she took the job, was the handling of last year's Spring elections.

The result of the race for Student Body President was contested.

Joe Mitchell, the winner, was disqualified for alleged infractions of the Election Board rules. Mitchell appealed the disqualification and was later named Student Body President after a hearing before the Election Board and an appeal hearing before the Senate.

"Nobody wants to see what happened last year," Taylor said.

A Few Of Phil's Favorite Things

Rat Urine, Vulcanism, and Toilet Paper

Pasadena, California-- In a wild turn of events, last week's Superbowl XXVII began in disgust. It seems that just as Buffalo scored the very first touchdown of the game, a band of rowdy fans sent rolls of toilet paper streaming onto the field. Buffalo was immediately assessed a technical foul and had to spot Dallas roughly 52 points. In a related story, the same band of rowdy fans threw toilet paper on the court in Trask Coliseum just as Sheriff "The Sand Man" El-Saadly scored the opening bucket in Saturday's basketball game against ECU. Now the question you must be asking yourself is "Why is Phil harping about toilet paper when there are many other items of interest (i.e. Ho-Cake, Rental Cops) to write about?" Answer: IT'S A FREE NEWSPAPER!!

I guess the real item this week is correcting the misprint from the last issue. It was incorrectly stated that I predicted the Bills to win by at least seven. What it should have said was "Dallas by at least seven touchdowns." I'll be sure and have a word with The Seahawk typist so that this doesn't happen again. You just can't find a good, white, American, male, heterosexual typist these days. Of course, the highlight of the Superbowl was the half-time show with Michael Jackson. I think he finally went ahead of Madonna in the ongoing contest to see who can "grab themselves" the most. All during the show I kept waiting for an episode of deja vu, in which Michael's hair would light up all over again.

In other news, Semi-Coherent reader Daniel Williams alerted me to an interesting article in the local Sunday Star-Views of Jan. 31, 1993. The article, entitled "Rat Urine Shows Scientists What Earth Was Once Like" was even more disgusting to me than that "Magic Pottery Baby" commercial I reported on earlier. Researchers at the Univ. of Nevada are studying crystallized rat urine (some of it 40,000 years old) to study--and this is No Bull--how the Earth's magnetic fields have changed over time. Just think, in forty thousand years or so, the headlines may read "Toilet Scrappings of NoBull Prize Winning Columnist Shed New Light on The 1990s." You get the picture.

In my never ending pursuit of journalistic excellence, I decided to attend the recent presentation by Noel Grove, assistant editor and writer for National Geographic Magazine. His speech, entitled "Earth in Crisis" was about how we have screwed up the world we live in. (Perhaps he has been studying ancient rat droppings, too.) He said that the founders of National Geographic did so because there were "enough muckraking journals in the world."

I guess they've heard of me.

He spoke extensively about his travels to the Philippines, Hawaii, Mt. Kilimanjaro and Mt. Saint Helens. He kept talking about "Vulcanism," but I couldn't figure out what those places had to do with Mt. Spock. I paid particular attention when he spoke of "participatory journalism." I guess that means I'll have to be a Campus Cop for a day sometime. Of course it would take much longer than a day to build up that gut. I'll think about it.

Anyhow, I enjoyed going to hear the speaker, and was impressed with what he had to say about conservation, recycling, and Elvis. The problem came when I ran in to him at McDonald's later that day. He was wearing lizard skin boots and a "Rush Limbaugh For President" tee-shirt. He was smoking an unfettered cigarette and he must have eaten three gross-laden Big Mac's. He then threw his Styrofoam container on the ground before climbing into his 1977 Cadillac El Dorado (with no muffler) and driving off in front of a cloud of carbon dioxide. Okay, I made some of this up, but that's my business.

Hats Off this week go to the Dallas Cowboy's Cheerleaders. They may not be coming to UNCW, but they look just fine on national television. I still don't like the football team, but Hats Off to the girls.

Shoes Off this week goes to the ECU fans that reportedly slipped into the Seahawk stands and threw the toilet paper, causing the technical. In dishonor of these alleged hoodlums, I present for reading enjoyment my Top Five Reasons to Throw Toilet Paper at a Basketball Game.

#5. Celebrating the end of a five week long bout with diarrhea.

#4. Wanted to see if Scotties really does have twice as many sheets as the "leading brand."

#3. Wanted to give aspiring columnists/Pre-Med. student something to write about.

#2. Mistook Trask Coliseum usher for Mr. Whipple, and you didn't want to be seen squeezing the Charming.

#1. You are a repulsive ECU student disgruntled because you didn't get into UNCW.

Well, that about wraps things up for this week. I will continue to follow that rat urine story and keep you all informed. Your comments, letters, cards, chocolate, and monetary gifts are always welcome. Send them to NoBull Prize winning columnist Phil Smith, in care of The Seahawk.

Until next time...keep your mind out of the gutter and your head out of the toilet.

Phil Smith is a NoBull Prize winning columnist with The Seahawk, and he uses White Cloud toilet paper.

"Hate crimes" can't be tolerated

The attack over the weekend was a vivid reminder that there is too much hatred in the world, including in our neck of the coast. True, the Marines accused in the assault are stationed 45 minutes from here. True, some reports said they had been drinking. True, they don't represent a large segment of the population. All of that doesn't matter. What matters is the event occurred, and it happened in Wilmington. When the rest of the country thinks about Wilmington is going to be effected by this incident. The fact the Marines drove here to get in trouble will not matter. If you ask most people around the country where the Marines involved are stationed, most will say Wilmington.

Tuesday night on the Tonight Show, Jay Leno and Branford Marcellis alluded to the incident. Marcellis, who wore a bikini on Monday's show because of a Super Bowl bet, had knee surgery Tuesday and was on the set with his bandage in plain view. Leno asked him what happened and he said that after the Monday show he went to a bar and three Marines walked in....

Assistant Dean of Students Bob Smith made an interesting point Wednesday. To paraphrase, he said nobody can legislate what anyone thinks, but we can punish those who act out those thoughts against others.

Should be the hope of every person that this incident was not an attack on an American citizen by an American soldier because of the citizens actual preference. If it was, the Marine Corps should dishonorably discharge the individuals.

Legally, the incident was a simple case of assault, but it could be, as UNCW student Jill Hollows pointed out, a landmark case in civil rights. If pursued, this case could lead to adding sexual preference to sex, race, and religion to the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

Let's hope the courts and government do the right thing with this case. The incident should not be trivialized or dramatized. It is a real incident. The people need to let their representatives in Raleigh and Washington, D.C. know their opinion on the matter.

Talkshow host Larry King hypothesized that if, a couple of years ago, the homosexual community in America united and said they would not serve in the armed forces, the reaction of most people wanting to keep homosexuals out of the military now would be to criticize the homosexuals for not wanting to defend the country that tolerates their behavior.

Something to think about. Is it the Marines' duty to defend their lifestyle or the Constitution? Something else to think about.

How many remember the beginning of the movie Heartbreak Ridge? Didn't Thomas Highway (Clint Eastwood) beat up another prisoner because the prisoner didn't like Marines? Discrimination against Marines. (Of course, this could be another example of how a Marine used his fists to settle an argument, dispute, difference of opinion, etc.)

Don't throw anything on the court, part II

Seahawk fans played a big roll in Saturday's men's basketball win over East Carolina. After UNCW scored its first basket, a few fans threw toilet paper onto the court. The referees decided no warning should be given and issued a technical foul.

ECU made one of the free throws, and cut the score to 2-1. Significant? Not really.

In the grand scheme of things, the point shouldn't matter, but it does. Coach Eastman's team cannot defend against technical free throws. ECU stormed back from a 17-point deficit to send the game to overtime. UNCW won in double-overtime 77-72.

If you want to help the basketball team win, don't throw anything on the court. Coach Eastman said that he wants the crowd to be at its loudest when the team is at its worse.

Think of the crowd noise at N. C. State's Reynolds Coliseum this year. Some ACCers think the crowd is louder this year than in a long time because the fans want to let the players know they care and are there.

We can do the same here. If you want to show your support for the Seahawks, do it with signs, chants, songs, and dances, etc. Just keep it off the court.

Correction: In last week's editorial, The Seahawk wrote the Student Government Association should support WLOZ and stop "pumping more and more money into the consignment bookstore."

The consignment bookstore has been self-reliant since the initial funding from SGA.

Letter From SGA President

An Opportunity For Hope Flourishes Once Again

Once again hope is wrestling with my cynicism about the possibilities for a good and just future of our United States. I am firmly convinced that President Clinton has a clear view of the issues that need to be addressed in our country, and a genuine commitment to deal with those issues. My cynicism about the political process and the forces that control the actions of Congress remains, but I still have hope that we have reached such a level of critical consciousness about the seriousness of our plight in terms of the national debt, national health care and environmental degradation that we the people must convince those who represent us that we will tolerate an evenly spread cost that must be incurred to address these issues.

You may think me naive. I'd rather think that I am hopeful. Erich Fromm, in his book The Revolution of Hope, says, "Hope is paradoxical. It is neither passive waiting nor is it unrealistic forcing of circumstances that cannot occur. It is like the crouched tiger, that will jump only when the moment for jumping has come.... To hope means to be ready at every moment for that which is not yet born, and yet not become desperate if there is no birth in our lifetime.... Those whose hope is weak settle down for comfort or for violence; those whose hope is strong see and cherish all signs of new life, and are ready at every moment to help the birth of that which is ready to be born."

There are a lot of grounds for despair or hopelessness around us. It is easy to make a list of the incredible problems facing our world, our nation, our families and ourselves. People who live in hope do not deny the reality of these issues. That is what I like about Fromm's definition of hope. Hope-filled people are realistic but we insist on cherishing "all signs of new life and are ready every moment to help the birth of that which is ready to be born."

In a further comment Fromm says, "Hope is a psychic commitment to life and growth." People who live in hope are always alert and looking for new possibilities, and this is not some simplistic optimism either. Real hope is grounded in the historical awareness that when persons and peoples have been faced with serious problems, there have always emerged persons of vision and hope who have enabled change and positive growth.

I am not at sure what President Clinton will be able to accomplish in fact. What I am grateful for, beyond political change, is the end of twelve years of a political mood that seems to find the status quo inevitable, unchangeable and immovable. President Clinton has, at least, provided an opportunity for hope to flourish once again.

One form of hopelessness lies in reclaiming the insight that none of the issues that any of us face, personally or corporately, are unsolvable. President Clinton correctly speaks of hard choices, not mysterious forces beyond our control. The issues lie not in what we do, but what are we willing to do. And that is a hopeful climate.

In our university life, it is time for us again to shift our focus from limited budgets and limited hiring possibilities to reclaiming once again the reality that higher education remains a citadel for the nurturance of hope.

This university is alive with possibilities for life. Here we explore ourselves and our world, our present and our future, our wants and the world's needs. Here we still have the freedom to make incredibly significant choices whether as faculty or staff or students. Here is where realistic visions can and should be created and explored and adopted by those who are in process of making vocational choices. Every issue that the world faces provides an invitation for personal commitment to positive change by the way we choose to live our personal and professional lives. And there is almost no other place in our society where such hopeful state of possibility exists.

"Hope is psychic commitment to life and growth." As we watch President Clinton's every move to discover how he will live out his promises that nurture political hope, let us not overlook the challenge of nurturing hope that is offered to us by the surroundings of this institution of higher education which is designed to encourage maximizing the possibilities of our life and growth.

stance on homosexuality. It only reveals these men's destructive prejudices and ignorance.

I am disturbed by the incident and the immediate attention by the national media who will turn such an event into a three-ring circus.

I question the motives of these men. Did they do it out of pure hatred toward homosexuals or did they do it for the sake of mass publicity?

It amazes me that a person could carry out such a barbaric act. Punishment is deserved to all (students).

Poet Nikki Giovanni to speak Black Conference Focuses on Students

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

The UNCW Black Student Leadership Network will host the first North Carolina African-American Student Leadership Conference (NCAASLC) this Friday through Sunday in the University Center Ballroom.

The conference's purpose is to help African-American students develop and strengthen leadership skills and to address problems they do or will face as leaders, citizens and students.

The conference will feature workshops, an opportunity to talk with professionals about their fields, and a banquet featuring keynote speaker poet Nikki Giovanni.

Conference Chairperson and program assistant for the Leadership Center Ruby Brown says there are about 125 people expected for the conference, including 50 from UNCW.

Some of the workshop topics include: "Life on a White Majority Campus"; "How to be a Visionary Leader"; and "Self-Empowerment Through Self-Knowledge: Leadership Basics for African-Americans."

These and other workshops are designed to help African-American students deal appropriately with problems that may arise during their college careers.

The career session will feature Chief District Court Judge Jacqueline Gordon, who presides over the fifth judicial district of North Carolina, which consists of New Hanover and Pender counties, and Dr. Eugene E. Wright, Jr., a member of the Board of Trustees and a medical doctor practicing in Fayetteville, N.C.

This career session will allow students to talk with professionals about their fields and careers.

Brown said, "This conference is an excellent opportunity for students to get a lot of information about careers and to network with students from other schools."

The cost for the conference is $10 for UNCW students, $25 for UNCW faculty and staff. The cost for just the banquet for UNCW faculty and staff is $15.

Tickets can be purchased through noon today in the Leadership Center, University Union room 212.

Financial Aid Could Be Taxable

BY AMY BRENNAN
Staff Writer

Students who receive financial aid may have to pay come April 15.

Many people do not realize that scholarships and fellowship grants may be taxable. For students in degree programs, only money that is used to pay for tuition and fees, books, and supplies is tax-free. Any money that is used for other expenses such as a room and board or travel is taxable. Money that is issued as payment for services such as teaching, or money issued for research that is a requirement of the scholarship is also taxable.

For example, if a student receives $1200 in scholarships, that money may break down like this: $750 for tuition and fees, and $150 for books and supplies. In this scenario, $300 is left unaccounted for. This money must be added to any other taxable income on line one of a standard 1042EZ form. Other taxable incomes includes any wages and tips earned from jobs. Based on the 1992 tax table for single persons with taxable income of less than $50,000 the tax would be $182. If a student is not a degree candidate, the full amount of the scholarship or grant is taxable.

Students who are not fortunate enough to be accounting majors, or those whose parents handle these situations, may have many questions concerning their taxes. A good way to receive answers to questions is to consult the IRS Federal Tele-Tax Information System. In North Carolina call 1-800-829-1040. The system offers an automated list of topics to choose from. On the other hand, the UNCW Financial Aid Office may not be a particularly helpful source. The Financial Aid Office will encourage students to seek other sources for help with questions. It seems they "don't want to give tax advice," about questions such as which form to use, etc.

Although financial aid may sound like a burden at tax time, in reality it's not. The amount of money that can be saved is well worth the trouble. The real trouble with financial aid is that its availability to students is not well known. Many scholarships and grants go unclaimed every year because students either don't know about them or assume they don't qualify. This is where the Financial Aid Office can be of assistance. To apply for financial aid fill out a College Scholarship Service Financial Aid Form. Information about the different services is available in "Your Guide to Financial Aid", which is available in the Financial Aid Office.

Students seeking university scholarships are evaluated on the basis of financial need and academic achievement. These scholarships are highly competitive. Students need to apply for scholarships and other financial aid for the fall semester by March 15.

Colorado

Colorado for spring break. However, Stuart Himmelfarb, vice president of The Roper CollegeTrack, a New York-based marketing organization, said that students may honor the boycott.

His group did a campus survey in 1992 of 1,200 full-time undergraduates on 100 campuses nationwide. The survey consisted of a list of 15 issues or problems that might affect campus life, and about 66 percent of the respondents said they believed intolerance against the homosexual community was a problem on campus.

"If you want to draw a conclusion about this boycott," Himmelfarb said, "I wouldn't be surprised if they found other places to go skiing. They can pick a lot of places to go to. It's not like they own a home in the area or something."

Amendment 2 was sponsored by Colorado for Family Values, a self-described non-partisan grassroots organization based in Colorado Springs. Spokesman Will Perkins said the group got 85,000 registered voters to sign a petition to get the amendment on the ballot. "Throughout the nation homosexuals do have equal rights. We're all for that," he said. "They want to be considered a protected class, and Coloradans don't think that's fair. The laws are all in place for all U.S. citizens. We're not equating morality or immorality with this issue."

Perkins said he would encourage college students to come to Colorado to ski on their spring break. He said that in the short term, the boycott will hurt the state, but in the long term, more people will want to visit Colorado.

"It is clearly a method to inflict financial punishment on the whole state, even on the people who are our opposition," he said. "But boycotts are a double-edged sword. It's blackmail. It's a warning to other states considering the same ballot that his will happen. But, because of the boycott, several ballots will have the same issues in 1994."

Perkins, who owns a Chrysler dealership, said his business has been boycotted. However, business is a usual because people who support his cause are buying Chryslers from his dealership.

He said there has not been an increase of hate crimes against gays and lesbians in Colorado since the measure passed.

However, Morgan, with the Gay and Lesbian Community Center of Colorado, said that the center is receiving many more calls from gays and lesbians reporting verbal or physical abuse. While some people are now willing to report hate crimes, there appears to be an increase of new crimes reported, she said.

"When a law like Amendment 2 is passed, it sends a message to people that it's OK to bash, that we're not human," Morgan said.

The center, which receives crime reports statewide, was averaging 12 calls a month until November, when the measure was passed. In December, the center got 35 reports of intimidation or violence against gays and lesbians, and in November there were 45 reports. The violence ranged from harassment to aggravated assault.

Morgan said that if college and university students do come to Colorado for spring break, "I would tell them to be careful, but I would tell them to be careful anywhere."

There has been controversy among people who support gay and lesbian rights concerning the boycott. While a boycott sends out a powerful message, especially for a popular tourist state such as Colorado, it also hurts individuals and businesses that are supportive of gays and lesbians.

The Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Community Alliance at the University of Colorado at Boulder is divided in its support of the boycott, said Elissa Whitlow, a against the amendment.

"Support for the boycott varies from the area to area. There's Boulder and Denver and the metro area, which are supportive in general of the gay community, plus most of the ski areas," Whitlow said. "Then, you have Colorado Springs, the eastern and western slope areas and other homes to homophobia."

Although the alliance doesn't have an official stand on the boycott, Whitlow said she reluctantly favors one. "Lots of people don't give a damn and come ski in Aspen," she said. "We're going to be hurt by this thing no matter what. You can't hate without repercussions. The only way we can get attention is through their pocketbooks, unfortunately."

John Nichols, with the University of Denver Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Alliance, said he also has mixed feelings about the boycott. "Arguments both ways are strong, but I feel that people who are impacted the most are the angriest. What I felt with the personal anger is knowing that a majority of people were willing to vote for a legalized form of discrimination," he said. "People need to have a way to focus on the anger, and boycotting is one way of

Summer Theater Opportunities Available

BY D. NEAL LEEPER
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Some of the nation's most exciting summer theater employment opportunities exist far from the major population centers. They are with the country's outdoor historical dramas.

From Journey to the Pacific in Seaside, Oregon to The Lost Colony on Roanoke Island, North Carolina, these original plays, based on actual events and performed where the events took place, now number more than 90 nationwide. Each summer, some 4,500 actors, singers, dancers and technicians, most of whom are college or university students, find jobs in outdoor drama.

If you are interested in an outdoor drama job, you might want to travel to The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill on Saturday, March 20, 1993. On this date, eleven outdoor historical dramas from five states will be auditioning college and university student performers and technicians for summer jobs. The auditions, sponsored by the Institute of Outdoor Drama, are open to anyone at least 18 years of age with previous theater training or experience.

Outdoor historical drama is rich in opportunities, for performer and technician alike, to hone special skills. Stunt and combat professionals train and rehearse actors whose safety depends on intense concentration, meticulous blocking, and rigorous rehearsal. Pyrotechnicians, artificers trained to handle period weaponry and explosives, horseback riders and wranglers, flight directors, historians and speech consultants are among those contributing special expertise to productions. The design, installation and maintenance of sophisticated equipment for sound, voice reinforcement, special effects and lighting all require skilled staff and state-of-the-art technology.

Competing for the attention of the audience with tree frogs, heat lightning, and that bane of outdoor theater, the sudden summer storm, are all part of a night's work! The outdoor setting also poses a unique set of technical problems for which imaginative, creative solutions must be found.

Employment for students in an outdoor drama requires a 9-12 week commitment, including two weeks of rehearsal and 8-10 weeks of performances. Companies may offer additional productions, experimental theater and workshops, children's theater productions and college credit programs. Some of the major companies offer subsidized or paid housing, or will assist in locating housing for company members.

Actors present a one-minute prepared monologue, and may be asked to perform another at callback interviews. Singers prepare one song, with a one-minute time limit. Dancers are let through warm-up, assorted combinations, and across-the-floor routines using ballet, modern, and folk choreography. Technicians are interviewed in the afternoon.

Final deadline for receipt of applications is Monday, March 15, 1993. To request application materials, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to:

White Zombie is a psycho-death, creeping flesh, post-apocalyptic cyberpunk horror vision of hell. Band members Ivan de Prume, Rob Zombie, J. and Sean Yseult (pictured above) will bring their entertaining yet frightening, smart yet theatrical, show to The Mad Monk on Saturday, February 6th, 1993.

Jean-Claude Van Damme Back Again!

BY STEVE ASHLEY
Movie Correspondent

Van Damme puts on one of his best performances yet in this moving drama about a typical modern corporation trying to buy out a western homeowner's land in order to increase their profits. This week's review is of Nowhere To Run.

The movie begins with Sam, played by Jean Claude Van Damme, escaping from prison during a routine transfer in which the Canadian Federal Prison System transport bus wrecks and the inmates flee from the scene.

The wreck, however, was planned and Sam escapes with a little assistance from his ex-partner. You soon learn that Sam took the "rap" for his friend several years earlier for a murder. So, in other words, Sam should not have been in jail. He was innocent. While fleeing the scene, Sam's partner is shot by one of the guards. After driving several hours, Sam discovers that he has a box full of money and a car. So, what would one do? Yes, go camping.

Sam flees the scene and makes his way south. He winds up setting up residence on the property of Clyde, played by, a gorgeous blonde with a nice figure and two ratty kids. Sam is discovered the next morning bathing in the pond by the Clyde's son, Mookie, played by, Keiran Culkin. (Yes, just what we need: another Culkin kid in the movies!)

It seems that the land owners are interested in developing the wild wilderness of northern California in order to build condominiums. Clyde, on the other hand, loves the land she resides on and wants to keep it. Besides, her husband, who died of an aneurysm, bought it, so she prefers to farm and live there.

"Freedom of Choice" Gets Rave Review

BY TODD ALLRED
Arts and Entertainment Music Correspondent

When I first saw the Freedom of Choice compact disc with its irresistible subtitle Yesterday's New Wave Hits as Performed by Today's Stars, I immediately felt obligated to fork over the required thirteen bucks and take it home then and there. After all, I had grown up listening to all those early-eighties "one-hit wonders," and to have those "classics" covered by groups such as Mudhoney, The Connells, and Sonic Youth, well, let's just say I was pretty darn excited. As I popped in the disc, I noticed some of the track listings. Mudhoney doing Elvis Costello? Superchunk covering Devo? Somehow, all this didn't seem to make sense, and for a moment, I worried that the results might be disastrous.

Then along came thunderous, distorted guitar noise blasting through my speakers, accompanied by Thurston Moore's lovable monotonous howling for a Sonic Youth rendition of Plastic Bertrand's Ca Plane Pour Moi. Cool. I breathed a sigh of relief, kicked back on my sofa, and listened to The Muffs' noisy version of Rock and Roll Girl, Redd Kross' grungy-bass cover of Wishing by A Flock of Seagulls.

I began to get restless when Mudhoney began smashing through Elvis Costello's Pump It Up and started to wish I were in a small, dark, smoky club slamming around in a smelly pit with a hundred other people. Instead, I was on my couch, so I had no choice but to crank it up, much to my neighbor's dismay.

There are a few no-frills tracks, like Das Damos' cover of The Pretender's The Wait. Why didn't they pick Back on the Chain Gang instead? White Flag's punk-rock shredding of Kate Bush's Wuthering Heights gets tiresome and redundant quickly, and Hypnoticwheeler's AnyMusic shows why only Adam Ant should sing Adam Ant songs.

There is also humor, most notably in Chia Pet's tongue-in-cheek rendition of The Human League classic Don't You Want Me Baby? An awful, grating lead violin accompanies sarcastic vocals as Chia Pet sounds like they are having the time of their lives. It is probably the funniest cover I have ever heard.

What is most notable on this compilation, however, is the inclusion of five North Carolina bands. While it is sometimes hard not to be biased, these bands really shine over most of the others. Raleigh's Erectus Monotone stays faithful with their cover of Missing Person's Destination Unknown. I found after repeated listens that this was the one to grow on me the most. Fender really rips through the Soft Cell hit Tainted Love. The basic tune remains, but Fender's killer guitars and split-your-cardrums vocals make it a real treat. Polvo's version of Wall of Voodoo's Mexican Radio sounds very loud, drunken, and distorted, as if it were recorded in a garage. The Connells make I Got You, originally by Split Enz, sound as if it were their own song. Superchunk wins the award of having the noisiest song on the compilation, a cover of Devo's Girl U Want.

There's no real terrible songs on this disc, except for the ones that are meant to be terrible, like Chia Pet. I would recommend it to anyone who likes catchy, loud noise, and to everyone who remembers and misses those timeless "one-hit wonders" of days gone by. There are some real treats to be found here, so I urge you all not to miss out!

Rating: A- (Nothing's Perfect!)

"Narratives" Soon To Be On Display In Center

FROM UNCW NEWS

WILMINGTON -- "Narratives," a sculpture exhibit by Kent Latimer, will be on display in the UNCW University Center Lobby from February 8 to April 2, 1993. An opening reception will be held from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m., Monday, February 8, 1993. The public is invited to attend.

Latimer, of the "Latimer House" family fame, received a Bachelor's degree in Fine Arts from the University of North Carolina at Asheville in 1991. He currently lives in Asheville and does his work at the university's studio.

"Narratives" is a collection of sculptures Latimer made out of pieces of metal he collects. "My primary objective in presenting a body of work is to encourage the imagination of all viewers," Latimer said. "The ability to employ imagination is one of the greatest parts of our humanity."

Latimer was the winner of last year's UNC Asheville's Art Department Award. He has had two solo exhibitions at the Owen Gallery at UNCA, and was awarded an Olvigiv Foundation Scholarship in 1991.

The University Center is open from 7 a.m. to 11 p.m. Monday through Friday and noon to 11 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

Run

Needless to say, the developers do not like her position on the matter. These lovely "power players" hire a hit squad of thugs to terrorize poor Clyde and her children. Sam just happens to come across the family at the beginning of the attacks. After several physical harassment incidents by the mining corporation, Sam becomes caught up in helping Clyde and her children keep their land. Mookie becomes particularly attached to Sam because of his loss of a father at age four. Van Damme suddenly becomes the heroic father figure and vows to help the family save their land.

The hit men, hired from the mining company, continue to attempt to force Sam and Clyde off the property by force. But, it does not happen. The newly developed "family" would not budge. The mining company executives finally become fed up with Sam helping Clyde to resist their efforts to evict the family. This massive conflict leads to one final showdown.

Meanwhile, the state police find out the background on Sam and discover he is wanted by the Canadian Police. As it turns out, the entire police force, or so it seems, traps him near a lake out in the country. But, miraculously, he eludes them all on a restored Triumph motorcycle that belonged to Clyde's husband.

Sam realizes he can not run forever, so he goes back to the farm to assist Clyde with beating off the henchmen from the mining company. After a series of action pack scenes of violence, including some Home Alone stunts by Mookie (these Cullin kids are all the same), the bad guys are defeated. In a dramatic climax, Sam is arrested by the police and had to explain to Mookie why he has to go away to jail.

Nowhere to Run is a good film for those of you who enjoy Van Damme movies and want to see him attempt to act.

Nowhere to Run can be seen at College Road Cinemas (an United Artist Theater) located at 632 South College Road.

- 11) I always push myself to exercise even if I am tired or don't feel like it.
- 12) My interest in work and other areas of life has diminished since I have been exercising.

Add up your score and check with the categories: 12-36: Your approach to exercise is positive. You enjoy a regular exercise regimen, but you are listening to your body when it needs time off. 37-60: While you are still reaping the health benefits of exercise, your enthusiasm may have reached the stage of obsession where other commitments in life are less important. You are not taking any time off, and you will eventually suffer physical injury as well as mental staleness. You need to reassess your priorities and listen to your body.

Canoe Kayaking

One of the fastest growing paddle sports in the country is kayak touring. Wilmington and the surrounding coastal areas offer those interested in the sport some of the best paddling on the east coast. By kayak one can tour the intercoastal waterway, explore Masonboro Island, and venture into tidal creeks. Kayaks only need about six inches of water to be maneuverable. This enables a paddler to go where most boats fear to tread, giving one a close up look at waterways that wind through barrier islands and marsh areas. This is often like working your way through a maze. The more experienced paddler can get a real wild water thrill by paddling through the surf, adding a whole new dimension to the sports of paddling and surfing.

Kayaks come in a variety of designs. Typically the boats used for touring are longer and offer storage for overnight and extended trips. Kayaks used in coastal areas are referred to as sea kayaks and may come equipped with a rudder to make paddling in current, wind, and over long distances easier. Sea Kayaks may be designed so the paddler sits in a cockpit built into the hull of the boat, or so the paddler sits on the deck of the boat. Both varieties may be designed for single or tandem paddlers.

The Discover Outdoor Program and the UNCW Department of Water Safety are working together to provide opportunities for the UNCW community to learn more about kayaking and to safely experience this outdoor recreational sport. The first step in promoting kayaking took place this past weekend. Fifteen participants took place in a kayak clinic that was held in the Trask pool. Due to the interest level of the participants this may become a regular occurrence, be watching for details. On April 24 & 25 the Discover Program will be taking a trip to Charleston SC where we will be doing a sea kayak tour with Charleston County Parks and Recreation. If you would like more information about kayaking opportunities stop by the Discover Outdoor Center.

THE Gutter

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

Last weekend in sports there was a lot to learn and place into our resources bank, we call a brain, so that we might teach this lesson to others before they teach it to us. What I am talking about is the two different lessons we can derive from the Seahawks and the Cowboys. The question I am asking, is being favored in a contest the kiss of death or is it the edge or boost that lets a team keep their edge?

Last Saturday, the ECU Pirates came to Trask, obvious underdogs. The first half looked like another sure fire home win for the Seahawks, but as Howard Cosell would say, "Right there in a flash, a flurry of intercurricular ballistic jumpers were dropped through the hoop... almost all... once."

In our back-yard, our house the Pirates of ECU launched a sneak attack in the second half.

Back to Cosell, "They out-bounced, out-fought the UN-CW Seahawks and in a flash, clawed back from a sixteen point Seahawks buffer," to take the Seahawks to overtime. Although the Seahawks won the game, (Cosell) "It was not the cake walk that fans expected in playing a 1-4 team."

I (Wayne) am not saying that the game was not exciting, in fact it was quite thrilling.

For the Seahawks, it is going to be important to keep the emotional level up for a team that we could pound into the court, while we are pounding them into the court. I know this is difficult, because I have been on some teams that were the victims of malicious drubbings, and have seen it happen. The sad part is that a win is just a win, the same as a loss is just a loss. If we had beaten ECU by sixty points, there would not be an exclamation point placed beside the win in the stat book. So maybe I am just wasting time here, remembering how a team stuck it to us in our home this half, so I will move on.

Reggie Veney's, no fear, net burning, three pointer showed that the team has the guts to run opportunities down the other teams throat and hopefully choking them.

Also, I am not questioning the teams hunger to play hard, I have witnessed this, but I looked at a very talented, very deep Seahawk team and wondered why we were not finding the weapons to put away a team that was out gunned, out muscled and craving a win against the "surprise" Seahawks.

The second lesson came the next day at the biggest professional championship game of them all, the Super-Bowl. For those of you who missed it because of the social issues college has placed you in, the NFL claimed to place the best teams of each conference (AFC-NFC) and pit these two in a winner take all, one game shot for the right to say that they are the best of the best.

Here again the team that was favored to win was up at half (Dallas), and after the longest half time show in the history of mankind exploded, they were reminded that Buffalo was going to come out and play harder, to attempt to catch up from the halftime deficit.

Dallas came out and played like the soon-to-be-champions they were, they increased their intensity, they remained focused and beat the chips out of Buffalo.

Buffalo, like ECU gave their best shot at pulling an upset off. Dallas expected, manipulated and dominated the best Buffalo had to offer.

UNCW, as Dallas demonstrated, must continue to take charge of the game and put the other team away.

Boners understood that scoring eight counts is sometimes not enough to win the match. When the other fighter is stunned, he must reach down and find the strength, the energy, and the weapons to finish every dominating any hope of a come back.

Veney vidi vici-ECU

They Came, They Saw and Were Conquered

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS

UNCW remained perfect at home this season, with their double overtime win against state rival East Carolina 77-72.

Sheriff El-Sanadly buried a turn around jumper in the paint, which ended up being a three point play for the Pirates. A technical foul was charged to UNCW for the tossing of toilet paper on the court after the Seahawks hit a three point.

The technical and the following ECU possession netted 3 points and gave ECU its first lead of the night, 3-2.

UNCW put together two back-to-back nine point runs. The first started with 15:30 left in the half, with another turn around jumper in the paint from El-Sanadly. After an ECU miss, Reggie Veney hit a three from the top of the key. ECU's Curley Young answered the Seahawks by hitting a jumper of his own. Sanadly hit two free throws for UNCW, and Chris Jones gets a bucket off a goal tending call, resulting from a Pirate turn-over. The Seahawks were up 14-8.

The second run was a quick outside air attack for UNCW. Keith Adkins and Veney hit three pointers, John Spann scored off a drive to the bucket, got the foul and hit the free throw, as UNCW added nine more to the scoreboard leading the Pirates 29-13.

The half ended with UNCW leading ECU 43-26. The Pirates shot 9 of 26 from the field, 5 of 9 from the free throw line, and 3 of 5 of their three point shots. Led by Young with 6 points, the Pirates trailed UNCW by 16 at half.

UNCW led by Veney with 10 points shot 15-26 from the field and 10 of 16 from the free throw line, while hitting 3 of 7 seven from beyond the three point line.

The Pirates started the second half just like the first, with a three point play. James Lewis was fouled by El-Sanadly while shooting, the shot fell, and so did the free throw.

Defensively, East Carolina started the half with a 2-3 zone that gave UNCW problems at the end of the first half. This zone would be the nightmare for the Seahawks, who were only able to squeeze 18 points off this zone for the second half.

The Seahawks would be out-scored by the Pirates 32-18. ECU in possession of the ball, and needing a three to tie the game, received three attempts from the generous UNCW defense. Kareem Richardson heaved a leaning three point attempt, while being nudged by a Seahawk defender, that found its way straight through the bottom of the nets, sending this contest into overtime.

"I generally feel that the team that makes the shot, that sends the game into overtime must win the first overtime. Because if there is a second overtime the other team usually regains momentum and control in the second overtime period," said Coach Eastman after the game.

Each team led in the first overtime, but ended the five minute period tied at 65.

The second overtime looked as if the Eastman philosophy would be proven wrong when the Pirates Ronnell Peterson nailed a three. But the Seahawks sucked up the fatigue and applied aggressive defense to the Pirates. The spark that started the Seahawks toward victory was the offensive foul charge against the Pirates. Darren Moore, after being fouled, tied the game from the line at 68.

Reggie Veney shattered the hopes of a possible upset, when he drained a three from the top of the key putting UNCW ahead for good. The Seahawks closed the game 77-72.

"The last two games, from a fans perspective, have been just spectacular. Old Dominion, and this game are a player's game. The ball is out there and they have to find a way to win. I found myself wondering how these guys found the strength to run up and down the court," said Eastman after the game.

"Our fans are great, they provide a lift to our team, but I wish they would cheer the loudest when our team is at their worst. We draw our own energy off a dunk, or what have you. If the crowd could do this they probably would be the best in the country."

The Seahawks play Richmond Saturday at 7:30 and continue the home stand Monday with James Madison at 7:30.

Lady Seahawks battle GMU

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

Still searching for their first Colonial Athletic Association victory, the Lady Seahawks traveled to William and Mary seeking to end a four game skid in the CAA. The Seahawks would again be denied of this victory by losing to the Tribe 79-61.

UNCW jumped out of the gate early in the first half, after they won the tip off. Myra Horton scores and Kim Bush made two free throws to give UNCW their biggest lead of the night of 4 points.

Unfortunately, this was to be the only lead for UNCW this night. The first half UNCW managed to get as close as 3 points to the Tribe after losing their 4-0 lead, but fell behind by 11 with 5:25 left in the half.

In second half action, UNCW was never able to bounce back from the 6 point half-time deficit. UNCW trailed by as many as 22 points in the second half. This mark came with 2:20 seconds left in the game.

Again UNCW started to dip into the lead of the Tribe, coming within points with 11 seconds left in the game.

UNCW high scorer was freshman forward Tiffany Johnson with 13 points. UNCW went 21 of 58 for 36% from the field and shot 16 of 20 for 80% from the free throw line.

William and Mary shooting 31 of 66 for 47% was led by guard Yolanda Sentes with 26 points. The Tribe hit 62.5% from the free throw line in the half making 5 of 8.

The Lady Seahawks will be home at Trask this weekend when they play UNC Saturday and on Monday take on East Carolina.

The Seahawks continued their constant improvement under new Head Coach Jim Sprecher. Senior Amy Jackson placed first in the 5000, which was the first victory by a UNCW athlete at the prestigious event, and also smashed the school record by nearly 13 seconds with a time of 17:20.86.

Both Sam Bobbitt and Tim Cox bettered the school record of 8:27.60 running 8:24.19 and 8:24.32 respectively placing 4th and 5th in the 3000.

Other UNCW records were set by Nicole Delaine in the 400 (58.56), Jill Peoples (2:23.15) and Heather Fenton (2:23.44) in the 800.

Schweitzer International Prizes To Be Handed Out

BY JOHN BRYAN
Staff Writer

UNCW has the distinction every 4 years to host the presentation of the Albert Schweitzer International Prizes. Winners of the 1993 prizes were announced in December. They were Father Dominique Catta, Robert Muller, and Sir John Wilson. Much will be written about them in coming weeks. For now, many people may want to know more about Albert Schweitzer. Who was he? Why do we have the Albert Schweitzer International Prizes?

Albert Schweitzer was a philosopher, physician, musician, clergyman, missionary and writer. He was a humanitarian. To say that he was a success in all of these fields is an understatement—he was brilliant, and even someone considered a successful person might count any one of these accomplishments as a whole life's work.

Albert Schweitzer was born at Kayserburg, Alsace on Jan. 24, 1875. The eldest son of a Lutheran pastor, he was educated in both France and Germany. Eventually, in 1913, he earned doctorates from the University of Strasbourg in philosophy, theology, music and medicine. It was in 1912 when he married Helene Bresslau. A year after their marriage, they went to the west coast of Africa at Lambaré, Gabon (then a French province) where over the years they established a hospital. Work on the hospital was interrupted by World War I when he and his wife were sent to France as prisoners of war, as Gabon was French controlled, and the Schweitzers were German.

Albert Schweitzer was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1952, and with the money that he received from the prize, he established the leper colony at the hospital in Lambaré.

Prior to his work in Africa, Schweitzer had already won an international reputation as a writer of theology. He also was known internationally as an organizer. He was an authority on organ construction and as an interpreter of the works of Johann Sebastian Bach. He was also an authority on Bach's life.

Albert Schweitzer's writings are numerous. They include: J.S. Bach, The Philosophy of Civilization (two volumes entitled The Decay and Restoration of Civilization and Civilization and Ethics), Out of My Life and Thought, The Quest of The

Albert Schweitzer
Historical Jesus, The Mystery of the Kingdom of God, and The Mysticism of Paul the Apostle.

Albert Schweitzer visited the United States only once. He traveled to America in 1949 to speak at the Goethe Bicentennial Convocation in Aspen, Colorado.

Schweitzer was also considered the world's foremost authority on the greatest German author Goethe.

Albert Schweitzer kept on working for mankind all the way up until his death in 1965. He was

Registration For SGA Positions Ends Feb. 15

BY ED MOSELEY
Staff Writer

Student Government Association will hold spring elections March 16 and 17.

All students are eligible to vote in the elections, and actively run for one of the 24 open positions.

Election Board Chairperson Mary Taylor said, we have a "major publicity campaign to get as many students involved as possible. We want all to know they are able to participate."

Last year's spring election had right about ten percent "voter turnout," Taylor said. "That is higher than Chapel Hill's six percent."

The Election Board Committee made two changes in election rules. Taylor said she hopes the first will increase turnout.

"We felt that we were restricting the candidates too much, she said, "so we lifted the spending limit on campaigning."

The decision also lifts the limits on campaign contributions.

The second change, Taylor said,

Upcoming SGA Elections on March 16-17. Vote in Wagoner Hall, Library and U. Center.

will increase fairness in the application process. Students who apply for a position and are deemed ineligible may now apply for another position.

SGA holds elections twice a year. The fall elections are for four freshman class officers and seven fall representatives at large. Representatives at large may be any member of the student body.

In the spring semester a larger group is elected: 12 class officers, eight representatives at large, an attorney general, student service coordinators, student government vice-president and student body president.

Spring elections will also determine who will appoint the final nine members of SGA.

The 44 members of SGA are jointly responsible for allocation of more than $250,000. This money is drawn from student fees and is placed with student clubs and organizations.

Student government also represents the student body's concerns to the administration and faculty.

Although, as Joe Mitchell, student body president, said, "office is a good way, but not the only way to get involved with student government."

Students may vote, attend SGA meetings, be committee appointees, receive legal services or any of the other services that SGA provides with student fees.

Another route to participation is student government is activity in clubs and organizations.

"There are members of clubs or students who approach senators to let them know they are hoping for funding," Mitchell said. "It is the executives role and the senators duty to listen to these requests. It is all part of the process."

To register as a candidate one may fill out a student nomination form. These forms are part of a campaign packet produced by the Election Board Committee. They can be picked up in the SGA office, office 200 University Union.

The registration period was originally publicized as Feb. 4-15. The nomination form, however, states the deadline for registration as Feb. 17.

EBC said applicants should turn their nomination forms in according to the date on their nomination form.

The 18th will be a mandatory meeting for all candidates.

The purpose of the meeting is "to go over the campaign rules in depth," Taylor said, "make sure there is no confusion... alleviate any problems... and give the candidates an opportunity to meet each other."

Choose To Be Active In SGA

BY ED MOSELEY
Staff Writer

The 1992 Presidential election roused many Americans out of their participating doldrums.

As a nation we were politically active. The question is: Will the same be true on our campus during spring election?

Student Body President Joe Mitchell said students attending college now "have lot of potential" due to the "diversity in our generation. We are more conscious of rare relations and international issues.

Indeed, Mitchell appropriated $2500 of his discretionary executive budget to support the African-American Student Leadership Conference held at UNCW last weekend.

Three of the 44 members of SGA are African-American.

Roger Hyman, was freshman class president last year, and is currently sophomore class president.

Tonya Whitehead and Hyman both participated in the NC Association of Student Governments. Whitehead is also a sophomore class senator.

Pam Ward is the secretary of the Budget and Planning Committee.

"Those three have been very active," Mitchell said. And while Mitchell did not influence the rise of international students on campus, he has presided over a record 90 foreign students.

"Equality between men and women will have an impact on our lives," Mitchell said, "More women are rising now, and both parents have professional careers and still have children. I think you can manage that."

Featured comedians are James Stephens III, the star of Fox's "The Edge," Gonzo Raymond, and Randy Kagan, the star of MTV's "Big Picture". At 3:30 p.m. UNCW takes on William and Mary in a televised game. The 1993 Homecoming King and Queen will be crowned at half-time.

The evening ends with a dance featuring Captain Cook and the Coconutz with their tribute to Jimmy Buffet. The dance is from 9 p.m. to 2 a.m. in Wagoner Hall. Tickets are $5 in advance for students and are available at the UU information center. There will be hors d'oeuvres, door prizes and a cash bar.

This year's Homecoming court consists of eight women and eight men who were nominated by a campus organization in which they are active. Once they have been nominated they are placed on a ballot. Students can vote on Feb. 10-12.

The court consists of: Amanda Adams, Heather Butler, Cara Chickanosky, Alison Chambers, Kim Dewey, Heather Petroff, Julie Podlasek, Kelli Shafer, Marc Bernstein, A.P. Blake, Newell Clark, James Harkey, Duane "Ziggy" Nix, Tanner Postma, Matt Sebeck, and Brad Whitlow.

In order to be on the court students must meet certain requirements. They must be a junior or senior. According to Alison Chambers, the Homecoming Chairperson, they must have at least a 2.0 grade point average, and be of good standing in their organization.

Once a King and Queen are crowned, they will also have to meet certain requirements. They must agree to represent UNCW in certain functions throughout the coming year. They must also agree to return the following year to turn over their crowns to the new heirs to the throne. Last year's Queen, Stephanie Ames, will step down from her throne on Saturday, and present her crown to the newly elected royalty.

Bookstore Gets a Facelift

BY JULIE PODLASEK
Staff Writer

In case you were wondering what lies within those trailers that decorate the parking lot next to the Burney Student Support Center, it is what is left of UNCW's bookstore.

The old bookstore is currently going through renovations to make it larger, nicer-looking, better equipped, and more updated.

Since the first bookstore opened up in Hinton James in 1961, which was at the time the Student Union, the store has gone through many changes and improvements.

After that, it moved to what was known as the Butler Building, which is where the flower beds now lie outside of Burney Student Development Center. From there it was moved to its current location, and now, for a brief period of time, you can find it in the two trailers next to the Hawk's Nest.

The bookstore will hopefully be moving back to its location in the end of May, or in the first part of June. It will be completely renovated with 3,000 square feet added to it from the old Student Development Center. Included in the changes will be entirely new fixtures and carpet, a bigger Trade Book Section, a larger computer section, a Greek area for Greeks, and much more clothes and accessories with the UNCW emblem on them.

Yet most importantly, it will have all new registers to be able to get students in and out more quickly.

Until the renovations are complete, students can find supplies, gifts, and clothes in Trailer 1, the closest to the Hawk's Nest, and books and administrative offices in Trailer 2. So look for the opening of the new bookstore this summer.

Phil Has Never Had An Illegal Alien

The following very well could be an excerpt from the classified ads in the Washington Post.

PERSONALS
Looking for attractive female with Law degree, preferably with some experience as a prosecutor; must have reliable transportation, be paid up on taxes, and have NEVER HIRED AN ILLEGAL ALIEN!!! Serious inquiries should be directed to: Bill, 1600 Pennsylvania Ave., Washington, D.C. 10026.

Speaking of new Clinton administration nominees, I have acquired a list of those who were most recently confirmed. They include: Ted Kennedy (Transportation), Marion Berry (DEA), Charles Keating and Neil Bush (Treasury), Dan Quayle (Education), Dr. Jack Kevorkian (Surgeon General), Col. Oliver North (Defense), Ross Perot (CIA), John Gotti (FBI), Ronald Reagan (Aging), Capt. Joseph Hazelwood (Energy) and finally, Admiral James Stockdale (Press Secretary).

In other news, convicted axe murderer Jeffrey Dahmer had a recent court appearance in which he stated he would kill again if given the opportunity. He has also reportedly fired his defense lawyer stating, "Well, he was costing me an arm and a leg, and you know how fond I am of arms and legs." I think Jeffrey will definitely be spending many years in the "time out" corner for those words.

Turning to local news; Have you seen the newest thing to come out of Rental Cop Central? It's new, it's sleek, it's state-of-the-art, and it very well could be the best addition to our campus since the Health and Wellness Center installed a condom machine.

I am talking about none other than the "Talking Patrolman" callboxes (fifteen of them) that were recently installed around campus. Yes friends, the next time you spot a jaywalker or see someone parking in the yellow zone, you won't have to shoot them on the spot. Instead, you merely locate the nearest "Talking Patrolman," press the button, and help will be on the way.

Now don't get me wrong. I applaud the Campus Police for their efforts to make UNCW a safer place. I am merely seizing the opportunity, as I so love to do, to have a little fun, and without further doo-doo, I present for your reading enjoyment my Top Five Reasons UNCW Needs "Talking Patrolmen" Callboxes.

#5: They may actually be around when you need them.

#4: They can be hot-wired to play old Elvis tunes (Sorry Dr. Dodd) over the Campus Police radio frequency.

#3: They give an aspiring columnist/Pre-Med student something to write about besides rat urine and toilet paper.

#2: They cannot give you a "University Revenue Enhancement Sticker" (parking ticket)!!!!

#1: No need to worry about them slipping off to Krispy Kreme for a late-night snack.

I'll probably get a letter about this one, but any mail would be nice.

And now a look at sports. In what may have been the greatest battle since the French Revolution, the Dukes of James Madison met their Waterloo in Trask Coliseum last Monday. In fact, the matchup was so stressful to JMU coach "Lefty" Driesell that he had pulled almost all of his hair out before the game ended. The crowd played an important role as sixth man on the court for the Seahawks until late in the game when referee Dick Paparoz announced that only five players were allowed, and ordered the crowd silent.

Hats Off this week to Professor Steve Harper of the Management Department. Harper, in a recent speech, coined the phrase "Revenue Enhancement Sticker" for campus parking tickets and I thought that was pretty good. I always love to get new ammunition. Hat's Off to the Prof.

This week's Shoes Off award goes to the Pepsi Cola Bottling Company. I'm sorry folks, but that Crystal Pepsi really stinks. When I first tasted it I was reminded, yet again, of that totally disgusting "Magic Potty Baby" commercial. It is NASTY stuff. I'll be sticking to regular old Pepsi, and saying "Shoes Off" to the company for trying to sell bottled toilet water.

Well folks, that about wraps it up for this issue. As always, your comments and criticisms (as well as food, money, and household appliances) are definitely welcome. Send them to me at The Seahawk. Until next time... keep your mind out of the gutter, and your head out of the toilet.

Arthur Ashe: "Stood firm for what was right, like a rock"

The recent passing of Arthur Ashe should remind all of us that there is only so much time to live; our lives are influenced and affected by too many outside forces and events. Yes, Arthur Ashe was an athlete, but he should be remembered more for what he did off the tennis court.

Ashe came to fame for most people when he won the 1968 U.S. Open tennis tournament. Picture the scene: 1968, the year Martin Luther King, Jr. and Robert Kennedy were assassinated; the year Muhammed Ali was stripped of his heavyweight boxing crown because he refused to be inducted into the U.S. Army; the year Tommy Smith and John Carlos of the United States raised clenched fists when the National Anthem was played during their medal ceremony at the Summer Olympics in Mexico City; the year of the riots outside the Democrat Convention in Chicago.

"Black consciousness had arrived," Ashe said of 1968.

After winning the U.S. Open, Ashe became the first athlete, let alone black athlete, to appear on ABC's Face the Nation to discuss race relations in America.

Watching the footage as it appeared on Late Tuesday night, the young Arthur Ashe was not much different than the older Arthur Ashe: poised, thoughtful, insightful, and dignified.

Arthur Ashe's life is a model for all people to follow. He, much like Thurgood Marshall, walked the walk, talked the talk, but did so to make a difference, not for attention.

He demonstrated and protested against racism not only in this country, but in South Africa as well. He invested nearly $300,000 of his own money to publish a comprehensive history of the black athlete in America. Ashe fought for what he believed in, and never wavered from that stance.

Ashe didn't want his having AIDS made public because he wanted his privacy. But when USA Today approached him about it, he came forward. He did so in a press conference and in establishing the Arthur Ashe Foundation for the Defeat of AIDS.

Bob Seger wrote a song a number of years back called "Like a Rock." The song was inspired by Ashe's 1968 U.S. Open victory. One of the lines says, "I stood firm to what I felt was right. Like a rock."

That line was not only true to Ashe in 1968, but throughout his life.

If Ashe was a proverbial rock, may all of us be lucky to have our paths cross a few rocks from time to time. Ashe showed that if the commitment is there, anything can be accomplished.

We are all better people because Arthur Ashe lived and made a difference. How many of us will be brave enough to take a stand on an issue and stand by it no matter how tough the odds or opponent? Not enough.

Ashe commented that when you know you are going to die in a short time, you get more done, you have more energy. Those words should ring in everyone's ears because no one knows when "their day will come."

It is unfortunate that we only become aware of a person's commitment to life and the bettering of everyone's life after the person has died or is dying.

The next time you hear Bob Seger's "Like a Rock" remember Arthur Ashe. But don't let hearing that song be the only time you think of him, his life, what he accomplished, and what you can accomplish.

Society Must Accept All Sexual Preferences

It appears that the time for society's coming to terms with homosexuality is at hand. When I think back over my twenty-seven years in campus Ministry, there have been a series of social justice issues that seemed to claim the nation's attention.

Back in the 1950s, with the publication of Playboy, the society discovered sex as an appropriate subject for public discussion.

In the 1960s, death was discovered and explored. Then came the Women's Movement and the abortion issue.

Now it appears that homosexuality as an issue is coming out of our social closet.

What we discovered first of all is that we are a homophobic society that has established laws and societal norms that group homosexuals in a class labeled "unwanted outsiders." In the 1980s, with the advent of AIDS, citizens with this attitude quickly determined that AIDS was God's judgment upon homosexuals.

Over the years, some of us have had the fortunate experience of knowing persons who happened to be gay and what do you think we found? We found people: caring, loving, often hurting people.

As my friendships increased and I began to see the world through their eyes, I discovered how destructive it can be to be oppressed by a homophobic society. If discovering that you are different sexually than most of your peers is not hard enough to deal with, then there is layered on top of that all the feelings that come with being stereotyped, rejected, and hated by your whole culture.

If there is a positive side to AIDS (a crisis much larger than the gay and lesbian community), it lies in the fact that more and more people have encountered the homosexual community in such a way to call forth compassion and concern about justice.

I have recently taken two different groups of people to Washington, D.C., where they participated in a Meals On Wheels food service for persons who are dying of AIDS. The experience led to conversations and consciousness raising that was the first time their homophobia was challenged by real people.

Now the issue of gays in the military has claimed the headlines, leading to a gay bashing in Wilmington. All that has happened in the last decade provides us the opportunity to increase our awareness of how we have been personally scripted by the culture in which we have been raised, i.e. to face our own homophobia.

When I made the choice to be a Christian, I found there is one fundamental value to be applied to every interaction with another human being. That is love is to be acted out in terms of terms of justice and compassion. Such a value, self-chosen as it was, forces me to look seriously at the prejudice that came into my life by being a part of American society.

It is simply wrong to categorize people by labels and use those labels to discount them and to oppress them. Something is truly wrong with our thinking when we hear or read about incidents of violence against homosexuals or project such incidents as a reason for not permitting homosexuals in the military and think that the problem is with the homosexuals.

In these situations, who is the source of the violence? It is in the so-called "straight" people. Homosexuals did not attack the marines. Another reason given against changing the military restriction is the fear that homosexuals, unless restrained, will try to put the moves on everyone in sight.

Gay and lesbian persons are no different than anyone and are just as timid and hesitant as all of us when starting a new relationship. The problem, again, is not with homosexuals, but with our unhealthy stereotypes.

To blame homosexuals in this way for violence or potential violence seems little different to me than blaming women for being raped when we say or think "they asked for it" or blaming the Jews for the violence they incurred in Nazi Germany.

I am convinced that the most difficult aspect of coming to terms with the reality of homosexuality in our society is our learned homophobia, the resulting projection of all kinds of negative feelings on the homosexual community and a resulting continuation of injustice that bespeaks anything but love and compassion.

The time for change and growth toward the inclusion of the homosexual person and community is a just and compassionate way into the fabric of our society is at hand.

What is blocking such growth lies, for the most part, within the broad spectrum of the non-homosexual citizenry of our country. In the words of a favorite cartoon character, "I have met the enemy, and he is us!"

Let us begin by looking within ourselves before we "cast stones" at these people who ask only to be given the freedom and acceptance to be their own natural selves.

LETTERS

TO THE EDITOR

Editor:

I saw my first college basketball game in many years recently at UNCW, and it was enjoyable-- a double overtime victory, nimble cheerleaders, demented students with no shirts and painted bodies, and a noise level that would have shattered a wine glass at a hundred yards.

However, I was sorely disappointed in one thing. Your mascot.

The Seahawk, I felt, was only marginally entertaining and definitely lacked in the ability to rouse the crowd to a fever pitch. Why was this so?

Finally, it hit me. His feet. The Seahawk has dainty little human feet, and that gives the lie to his whole outfit. What the Seahawk needs, students and pedagogues, are feet-- big, throated, taloned bird feet. Not those diminutive pedal extremities I saw at the East Carolina game.

So equipped, I promise you, your school's mascot will believe that he is a real bird, will act like one, will motivate, inspire and, yes, help ward off second-half swoons the basketball team seems to fall into.

If you care about the team and its mascot, I strongly urge you to start a fund now. A slogan? How about: Feet for the Fowl? Has a sort of ring to it, don't you think? But hurry. Time is of the essence.

I just wanted to take the time to congratulate Ruby Brown and the whole staff of the Leadership Center on the excellent program this past weekend. The professionalism, competence, and leadership ability shown by Ruby and the Leadership Center Staff is truly a credit to the student body and the University as a whole.

The North Carolina African-American Student Leadership Conference was a true success both here at UNCW and across the state. Leaders from across the state gathered and addressed many current issues and discussed many solutions and I personally am very proud of our students for organizing such an important event.

Ruby has shown herself to be a true "Leader," and deserves the much earned praise. Congratulations Ruby and all the folks at the Leadership Center, you deserve it.

Successful NCAASLC Conference Deserves Praise and Recognition

BY EUGENE E. WRIGHT, Jr., M.D.
Trustee, UNCW

I recently had the opportunity and privilege to attend the N.C. African-American Student Leadership Conference (NCAASLC), February 5-7, 1993, at UNCW. This was an exciting conference involving over 200 students (Black and White), faculty and administrators from 10 universities and colleges, 10 community colleges, and 4 area high schools.

These participants identified and dealt with problems of being leaders and specifically Black student leaders. Attendance was so great that some sessions had to be moved to larger rooms to accommodate the overflow. Students and presenters interacted in sessions and informally in the productive sharing of ideas and philosophy.

This was highlighted by a passionate plea for all of us to examine "Who, where, and for what reason" we would lead, by Nikki Giovanni, the keynote speaker.

Students from UNC-Chapel Hill shared with all their struggle to get a free-standing Black Cultural Center. Despite what your feelings are on the issue, you must admire these students' commitment and organizational skills.

Black professionals, including a judge, accountant, principal, school administrator/professor, engineer, high school teacher, and a physician shared keys to our success with the students in a careers forum. High school students talked with admissions officers about preparation for college.

While the conference targeted African-American students, it had impact on all. At times, situations arose that surely made White students feel uncomfortable. To their credit, they hung in there and tried to imagine what type of experiences Black students must endure everyday.

In this day of instant media coverage, I find it interesting that when Len Bias, a well-known athlete from the University of Maryland, died of cocaine overdose, nearly six weeks of media coverage followed. Yet when students come together to work within the system to discuss issues and problems and explore creative solutions, without taking over a building or a more dramatic form of expression, not one line of media coverage was afforded.

Where are our priorities? Had the students marched on the Chancellor's office or home, more media personnel than students would likely have been found on campus, and an emergency Trustees meeting would have been called to deal with "the problem." As it was, the Chancellor gave an excellent opening message to kick off the conference. I was lucky to see Joe Mitchell, fellow trustee and President of the student Government Association present throughout the entire conference.

As I looked over the group of students in attendance, I saw future councilmen/women, legislators, and possible University Presidents. Black males were well represented as well as student athletes. This renewed my faith not only in students in general but also in the plight of the Black Male. Like the chancellor of a well-known major N.C. University, I would much rather work with these students than against them. I would hope that UNCW and the Greater Wilmington community would share these sentiments.

In conclusion, I salute Ms. Ruby Brown, her steering committee, Ms. Cathy Birmingham and the Leadership Center at UNCW for their outstanding efforts in the coordination of this first annual conference. They have brought great honor and distinction to the University. These students and administrators are truly role models and are much more deserving of our public recognition than we see typically see in the media.

"AFRO AND WHITE, RICH AND POOR, EDUCATED AND ILLITERATE... OUR FUTURES ARE BOUND TOGETHER. WE CAN RUN FROM EACH OTHER, BUT WE CANNOT ESCAPE EACH OTHER."

Arthur Ashe, reluctant symbol and role model, dies with dignity

The word that keeps recurring in the remembrances of Arthur Ashe is dignity - dignity in how he engaged life, pursued his historic tennis career, advocated the cause of human rights around the globe and, finally, in how he confronted the illness that claimed him Saturday at age 49.

It is a fine way for anyone to be remembered, but with his gentlemanly resolve and steely determination, it became essential in the journey of Arthur Ashe for the impact it helped him make on society and sports.

To most Americans, he will be recalled first as a tennis player of immense talent and majestic ascent, all the more remarkable because in his time he was the only prominent black male player in a white-dominated sport. He still is the only black male to have won the U.S. Open, the Australian Open and Wimbledon. But in so doing - as Zina Garrison-Jackson was to eulogize - he "made the footprints" for her and all aspiring young black players to follow.

He was a symbol and role model reluctantly but insightfully. He understood the obligations of his success and its potential as a powerful force, and used it wisely. He reached young people through sports, encouraging their participation with inner-city tennis clinics, but preached tirelessly that athletics without academics is a blind alley, and that more time should be spent in libraries than on the playing fields.

Ultimately, that was his most important message in a lifelong conflict with prejudice and intolerance, though not so controversial as his more celebrated causes - such as fortifying the campaign to end apartheid in South Africa. He did not undertake these causes out of zeal, but out of duty and a conviction of what was right. Even in his last months he was fighting for better treatment of refugees from Haiti, while championing the need to find a cure for AIDS.

Having been victim and victor, he envisioned the world as a better place. Tuesday, his body will lie in state in the Virginia executive mansion in Richmond, where as a youth he was denied play in city tournaments because of his color. It is a measure of how far he went in life, and of the footprints he left behind.

This editorial appeared in the Chicago Tribune, Tuesday, February 9.

Cyclists, Pedestrians Clash -Sometimes Painfully- On Campuses

By John Williams
College Press Service

Bicycles, long the trusty transportation choice of college students, are rolling into problems on college campuses as officials try to balance the demands of bikers, pedestrians and drivers.

While bicyclists and walkers peacefully co-exist for the most part, some schools are taking measures to crack down on bicyclists who pedal through campuses. Bikers and pedestrians many times are competing for the same space to traverse around school, and collisions and injuries abound.

At the University of Central Florida in Orlando, a sidewalk safety committee has proposed banning bikes and skateboards in a 1,200-foot radius around the main academic area. This had brought a host of complaints from the student body, and a strong reaction from the student newspaper.

Meanwhile, the police department at the University of Texas at Austin is handing out warnings to bicyclists who break traffic laws. Patrols with university police officers on bicycles were added because of student complaints. About 50 warnings have been issued since November, Capt. Rollin Donelson said, adding that the police department estimates there are 3,000 to 7,000 bikes on campus daily.

There have been at least four accidents involving bikers and pedestrians this fall, with some injuries, Donelson said. Some people were run over, and others had to jump out of the way of bikes, resulting in sprains and scratches. One bicyclist broke an arm.

The police department's bike patrol has "been implemented off and on throughout the year as we received complaints. We put out the bike patrol in certain area of the campus that had problems," Donelson said. "We decided to take a proactive approach."

Under Texas law, bicyclists are subject to the same laws that motorists are, such as speed limits and obeying all traffic signs. That doesn't mean that bikers are vigilant in obeying those laws, Donelson said. And it can get expensive: After the first warning, a biker can be fined from $10 to $50, depending on the violation.

Students tend to run stop signs all the time. Another violation is riding on sidewalks," he said. "It's a cyclical thing. Students don't want to pay fines, so they back off. Then they start again, and we get complaints, so we send out the patrols. It's a never-ending cycle."

At the University of Central Florida, a sidewalk safety committee of administrators, students and faculty members proposed closing off the main academic area to bicyclist and in-line skaters. UCF is adding more buildings in its academic area, so the committee determined that biking and skating should be banned in a 1,200-foot radius, spokesman Dean McFall said.

"The committee is aware that density is getting high. As a growing institution we are getting more pedestrian traffic between the academic buildings and the outside areas," McFall said. "The committee thought it prudent to ban bicycles, skateboards and rollerblades."

Others on campus thought differently. The Central Florida Future, the campus newspaper, published a picture of the head of university President John Hitt on the body of Adolf Hitler, calling him "Hitler," and wrote an editorial condemning the proposed rule change.

"And it can get expensive: after the first warning, bikers can be fined $10-$50, depending on the violation."

Hitt, in a statement to the university, said he has reservations about the proposal and wants more input. "I trust that further discussion of this matter will proceed with reason, dignity and respect," Hitt wrote.

While walkers and bikers haven't collided this fall, there have been injuries involving bikes and autos, McFall said. But there is still an accident waiting to happen between a pedestrian and a bicyclist, he said. "Bikes move a lot faster than people, and they are quiet," he said. UCF's police department has a bike patrol that would be exempt from the proposed rule.

Some schools are promoting bicycling as an alternative transportation to cars, especially in California. Increasing air pollution problems in Sacramento have prompted California State University officials to push for more students to ride bikes.

"We're trying to promote more bicycling because Sacramento has air quality problems," said Kathy Robertson, director of Peak Adventures, an on-campus bicycle shop. "We have occasional accidents, but there is no widespread call for banning bikes."

She said that California State University bans bikes from the academic areas of campus because of the high number of walkers.

At the University of California-Davis, bikers outnumber pedestrians 4-to-1, said David Takemoto-Weerts, who is the university's bicycle program director. He said UC-Davis has a reputation of being the bicycle capital of the United States because of a comprehensive bike system that was developed first in the city of Davis and extended to the university.

The core area of the campus is closed off to vehicles, and bike paths are placed away from sidewalks. Additionally, bikes are banned from sidewalks, and the university's police department has a bike patrol to enforce bike rules.

"We haven't had too many car-bike accidents on campus, but we do have some conflicts with pedestrians and bikes," Takemoto-Weerts said. "There have been some concerns voiced by pedestrians."

Officials at the University of Wisconsin at Madison are establishing areas on campus where students can skateboard. They want to limit skateboarding because of concerns about injuries both to the skateboarders and pedestrians, a campus spokeswoman said. No such action is planned to limit bicycle riding.

Abuse of new system could be costly

BY CHRIS SLATER
University Police

The new emergency callbox system (Talking Patrolman) is now on line and is operational. Its purpose is to provide essential communications assistance in an emergency or in requesting information.

However, please be aware of the fact that using the callbox for any reason other than its intended purpose is prohibited.

North Carolina General Statute 14-225, False, etc. reports to a police radio broadcasting station, makes it illegal for any person to willfully make or cause to be made to a police radio broadcasting station any false, misleading or unfounded report.

Any person found guilty of this offense could be punished by a fine not to exceed $500, imprisonment for not more than six months, or both. Also university sanctions could be levied.

Please understand that the callbox is there for your assistance, and allow it to serve its intended purpose.

Participate In Homecoming

Just because the Dallas Cowboy Cheerleaders aren't coming for UNCW's Homecoming festivities doesn't mean everybody shouldn't participate.

As of yesterday, only 20 tickets had been sold to the comedian show scheduled for the first night of Homecoming week, February 15.

"Basically, everybody waits until the last minute to do everything," said A.P. Blake, ACE's special events chairperson. "I also don't think they realize the good collection of comedians we've gotten."

Homecoming will only be successful if a good number of students participate.

Tickets for all Homecoming events can be picked up in the Information Center in the University Union.

UNCW's men's basketball team has given the students something to be proud of this season. A strong turnout for Homecoming is another way of showing support for those awesome Seahawks.

Dear UNCW Students,

The Student Government Association is a vital part of student life at UNCW. The members of SGA work diligently at enhancing student life, and I applaud their efforts. The service that SGA offers is one that benefits the university community as a whole, and I encourage all students to become involved in SGA's efforts.

The Student Government Association is currently holding registration for candidates who wish to run for office in the Spring elections. All UNCW students are eligible to register for at least one position in SGA. I strongly encourage students to take advantage of the opportunity to become a part of this dynamic organization. In addition, I especially urge all students to vote in SGA elections on March 16 and 17, 1993.

I would like to take this time to say thank you to the current SGA members for their endless efforts and, once again, encourage all students to make a difference at UNCW by becoming active participants in Student Government.

With all best wishes,

 James R. Leutze

LOW CALORIE SUGGESTIONS

The following suggestions briefly outline how foods can be prepared so as to keep the calorie level low, but the taste and nutritional quality high.

1. Increase the use of leaner meats, seafoods, cottage cheese, and skim milk cheeses.
2. Always cut all visible fat from the meat before cooking and cook without adding extra fat.
3. Remove skin from the poultry before eating, as a layer of fat lies attached to the skin.
4. Use lemon juice, herbs, or onion flakes with seafood dishes for added flavor and variety. Fish is an economical and lowfat protein food.
5. Use seasoned tomato juice, or bouillon in meat, fish, and poultry recipes instead of creamed gravies and rich sauces. If following a sodium restricted diet, do not use tomato juice or bouillon.
6. Try cooking with dry wines. Most of the calorie rich alcohol evaporates in the cooking but leaves a flavorful sauce. Sweet wines, however contain more sugar and have more calories.
7. Try combining meat and fruit for flavor variations. Pineapple with chicken or apples with ham are two suggestions.
8. Try a variety of breads - herb, whole wheat, rye, cheese, cinnamon, and spiced breads - to add interest to meals. A slice of cinnamon toast and fruit can substitute for a rich dessert.
9. Carbohydrate - rich vegetables are considered a bread, calorie-wise. Dried peas, beans, and lentils when combined with small amounts of meat are good sources of protein and can be used to extend meat dishes for economy.
10. Use a variety of fruits and try them as appetizers, with a main course, or as a dessert.
11. Avoid both canned and frozen fruit that have sugar added. Both water-packed canned fruits and sugar-free frozen fruits are flavorful and sweet. For economical reasons, canned fruits are sometimes the most sensible buy. If water-packed fruits are not available, choose fruits in a light syrup, and rinse the syrup from the fruit before using.
12. Canned fruit juices should be purchased without added sugar. This requires reading the labels on the cans carefully.

Discover Center

"A Spotlight on Julie McMinn... An Outdoor Leader"

An integral part of Discover Outdoor Programs are the student leaders that facilitate the various programs. One such student who is involved with every aspect of Discover is Julie McMinn. Julie, a native of North Carolina, is a senior Parks and Recreation Management student. Julie began her involvement with Discover Outdoor Programs during the spring 92 semester when she participated in Discover's Trip Leader Training program. As a Trip Leader, Julie has taken members of the UNCW community on backpacking trips in Wilderness areas of the Pisgah and Uwharrie National Forests helping participants experience effective group cooperation, healthy leisure pursuits, and learn more about themselves and the environment. Julie's interest in outdoor education stems from her feelings on the outdoors: "I feel the outdoors is a great place to learn not only about nature, but also about oneself, and how to meet and deal with new challenges." Besides being a Trip Leader for Discover, Julie is also a Challenge "Ropes" Course facilitator, working with UNCW and community groups. Julie says she enjoys being a "Roper" course facilitator because, "I can see changes in the participants. Every group that comes through the course is different with different goals and needs."

When Julie is not in the field, she is putting her leadership skills to use in the Discover Outdoor Center where she is a Program Assistant. As a Program Assistant Julie takes care of behind the scene details that go into the adventure trips and challenge course programs. She also plays a major roll in the overall operations of the Discover Outdoor Center.

Julie's academic preparation through the Parks and Recreation Management curriculum combined with her hands on leadership experiences with Discover Outdoor Programs has enabled her to establish clear professional goals. She wants to work as a Therapeutic Recreation Specialist emphasizing in outdoor adventure. Therapeutic Recreation Specialists are those recreation professionals that provide service for special populations. "Through a career in therapeutic recreation and outdoor adventure I hope to travel, but eventually work in a university setting. I hope to use therapeutic recreation not only for special populations, but for all people." Keep up the good work Julie.

THE Gutter

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

The other night I had a dream. No, this time it was not about world peace, solving the world's hunger problems, or the ARC winning the Super-Bowl, nothing disheartening like that.

Oddly enough, this now less than famous pseudo-journalist was in a one-on-one battle with Seattle Super-sonic Forward Shawn Kemp.

In less than typical dream, "I had a bet that the looser had to surrender a month's pay to the winner. Since my months pay could just barely cover the cost of four bean burritos and a large Coke, I took the challenge.

If I was going to win, I had to shut him down. While Kemp was pumping up his shoes, I summarized in my head my chances of winning this clash of polar basketball oddities. The way I saw it, it was basically his skills against my skill. He had a tremendous power game, almost unstoppable, so good in fact he has become the new leading man in the NBA's highlight films. He tried to intimidate me by leaping me in route to one of his pre-game warm-up slams, it was impressive, BUT I WAS NOT SCARED.

For me I am fresh from bench warming in UNCW's Intramural Fraternity League. I have had my pockets picked more on the court than a tourist in a crowded New York City Subway. Most importantly, I have shot enough bricks, this week, to build two super-free-way upgrades to the Great Wall of China.

In the dream, Kemp scored two quick baskets off two frustration-venting dunks. After seeing these I knew it was time to call upon my skill... precision hacking.

As Kemp prepared to blow past me for the third time I began to execute the drive stopping maneuver I called the hattering run. At this point Kemp and I continued, discharging the ball from his hands.

He stood stunned, and in awe of my total lack of respect for body and game. Since no foul was called, I grabbed the ball and charged to the basket dripping in blood I missed the first attempt, but made the eighth. The game was now in my hands. Kemp, was just minutes away from eternal disgrace. I revived the still astonished Kemp, and asked him to autograph and check the ball.

I planned to get him off balanced, by using misdirection and jab steps, and get a little closer to shoot a higher percentage shot. After about ten minutes of this I was getting a little frustrated, but I was not going to abandon my game plan. Kemp, finally fell for a fake, (the convulsion climaxed it for me) and I drove to the foul line and released a shot. Kemp rushed to the goal for a rebound, but upon impact to the backboard the ball shattered the Plexiglas frame, even though the ball still found its way through the cylinder before the Hydra-rib cracked to the floor.

Mentally exhausted Kemp called a time out. After the time out Kemp came out smoking, stealing the ball from me (I went to the KFC buffet during the time-out, and my hands and mouth were still greasy). Kemp slumped, again, and again. Feeling a little cocky he gave me his possession and said, "go ahead, I want even check you, shrimp."

I used this opportunity to execute my two handed, tap the boards, 360, fade-away, reverse lay-up. After seeing this Kemp burst into tears and began to reach for my throat, muttering some nonsense about killing the devil child. I confused me.

Kemp regained his composure, snapped his fingers and his accountant appeared, with a check for a-a-gillion dollars. As I reached for the check, my alarm sounds. Kemp, started to laugh wickedly...

It was 12:00 a.m. to get ready for class.

Pseudo-journalism at its greatest.

'Hawks lose at home Seahawks Duke it out

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

After losing to Richmond, UNCW forward John Spann commented that, "we have to bounce back from this game, an with Madison losing to ECU, so do they. I think Monday will be a dog fight."

Sheriff El-Sanadilly rated the Madison game as a "matter of life or death."

With this type of mind set from the players on Saturday, UNCW Prepared to face Madison, a team that has only had one loss in the conference this season. Another monumental game stood before the Seahawks this season, and again they delivered, beating conference leader James Madison in overtime, 89-85.

It was a game that statistically looked like UNCW, would not have won. They had the lower shot and free throw percentage, but this game was one by heart. UNCW overcame a six point half time deficit and a five point deficit with 2 minutes left in regulation.

With probably the most determined 2 minutes UNCW has ever seen, El-Sanadilly, Tim Shaw and Keith Adkins offensively constructed a come back. With JMU leading 67-72, Tim Shaw started the offensive run with a put back off a offensive rebound. The Seahawks, got another scoring opportunity when Clayton Ritter committed his fifth foul on a charging violation, and El-Sanadilly hit two free throws. On the defensive end Darren Moore commits an offensive foul and JMU forward Davis shot and made two free throws. With 28 seconds left on the clock, UNCW inbound the ball and Adkins sent up a 25 footer that tied the game at 74, all. JMU missed a shot to win the game and Moore grabbed the rebound, tossed the ball to a streaking Reggie Venev, who lays the ball up just as the buzzer sounds, and the Seahawks felt that they have the victory over the Dukes.

But Sheriff El-Sanadilly called a time out before after Moore grabbed the rebound, so the clock was reset to 10 seconds and UNCW had one last chance in regulation to win the game, but Venev's 8 footer slid off the rim, taking the game into overtime.

In the overtime period, Moore started the Seahawks toward victory hitting one of two free throws. After a JMU turnover, Venev sank a three from the top of the key to give the Seahawks a four point lead. JMU, again wasted the following possession, which led to a Tim Shaw dunk, and the game for the Seahawks as they went to win 89-85.

"We have not been playing well lately, and until this weekend Madison seemed invincible. The three pointer, to tie the game felt good off my hand, but some times they feel like a scud missiles. It was my job to read the defender and use my options to find a shot, and I hit it," said Adkins.

"We tried to make them make mistakes, we wanted to be the aggressor, and we needed to come out and establish our game and play hard," commented El-Sanadilly.

"I don't think that the Madison staff, or their players lost this game, it was the UNCW players who went out there and got the win. Reggie Venev set the key for the team by keeping them focused on the attack," said Eastman.

Blank turns in game of the night, but ECU wins

BY JIM CLARK
Editor in Chief

Who was the high scorer in Trask Coliseum Monday night? Keith Adkins? No. Reggie Venev? Nope, both of them only had 17.

JMU's Bryan Edwards? No, but he was close with 26.

Lady Seahawk Amber Blank pumped in 27 points in the first half of the Monday doubleheader.

Though most people were talking about the heroics of the men's team, and rightly so, they missed out on one of the best individual performances to grace the Trask Coliseum floor this year.

East Carolina won the contest 87-67, but the final score didn't accurately reflect how tight the game was.

Blank had only eight points at the half, with UNCW trailing 37-28.

In the second half, Blank took over. Coach Sherri Tynes gave Blank control of the offense and she responded.

Blank scored 19 second-half points, including eight straight Seahawks points.

Blank also finished with four assists, five steals, and four rebounds.

The game was a series of spurts. ECU jumped out to an early nine point lead, only to see UNCW close to within three.

The teams traded baskets until UNCW pulled ahead, 28-26, with 3:29 to go in the half. ECU responded with an 11-0 run to close the half.

Next up for the Lady Seahawks is the University of Richmond Spiders Friday night at 7:30 p.m. and James Madison University Sunday at 3 p.m. Both games will be at Trask Coliseum.

"(The Richmond game) is a winnable game for us," Tynes said. "We gave one away up there."

The Lady Seahawks hope to have center Hannah Grady back in action Friday. She missed Monday's game due to minor injuries sustained in a car accident last Saturday.

The Ultimate UNCW sport

BY WAYNE WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

What do you call a sport that is a cross between soccer, football and basketball, and is played with a disk? The answer is Ultimate, and it is a sport of growing popularity at UNCW and all over the globe.

UNCW has both a men's and women's ultimate teams, that has enjoyed much success on national levels.

The men's team have returned to the semi-finals or the finals almost every year even after they lost in the regional their second year.

The women's team is currently the national collegiate defending champions, and will host the East Coast College Championships here at Wilmington March 27 and 28th.

Both teams spend lots of time conditioning and doing drills that will help them excel in competition. The women run a mile before practice. "Because it is a fast pace sport, and not a sport of who can throw the farthest or jump the highest it is a team sport," said Nick Myer.

"I think there is sort of a misconception about what we are looking for. Most of us didn't know what we were doing when we first started. We have spent a lot of time, promoting Ultimate and UNCW, and have a good tradition here, it is fun, but we also take it seriously," continued Myers.

Tracy Satterfield, explained that the "spirit of the game is what she most likes about ultimate. We do not have referees, we have a honor system. About fouls that are called."

Ultimate is played with seven people on the field at a time, and just as in football there something like a kick off where we line up and toss the frisbee down the field. "Our defenses are primary man-to-man and zones. The conditions here at Wilmington, the wind and the rain help us excel," explained Tracy.

Both teams welcome interested students, to come out and check out Ultimate whether they are spectators or future players. Look for these teams on Brooks field around 4:00 weekdays and 12:00 on Sunday's.

Nix and Person Vie For President

SGA Candidates Announced

BY ED MOSELEY
Staff Writer

Candidates for Student Government Association offices open during spring elections, to be held March 16-17, will campaign Friday Feb. 19 to March 15.

One of the hotly contested seats will be that of SGA President between Duane "Ziggy" Nix and Lee Person.

Nix, a 20-year-old unaffiliated voter, has served students through SGA for two years.

In his freshman year, Nix was a spring Rep-at-Large and served on the Judiciary Committee. He was also briefly on the Faculty Evaluation Committee.

Nix is currently on the Calendar Committee and is Vice-President of SGA.

The Hendersonville, NC native said he hopes "to reach more students through the media. As a whole, to reach more diverse campus groups that are not currently involved with SGA."

Nix said the recent lifting of limits on campaign contributions

In his three years of student government experience Person has been a member of a number of committees. As a sophomore he was Vice-Chairperson of the Budget and Planning Committee. It was his second year on that committee.

He served on the Constitution Committee as a sophomore and is now its Chairperson as a junior. Person has also been active in other committees associated with the university.

Person said SGA has "served a small minority" in the past because of "the division we have had in the Executive Board and the senate."

He said SGA should benefit the whole community and not just first come first served.

"We gave $6000 to the football club which went defunct," Person said, "I do not think that's the proper use of funds."

Person likes to play tennis, backpack, and volunteer for the Big Buddy program.

Other contested Executive Board seats are SGA Vice-President between Lyn Carney and Jeff Gurkin and Student Services Coordinator between Phil B. Feiner and Alvin Phillips.

Lee Person is a 20-year-old from Goldsboro, NC. He describes himself as a Republican who likes conservative economic policies.

Person has served students for three years. He was a Senator during his first two years of college and was elected by his peers to serve as the President Pro Term of the Senate as a sophomore.

Three To Be Honored In March

BY AMY PETROCELLI
Staff Writer

The Albert Schweitzer International Prize ceremony will be held on March 18 in Kenan Auditorium. The tradition honors humanitarian Albert Schweitzer who lived by the philosophy, "Reverence for life."

The prizes are awarded every four years by the North Carolina Educational, Historical and Scientific Foundation, Inc. The foundation recognizes individuals around the world who emulate Schweitzer's philosophy by demonstrating excellence in the areas of medicine, music, and the humanities.

This year's prize winners are Father Dominique Catta, Robert Muller, and John Wilson, who were announced at a press conference in December.

Father Dominique Catta, a Benedictine Monk and native of France, will receive the prize for music. Catta is noted for creating a tradition of religious music that blends African melodies with the Gregorian chant.

Catta, who joined the Benedictine Order in 1946 at age 20, was later appointed Master of the Choir at Keur Moussa, Senegal. While in the monastery, he worked with other monks to compose over 700 pieces of music that are played on traditional African instruments.

Robert Muller, prize winner for humanities, is deemed the "Philosopher of the United Nations" as he was the first chancellor of the UN.

Muller was imprisoned by the Gestapo in World War II but later escaped to join the French Resistance. After the war, his goal was to dedicate his life to peace, and joined the UN Secretariat. After 38 years of service, he was promoted to Assistant Secretary-General. His work consisted of coordinating work of other UN agencies and developing a world core curriculum that is used in schools world wide.

Now retired, this "Father of global education," channels his efforts primarily to the UN agencies in New York, Costa Rica, and Geneva, Switzerland.

John Wilson will receive the prize for medicine. Wilson, from Sussex, England was blinded at the age of 12 in a chemistry lab accident and now dedicates his life to founding world agencies that strive to prevent avoidable blindness and other disabilities.

Wilson, knighted in 1975, holds degrees from Oxford University in law and sociology, and was founder of the Royal Commonwealth Society for the Blind. His work has consisted of establishing organizations for the blind in over 30 commonwealth countries in Asia, Africa, Europe and the Americas.

While working in West Africa, Wilson developed a program through which approximately 200,000 cataract surgeries are provided per year.

The tradition of the Albert Schweitzer International Prizes was founded in 1972 by Dr. Gerald Shinn of the Philosophy and Religion Department, and Mr. Carl Dempsey, Vice Chancellor for Business Affairs. They created the event in hopes of building prestige for the still young UNCW. Shinn stated, "In 1972 we had a tough time getting students into graduate programs and occupational positions." UNCW, he explained, was still a new school, and was not widely recognized at that time.

Shinn explained that four factors give a university prestige: academic excellence, international tradition, distinctiveness and dignity. Shinn, although he believes that UNCW has always had good faculty and students contributing to academic excellence, felt that a strategy was needed for UNCW to grow in the other three areas.

The strategy was for the university to hold a celebration of See Schweitzer, page 3

Lisa McIntosh, a junior in the School of Nursing, has been named North Carolina nursing student of the year.

McIntosh, the second University of North Carolina at Wilmington student to receive the honor in four years, got the honor at the North Carolina Association of Nursing Students annual banquet. Three other UNCW students were recognized also.

"I am really excited about winning the award. It's a great award and achievement. I'm real excited to represent my peers," said McIntosh.

The faculty in the School of Nursing was excited for McIntosh as well as for the school.

"Lisa's award and the others are a tremendous recognition for the school at a state level. When UNCW's name kept coming up it was evident that the students are active. It demonstrates their commitment," said Marlene Rosenkoetter, dean of the School of Nursing.

"We are extraordinarily delighted that she (McIntosh) achieved this. It reflects highly the quality of our school and our students," Rosenkoetter added.

McIntosh, a Fayetteville, native will serve a one year term representing all nursing students in the state. She will be a role model for other student nurses as well as being responsible for fundraising for scholarships. She will also have a voting seat on the North Carolina State Board of the Student Nursing Association.

"The fact that Lisa was chosen for this award among all the nursing students in the state is a credit to her and our program. We are thrilled to have two state winners in six years since our program has achieved baccalaureate status," said Dean Rosenkoetter.

McIntosh also received a $1500 scholarship with the award. She was selected based on her grade point average, extra-curricular activities, her leadership role in the local Association of Student Nursing and her essay on shaping the future of nursing students in unity.

After graduation from UNCW, McIntosh plans to stay in North Carolina and pursue a masters degree in Cardiology. Other deciding factors in the choice of McIntosh, were interviews and recommendations from Rosenkoetter and members of the School of Nursing faculty.

McIntosh's award was not the only one for UNCW's nursing students. At the same banquet, the school collected awards for their poster in "Breakthrough in Nursing" and for "most creative fund-raiser." Also, the club's proposal for a statewide fundraiser to benefit the Domestic Violence Shelters was accepted as the charity for next year.

As statewide nursing student of the year, McIntosh will attend the Student Nursing Convention in Kansas City in April.

Greeks Strive To Improve Their Academic Standing

BY JULIE PODLASEK
Staff Writer

Have you ever wondered what all those Greek sign up sheets are for on the front bulletin board in the library? One might say that they are partial indicators of the study habits of several of our Greek organizations. It is easy to look at them and see just how many Greeks are in the library studying, and recent studies show that it has paid off in many cases.

Last semester's grade point averages ended up as follows:

All campus	2.51
All Greek	2.51
All Women's	2.58
All Panhellenic	2.67
All Men's	2.40
All IFC	2.35

Greek Advisor Bob Smith shared some of his views about the turnout of last semester's grades.

"I was particularly pleased with the grades of the women's fraternities. Seven out of the eight were above the all campus average, and six of eight were at or above the all women's average. I am more concerned with grades of pledges, particularly for the men. It would seem both sororities and fraternities need to place greater emphasis on scholarship in their pledge education programs."

Dean Smith admits that although the all Greek GPA is a good one, it still leaves room for improvement. He encourages the organizations to better utilize campus resources such as attending scholarship programs, having a tour of the library, time management workshops, as well as workshops on reading, studying, and test taking skills.

Also, he would rather see it become the responsibility of a Big Brother or Big Sister to monitor the pledges and see to it that their Little Brother or Sister gets their studying done. Smith is not convinced that large study halls really promote scholarship and show the importance of academics.

"Scholarship is the reason we have fraternities and sororities and should be the first priority in them," said Smith. "All of our rituals are based on working towards a higher education, so if we say that by joining you can be a better leader, it should also be the case to show people to become a better student."

Alexandra Hutzler, who serves as Panhellenic Secretary stated, "The best incentive I feel for scholarship is the Sorority Stars that are given out at the end of the year to each person in each chapter who maintains a 3.0 to a 3.5 GPA. These girls are given an honorary certificate through Panhellenic at the Panhellenic awards ceremony, and are recognized in front of everyone."

Hutzler is also a member of Phi Mu whose initiated members overall GPA reached a 2.91, definitely something to be commended for.

Chi Omega and Sigma Nu were the top two organizations with the highest grade point averages which combined initiated members as well as pledged members grades. Congratulations!

Coming up this year, Rich Witlow, IFC President, is implementing a Scholarship Cup for the first time ever to the fraternity with the most points earned for scholarship related activities. These include study halls, high GPA's, and scholarship programs held by the individual chapters. He believes "this will help with the process of giving more positive reasons for people to get good grades in the fraternities."

Max Westland, President of Sigma Phi Epsilon, says, "Being a transfer student, I see that there is not nearly the same emphasis on academics here as there is in other schools." Westland feels it is important for the administration to encourage professors to constantly challenge the potential of their students. "I personally learn more in classes where I have essay tests as opposed to multiple choice tests." He also feels that, "IFC should have some sort of regulation power over fraternities GPA's. This way it would take pressure off the officers to cross the line between being an officer and being a brother, when grades come into play."

Currently Sigma Phi Epsilon is working on giving out "The Balanced Man Scholarship" to the best qualified male applicant from any high school in North Carolina. It will be a scholarship for full in-state tuition for the person who is the highest achiever in all areas, especially academics. This person will not be required to join any fraternity here, but this is what they are doing to improve their GPA from the beginning, by attracting men with interest in high academic achievement.

Scot Hughes, secretary of Chi Phi, expressed some of their techniques to better their scholarship program.

"We have study hall hours for brothers and pledges. Then we pair up people having problems in certain classes and pair them up with someone who's good in that subject. We also offer library orientation sessions and in the past have shown the program 'Where There's a Will, There's an A.'"

Many of the sororities also have good study programs by checking up on grades throughout the semester, and especially by rewarding girls with good study habits or high GPA's. They are often given awards, scholarships, great recognition, and special privileges for their hard work. All

In all, the Greeks are working hard on their scholarship programs, but just like everything else, there is always need for improvement, and who knows, this may be the semester they rise above the All Campus average. Good luck!

As for the community service side of Greeks, Phi Mu recently visited the Northside Center where they tutor children around six years of age in the Child's After school Enrichment Program.

Alpha Xi Delta has been going to Crossroads every Tuesday and Thursday to help the kids there with their schoolwork and other projects as well.

Kappa Sigma will be sponsoring a community service project entitled "Designated Driver," to be held on Tuesday, February 23rd, in the suite service building on campus. The presentation will begin at 7:30 pm and should last no more than one hour. The purpose of the event is to show the importance of having a designated driver in situations where driving and alcohol are involved.

Schweitzer

a famous person. It was then that Shinn remembered the inspiration of one of his Duke professors who had a great admiration for Schweitzer. With Schweitzer's 100th birthday coming up in 1975, efforts were underway in 1972 to plan the event.

During the planning stages the North Carolina Educational, Historical and Scientific Foundation, Inc. helped to raise money to fund the awards. Also, a board was formed that suggested people around the world to nominate potential international prize winners.

The tradition remains that this international committee sends nominations, unknown to the board, to Edinburgh University in Edinburgh, Scotland where they are reviewed by a secret council.

"It's all done out of the country," said Shinn, "so it is truly international. We don't want to have Americans nominating Americans. Nothing against Americans, but if they receive the prize, I don't want it to be because they live here, but because they deserve it."

This event, building UNCW's international tradition, in turn gives UNCW a cutting edge, thus enhancing all areas which Shinn and Dempsey initially felt needed growth.

"We want a great number of men and women to come to this campus so that students have great models to live by," Shinn said.

Shinn reported that in 1975 Billy Hammond, a UNCW student, was able to meet and work with medical prize winner Dr. Theodore Binder, and later received recommendations from him when he applied to medical schools. Hammond was the second UNCW student ever to be accepted into Chapel Hill's medical school.

"The individuals," explained Shinn, "are contacts that students can move around the world with."

Shinn stated that they have tried to model the Albert Schweitzer International Prizes after the Nobel Prize tradition. But, he stated, they cannot financially compare.

Each prize winner receives a bronze medal and $7500. Shinn expressed the wish that someone would endow the awards, as extensive time is dedicated to raising funds through donations.

During the event filled week for the Albert Schweitzer International Prizes, time will be set aside during which students will have the opportunity to talk with the prize winners.

Events will begin on Monday March 14, and will include a reception to open the Schweitzer Memorabilia Exhibit, piano and organ concerts, lectures, a play, and the prize ceremony and reception. All events will be free and open to the public.

Freshmen Visiting

From UNCW News

Between 1200-1500 prospective students and their parents are expected to attend visitation day at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington from 1 - 5 PM, Saturday, in Trask Coliseum.

The annual event gives students and their parents the opportunity to tour the campus and residence halls. In addition, visitors will be informed about UNCW courses and programs, as well as admission and financial aid requirements. Information concerning student organizations and other student activities will also be presented. Ample time will be provided for visitors to talk with UNCW students and faculty.

Sessions will also be conducted exclusively for parents, incoming freshman, and transfer students. The students and their parents will be encouraged to attend the numerous activities that will be taking place that day.

Among the scheduled events is UNCW's homecoming game against William and Mary. A baseball game, and a track and field competition are also scheduled.

Diane Zeeman, director of admissions, said visitation day is important because it gives students the chance to decide "if the University of North Carolina at Wilmington is right for them."

To date, 5,620 students have applied for the 1993 freshman class and 3,271 have been accepted.
